I have no personal complaint or criticism to make of the Bureau of Forestry, as I personally—and I believe my constituents—have been always treated by the department in a fair and businesslike manner, and the average stockman is likewise satisfied in the way permits have been issued for the grazing of bands of sheep and cattle.

As far as the timber is concerned, we believe that in time it will become the most valuable asset within the national forests, and from that item alone will come sufficient revenue to make the forests self-supporting. We are all in favor of the Government disposition of the timber within the forests at the best obtainable figure, and in that line good and efficient service is being performed by the bureau, as far as we know. The timber should be taken care of, the matured product sold, and the logged-off land sold or homesteaded as rapidly as possible.

The revenues derived from grazing stock within the national forests is the main source of revenue to-day, at least in my State; we pay our fees cheerfully and abide by all the rulings thereunder.

I note with a great deal of satisfaction that during the last five years considerable land formerly embraced within the boundaries of the forests has been eliminated and restored to the public domain; we believe that this is a step in the right direction and should be followed up with as many more eliminations as possible, so that these lands can be filed upon under the homestead laws and become taxable property.

I am very much impressed by what our honored Speaker said in his remarks about sending three men to Germany, Canada, or any other place where a perfect system of forest service could be studied, and then have the best of these methods introduced in the United States for the benefit of our country and our people.

I was also much impressed by what was said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] on the subject of waste lands and the cost of administering them. What financial benefit can either the Government of the United States or her citizens get by having lands within the forest reserve which has not a stick of merchantable timber upon it, when hundreds of good farmers would be glad to settle on such land, till the soil, make a good living, and bring in a revenue to their State in the way of taxes. We have many thousands of acres in my State in just such a condition, and it is to be hoped that some method, rule, or regulation may be adopted by the Forest Department by which such lands that have only scrub oak, small piñon, and other such scrub brush may be utilized by the farmer, and not called "forest," when in a thousand years you could not cut a single board that would cover a man's body.

The item in the bill now under consideration of $100,000 for the purpose of listing, surveying, and segregating lands that could be used for agriculture within the national forests is another step in the right direction, which we hope will materially assist in correcting the many defects in the administration of the forest-homestead act, which, as I have already stated, has not, in my opinion, been administered so as to encourage settlers within these forests, although that was the purpose of said act; but said law has been left entirely discretionary with the Bureau of Forestry; but common sense and good reason should dictate to them that no man can very well afford to take up 23, 28, 35, or 77 acres of such land, when it is hard enough to make a living on 160 or even 320 acres of better land in New Mexico. I would have offered another amendment, or at least suggested one, to the committee in charge of the bill at this time, but a step at a time in the right direction is enough, and at some future day I shall offer such amendments as my people may deem necessary, so as to give the home seeker an opportunity to make a living.

My proposed amendment would have read as follows:

That the act of June 11, 1906, be amended so as to read that a homesteader could file on any land within the national forest containing any certain number of feet not to exceed 50,000, and that said timber should be reserved to the Government except so much thereof, as the homesteader would need to build his house and barn on the land, the remainder to remain under the jurisdiction of the department, and to be taken care of by the claimant or owner of the land.

There is such reservations now in the classified coal-land law, and I do not see why the same could not be applicable to timberlands.

Now, I would like to say a few words in regard to the distribution of vegetable, flower, and valuable forage seeds.

In my State we have as many farmers, and good farmers, as any State with approximately as many people as we have, besides our many thousands of children, and these children have done much toward beautifying our cities and our country homes by planting and caring for their gardens, besides the fact that very many of them will become good farmers, which is the crying need of our country. I have sent out this year my full allotment of vegetable, flower, and forage seeds and could have used at least 5,000 packages more, for there is hardly a day passes but what I receive requests from my farmer and city constituents for different kinds of seeds.

I have listened to the remarks of several gentlemen who are in favor of cutting out the seed appropriation, and I want to say to them that to take away from the people, and especially the children the innocent pleasure and farming education by the planting and beautifying of their homes, and the supplying their needs for the home would be a crying shame, and I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] when he says that there are many other things that could be given up than the satisfaction in knowing that the seeds furnished by our Government are giving pleasure and relief for hundreds of thousands of our people throughout the United States.

In this regard I would like to state that we do not receive sufficient forage crop seeds that are practically new to most of us, such as Sudan Grass, Feterita, Hegari, and Dwarf Milo. I have not only used many more than my own quota, but have applied for several hundred packages additional, and have now on my desk a large number of applications for such seed and am unable to supply them to my constituents.

These seeds are given out by the Government for the purpose of testing them in different sections throughout the country, and it behooves us to help our people and encourage them in the planting of such forage crops, so that our country may in time be known as one of the great forage-crop countries of the world.

It may be that in the large cities such crops could not and would not be of any great advantage, but in the great West and Middle West this is what we need, and the man who is against the plan of helping our people in our farming districts is not a good friend of the farmer. We have too many people now who are occupied in mercantile and other pursuits, but our farming communities are short of farmers, and this should be encouraged so as to make the farmer self-sustaining and a pride to his community and the country at large.

I entirely agree with the remarks made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN] in this regard, and the Government can not do better, in my humble opinion, than to keep up the good work in the distribution of seeds of every character, and especially of forage crops.

I have never had any seeds returned from my district, never had any complaint, except from those who have not received any, and they clamor to send them seeds of all kinds, especially forage seeds.

There are, I might say, thousands of newcomers in my State, most of them from Ohio, Illinois, Nebraska, Oklahoma, and Kansas, who are very desirous of trying in their new homes the best forage seeds that they think would be adaptable to the soil of New Mexico.

I do not believe that there ought to be a single dissenting vote on this item of seeds.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. If the Chair has any doubt about it, I will withdraw the point of order and ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina withdraws the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HERNANDEZ) there were—ayes 30, noes 31.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fighting and preventing forest fires and for other unforeseen emergencies, $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, particularly for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to some matters in reference to the Madison station. I have brought up two letters out of a good many that I have received on this subject. I do not know whether they have been written to Members generally, but probably not. They are Chicago letters. I shall not read the whole of them, but I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by printing the whole in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

CHICAGO MILL & LUMBER CO.,
Chicago, February 29, 1916.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Illinois ranks third among the States as a producer of wooden boxes used in shipping. Chicago alone has about 20 factories, and the remainder of the State probably has as many more.

We therefore make bold to address you with reference to the amendment proposed by Mr. RANSDELL to the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

It is from this appropriation that the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., secures its funds.

The writer has recently visited the laboratory there, as have a great many of the leading manufacturers of packages in the West; in fact, we have had some meetings in the laboratory. We are all intensely interested in the development of box specifications, the testing work for which is being done at that laboratory for the National Association of Box Manufacturers, which association is the only body representing nationally the 1,000 package manufacturers in the country, who do an annual business of probably $300,000,000.

We should like to see a larger appropriation for this laboratory, which, we understand, can be secured through the amendment proposed by Mr. RANSDELL, for we know that the work at the laboratory is hampered for lack of funds.

One of the purposes of the tests being made at the laboratory is to lead those in possession of our timber facilities into a better understanding of how they may conserve the forests by putting into packages sufficient but still not more material than is actually needed to carry the load.

Your cooperation in this matter will greatly oblige us.

Yours, very truly,

C. FRED YEGGE, Vice President.

THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BOX MANUFACTURERS,
Chicago, Ill., March 6, 1916.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The National Association of Box Manufacturers represents the makers of wooden shipping containers throughout the United States. These manufacturers consume approximately 15 per cent of the total lumber production of the country annually.

The manufacturers referred to are vitally interested in the work which has been carried on for some months by the Forest Products Laboratory, at Madison, Wis., which laboratory is under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture. This laboratory conducts experiments as to the relative strengths of the various kinds of packages in which the output of the factories of the United States is shipped, and very valuable work has been done in developing the relative strengths of the various woods used in the making of shipping containers. The members of the National Association of Box Manufacturers have from time to time furnished the laboratory with boxes constructed of representative woods produced in the various parts of the United States on which to conduct their experiments.

The progress of the work so far has conclusively shown that great conservation in the forest product of the United States can be made by more scientific construction and the reduction of the thickness of materials used in the manufacture of wooden containers, which, as we have said, consume some 15 per cent annually of the total lumber production of the country.

As some of the largest wooden-box manufacturers in the United States are located in Chicago, I am taking the liberty of addressing you with reference to the amendment by Senator RANSDELL to the bill making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917. It is from this appropriation that the above laboratory secures its working funds. We are vitally interested in a sufficiently large appropriation being made to enable the laboratory to continue this valuable work, and at the annual convention of the National Association of Box Manufacturers, held in Chicago on February 1, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That this association petition the Members of Congress and the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture to arrange a sufficient appropriation annually to the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis., to enable them to carry to a conclusion the work of testing all materials used in boxes or shipping-container construction, the different types of construction, etc., which this association believes would be of great benefit to the country and also to forest conservation."

Respectfully, F. C. GIFFORD, Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I have watched the Madison laboratory for a good many years. I do not know whether I helped start it or whether I only helped to enlarge it. I know that I did one or the other in connection with the investigations relating to wood that might be used for paper. I understand they have extended their scope and are doing other work along various lines. It is a pleasure, in view of all that has been said on the floor recently about the Forestry Service, to present something distinctly praiseworthy in the work that they are doing.

I do not know what the Ransdell amendment is. Of course, it is an amendment in the Senate and not in the House. I asked the gentleman from South Carolina a little while ago, privately, what the reason was for the reduction in the appropriation carried in this item, and he said that it was a transfer, that there was no actual reduction. I do not know whether there ought to be much of an increase or not, but I do know that the paper manufacturers throughout the country have repeatedly told me that this laboratory at Madison was doing a work of great value to them. I am glad to know that the box manufacturers who use 15 per cent of the lumber say that the work is of great value to them in showing and telling them how they can make boxes out of less wood than they would have used without the result of the work at Madison. I think it is a very interesting work.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I have just read an article in the evening paper, as follows:

Charging that "the most formidable and best organized lobby" in the history of the conservation movement is at work in Washington, Gifford Pinchot, former Chief of the United States Forestry Service, in an address at the annual banquet of the National Academy of Sciences last night declared that conservationists must do everything in their power to defeat the lobby.

I want to ask the gentleman from South Carolina if he has any knowledge of that lobby referred to.

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely I have not. I have not seen Mr. Pinchot for several years, and I have not seen anybody else that has the earmarks of a lobbyist.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It says it is the most formidable and the best organized lobby in history.

Mr. LEVER. I am not acquainted with that situation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

For the purchase and maintenance of necessary field, office, and laboratory supplies, instruments, and equipments, $150,400.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has been considerable said about the great cost of the Forest Service, and a number of gentlemen have expressed the hope that the service would soon be placed on a paying basis. The Speaker, who always lends interest to any subject which he discusses, suggested that we might profitably study the methods of the German Empire with the view of making our forest reserves pay. There are very good reasons, some of which I pointed out earlier in the day, why our Forestry Service does not pay now. The principal reason is that we have taken under the Federal wing for the benefit of coming generations great areas of forest land for the products of which there is no immediate market. We are conserving these great values, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, with a view of caring for future generations.

When we start out on an enterprise of that kind we may expect to spend some money without immediate returns. We can not hope to have immediate large returns, but eventually the returns will pay the running expenses, in my opinion, and without burdening the people in the regions in which the reserves are located. I do not mean to say that I think any special effort should be made to make the reserves pay. I think they should be conducted in the public interest, without any special effort to make them pay, certainly no effort to make them pay by burdening the people locally; but I think they will eventually be made to pay.

I want to say just a word with regard to the suggestion of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], the Speaker of the House, that it might be well for us to send a commission to Germany to study German forestry methods. They have made their forest reserves pay. While I generally agree with the Speaker on matters that are not political, I can not agree with him on this matter. We had a little too much of German methods in Forestry Service a number of years ago. We had a gentleman at the head of the service who meant well and who knew a great deal about forestry and forests, who had the idea that we could put into operation here in our country German methods. German forestry methods, no matter how good they may be for Germany, are no more adapted to our country than German military methods are adapted to our country, and our people would no more tolerate German forestry methods than they would tolerate German military methods.

Mr. BORLAND. Is the gentleman quite accurate about that? Is not the question of forestry methods one of science? It is not a question of methods, like military methods.

Mr. MONDELL. The German methods of caring for the forests are, in a measure, military, and include police control, and while with them the primary purpose is, no doubt, to preserve the forests for the use of the people, yet in doing that they feel that they must make the forests pay, and they make them pay, even though their maintenance is burdensome upon the people of the locality. Our conditions are not German conditions. Our forests do not lie, as the forests of Germany do, in thickly populated sections, surrounded by great cities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we have much to learn from the Germans with regard to the care of forests, more than we have already learned from them. We have learned many things from that great people relative to forests and forest care and forest preservation, as we have in other lines, but I think we have reached a point where we are developing an excellent American system. It still has its faults of administration, it still has its duplications of service, it is still, I am inclined to think, unnecessarily expensive in certain directions, but we are developing an American service along American lines fitted to American conditions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I am sorry that I can not yield. I only have five minutes and I want to follow this thought. With regard to this matter of making the forests pay, let me make this suggestion: One reason why our forests have not paid is that we have not improved them so as to make them generally available and usable. Mr. Pinchot, quite a number of years ago, asked for $5,000,000 as a capital fund for the purpose of making the forests accessible and usable by road construction and in other ways. I believe it would have been a wise expenditure of public money, and I think that that road bill which the committee is going to report will be a wise step in the direction of making the forests pay. The forests do not pay now partly because they are not accessible; we can not get at them and their products. It is difficult to reach their resources, and we can afford to spend a considerable sum of money as a capital investment to make these great resources available and available quickly.

Mr. TILSON. Would the gentleman build railroads into the forests?

Mr. MONDELL. No; unless the Government was going to do lumbering. I do not think that would be wise.

Mr. TILSON. Would the ordinary wagon road really make them accessible commercially?

Mr. MONDELL. It would make them much more accessible and usable commercially, and in many ways which I have not the time now to explain, but which are understood by those who are familiar with the reserves.

Now, it was suggested by the gentleman from Iowa that we should have a commission to study the forestry question. Well, I am of the opinion that we do not need a domestic commission any more than we need a foreign commission. I think the committee has gotten along very well in taking care of the Forestry Service. I think the committee might with profit examine a little more thoroughly than it does the question of the duplication of work and unnecessary expenditure, for instance, in connection with district offices, and perhaps here in Washington. I think the Committee on Agriculture can work this problem out without the aid of any commission for a domestic or a foreign investigation. On the other hand, expenditures in the way of capital investment that will make the resources of the forests available for use will help along on the road toward a self-supporting forestry system. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of methods for wood distillation and for the preservative treatment of timber, for timber testing, and the testing of such woods as may require test to ascertain if they be suitable for making paper, for investigations and tests within the United States of foreign woods of commercial importance to industries in the United States, and for other investigations and experiments to promote economy in the use of forest products, $135,200.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from South Carolina is this the paragraph to which Senator RANSDELL offered an amendment to increase the amount?

Mr. LEVER. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. The reason why I ask the gentleman is that I have had a good many letters about this paragraph from certain people in my section of the State who are interested in it and who are under the impression that Senator RANSDELL by his amendment sought to erect another such plant as I believe is located at Madison, Wis. His amendment does not go that far?

Mr. LEVER. I have not read his amendment, and only know about it from newspaper accounts; but my impression is that the amendment he offered was to increase the amount of the appropriation $75,000 with a view to establishing a plant at New Orleans similar to the one now located at Madison, Wis., the appropriation for which is carried by this item.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman how much that plant at Madison cost?

Mr. LEVER. The plant was established long before I became a member of the committee and I do not know its cost. For its maintenance and care under this item we appropriate $135,200.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That plant was supplied by the State without expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. LEVER. We have no memorandum of its cost.

Mr. BROWNE. The State of Wisconsin appropriated $50,000 to furnish the building and the housing and to help install the machinery and everything in the forest products laboratory at Madison. That was done, I think, in 1910 or 1912, when the legislature appropriated that amount of money.

Mr. LEVER. As I recall, this work is being done in cooperation with the University of Wisconsin.

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. Do I understand this whole appropriation goes for the work in connection with that particular plant?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; to this particular plant.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that all the money that the department stated is required for this work?

Mr. LEVER. We gave the estimates exactly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this a new item?

Mr. LEVER. No; this item has been in the bill for some years.

Mr. HARRISON. This, Mr. Chairman, appears to me to be a very important matter. In reading the hearings it seems to me they are doing great work. I know that in my section, which is quite a timber section, and where there are large sawmills, where up until two or three years ago we had no paper mills, and where formerly the refuse and slabs were burned or thrown away, the sawmills now utilize them in the manufacture of paper, and it seems to me that this plant——

Mr. LEVER. And wood alcohol.

Mr. HARRISON. They are not manufacturing wood alcohol at that point, yet I understand they are doing it in some instances, so I was very anxious to see just the amount of appropriation that is needed for this work be appropriated, because I think it is very important.

As I understand, they get these woods and experiment in them, not only from the territory adjacent to Madison, Wis., but they get them from the West and the South and the East, from all over the country?

Mr. LEVER. That is true.

Mr. HARRISON. And even from foreign countries. I am very much interested and in favor of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask to close debate on this in five minutes?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes. I move to strike out the last two words. I am somewhat familiar with the workings of the forest part of the laboratory at Madison. Since it was established they have made some 125,000 timber tests, and they are consulted by every woodworking establishment throughout the United States of any size. They are consulted by cities in regard to paving blocks and in regard to wood preservatives. They have made many experiments in regard to preserving wood.

Mr. BORLAND. As I undertsand it, the work they do is not local to the immediate latitude of Wisconsin, but it takes in the wood from all over the United States?

Mr. BROWNE. All over the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. So that the result of the work done there at the Madison laboratory is available all over the United States?

Mr. BROWNE. All over the United States.

Mr. BORLAND. It would not serve any good purpose to have other laboratories in other sections of the country?

Mr. BROWNE. I do not think so. This one is accessible for the country.

The gentleman from Mississippi spoke about the experiments they were making as to alcohol. This is not wood alcohol. They are manufacturing a vegetable alcohol out of the by-products of sawmills. For instance, they are taking, simply, sawdust—and their experiments are not in the experimental stage now, but the process is practically perfected—and they have shown in this laboratory that they can make 20 gallons of vegetable alcohol from 1 ton of sawdust. Wood alcohol is manufactured by the decomposition of wood. Vegetable alcohol is manufactured by the grinding up of wood and the application of certain chemicals which bring down the starch and thus produces a vegetable alcohol, the same as we get from potatoes and corn. They claim that they can manufacture it at from 15 to 20 cents a gallon.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the gentleman how they get these woods that they want to test in this laboratory? Do they send men to the forest sections, or must the particular industry interested in it or the person interested in certain woods take it up with this laboratory?

Mr. BROWNE. It is generally done by manufacturers and lumbermen sending timber right there.

Mr. HARRISON. And they do not send men out to investigate it?

Mr. BROWNE. They do to some extent, but most of it is sent there, and the railroad companies in a good many instances carry it free for the experiment.

Mr. HARRISON. And I understand they issue bulletins, too, along this line?

Mr. BROWNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HICKS. May I ask the gentleman whether or not they make any charge for this?

Mr. BROWNE. They make no charge whatever. For instance, take the question of wood preservatives and wood stains. Some of these wood stains and preservatives sell for 50 to 75 cents a gallon. This forest laboratory has shown that just as good preservatives can be made for 15 cents a gallon. They made a test on the yellow pine. They had thought for years that by tapping pine for turpentine they spoiled the wood for commercial use by weakening it. They made the test at the laboratory and found that it did not injure the wood at all, and are using this wood right along for commercial purposes.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say to the gentleman that they are using the yellow pine now for paving blocks after it is creosoted, and I presume that they got that from that test that was made at Madison, Wis.

Mr. BROWNE. That is a fact. They test for packing boxes of various shapes, resulting in a revision of the specifications of the Interstate Commerce Commission for boxes used in the shipping of explosives. The railroads of the United States paid $40,000,000 in one year for claims for goods that were lost in transit. A large amount of this was because of the design in boxes, and by improving the design they diminish the loss. As to the strength of wood in using wood for paper purposes, they found out that hemlock and other woods that formerly were thought not to be fit for making paper could, by applying what is known as the sulphide process, be manufactured into paper, and they are manufacturing paper from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain in that time what is being done in the way of relieving the stringency in the paper market through the experiments that have been conducted at that point?

Mr. BROWNE. They are establishing the fact that woods like hemlock and other woods—the tamarack, I think—can be utilized in making the quality of paper used for newspapers and wrappers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We are depending largely for our supply of spruce and paper woods on Canada just now, but the conditions there are not very favorable, and I was wondering whether anything was being done here to Americanize that situation.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the gentleman that they are making paper now out of yellow pine in the South.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Through experiments recently conducted?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. In my district there is a concern that is capitalized at $2,000,000 which is making that paper.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As the gentleman knows, that is a very important problem just now.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the shortage in paper in the main is in the higher grades of paper. They use spruce and hemlock and some tamarack for making wood pulp from which print paper is made, and they have done it for many years, although they have done some good work at the Madison Laboratory in connection with those things. I do not know, but I suspect that if they are making paper out of yellow pine in the South, it is by the sulphite process.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN. It is not a very pleasing process to the nostrils, but out of it they make a very strong light-weight wrapping paper, the best wrapping paper in the world.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina, if I may, whether any of these box manufacturers took the trouble to appear before the Committee on Agriculture with reference to this item?

Mr. LEVER. I do not think they did.

Mr. MANN. Then they can not criticize too much if they do not get what they want.

Mr. LEVER. There is an interesting statement here on the subject of paper making at Madison, which I think would interest the House. I read:

Tests have shown that pulps of commercial values and suitable for use in the manufacture of news and wrapping paper can be made by the sulphite process from 10 species of native woods, several of which grow in large quantities in the national forests. Some of these woods are now used to a limited extent, others not at all. Mills have started to use Sitka spruce, western hemlock, Engelmann spruce, red fir, white fir, and lodgepole pine. Other species are under investigation.

Tests on 23 species, of which large quantities are available in the United States, have demonstrated that practically all of them have immediate promise as substitutes for spruce in the manufacture of the cheaper grades of papers, such as news, manilas, box board, etc. Newsprint manufactured from these woods was successfully used by the St. Louis Republic and the New York Herald in printing one of their current editions. Nearly all of these were also tested as to their adaptability to the steaming or boiling treatment before grinding. One mill recently erected has been largely guided by the results of these tests, and a large mill in Wisconsin is now operating on eastern hemlock where spruce was formerly used.

So that I take it from that that they must be making some real progress with their paper work.

Mr. MANN. Well, they are not making much progress, so far as that is concerned, because it is a process of grinding, and you can mix hemlock and tamarack and some other things with spruce wood, but the spruce wood grinds off on a coarse grindstone so that it comes with enough fiber to it to hang together. The paper has to hang together when it is wet. When the paper is made it comes off in a wet sheet, wringing wet, practically. They press the water out as much as they can, but it goes on the roller wet. A powder will not hang together; a flour or powder will not hang together at all. The spruce wood ground up does have some fiber. Very few of these other woods have sufficient fiber, or else they have too much fiber, and that will not make a smooth paper. With all of those they usually mix some sulphite pulp, and it all hangs together. But they have done good service up there.

Mr. BROWNE. It is stated that one mill was recently established in Wisconsin that uses hemlock where they used spruce before. I presume the hemlock is promising.

Mr. MANN. They always did use hemlock, but they must use with it some sulphite pulp. The sulphite pulp is more expensive than the spruce or hemlock. I think the gentleman from Wisconsin said something a moment ago about making alcohol out of wood, so that it is drinkable.

Mr. BROWNE. It is a vegetable alcohol.

Mr. MANN. Of course, it is.

Mr. BROWNE. I am not expert enough to know whether it is palatable or not.

Mr. MANN. They have made it, or claimed to have made it. I think they have not advertised it much, because my recollection is that they do not pay any tax on it. Grain alcohol, 100 proof, is taxed $1.15 a gallon, I believe. But some years ago they claimed they had discovered a process for making potable alcohol from wood. I meant to look it up at that time. I made some inquiry about it. I found that there was no tax on it. They could afford to make alcohol by that process, if it cost them a dollar a gallon, if there was no tax on it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experiments and investigations of range conditions within national forests or elsewhere on the public range, and of methods for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other means, $30,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania:
Page 40, line 24, after the figures "$30,000," insert the following: "Provided, That such experiments and investigations shall include the assembling and distribution of information to encourage the development of the sheep industry in and about the forests of the United States."

Mr. LEVER. I reserve a point of order on that amendment. I wonder if the gentleman will agree to a limitation of time for debate on this amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was hoping the gentleman would accept this amendment. It does not involve any change in the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true, but we are spending a good deal of money in another bureau to do just exactly what the gentleman proposes to do by this amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not as to the sheep industry itself.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not specifically?

Mr. LEVER. Not specifically; but the Bureau of Animal Industry is doing a great deal in that line.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania sure that he wishes to promote the production of sheep and not the elimination of mosquitoes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am quite sure. I want to eliminate the mosquito, but I want also to encourage the sheep.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The range is taken care of with the idea of increasing the quantity and quality of the grass upon which the sheep will feed, and very satisfactory results are being reached.

Mr. LEVER. Under this very item, too.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Under this very item. They are doing the very thing that the gentleman would have done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What I am asking in this amendment is that there be a specific direction to the bureau to inquire into the proper grazing places and to give information to those who may be encouraged to develop the sheep industry and to engage in that business.

Mr. LEVER. That is just what they are trying to do under this item.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman know that sheep are higher now than they have been for many years?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the reason I would like to have the farmers of the country take a greater interest in the raising of sheep. They would profit by it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman know that wool is about two and a half times as high at it was; and is not that the kind of encouragement that men need in this industry?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Wool is high——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And mutton is high.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And mutton is high——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. And sheep are high.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And sheep are high, because it is impossible just now to do business with foreign countries; and we have the finest opportunity in the world to turn the attention of the American farmer to a profitable industry right now, if we will tell him what some farmers do not know, that there is a fine market for wool and a fine market for mutton. It may appeal as strongly to the farmer as it does to the man in the city that just now we are paying very high prices for what we have to eat, and we are paying fairly good prices for what we have to wear, and the sheep enters very largely into that problem.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman know that one reason for the increase in the price of sheep is because the Republican orators told the country that the wool industry was going to be ruined by free wool, and so they sold off their flocks of sheep, and now there is a scarcity of them?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not know as to that. The American farmer knows what was true, and he also knows that the present higher price is due to the war.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not start a tariff discussion here.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that I am proceeding in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order is that we do not want to open up a tariff discussion, and that this discussion is not confined to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have confined all I have said to the amendment. The gentleman complains about a tariff discussion. That was begun on the gentleman's own side.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had not even mentioned the tariff.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I raised no question as to the tariff. I am willing to do it, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] ought to apply his lecture to the gentlemen on his own side of the House who raised the question.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care who raised it. It is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have proceeded in order.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a right to proceed.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has been talking about the situation in his home town and is not talking to his amendment. I make the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman can make the point of order, but he ought to be in the House when the discussion is going on——

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Illinois is on the floor more days and more hours than is the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman comes in and gets restless at this late hour of the day.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is out of order and the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MANN. The time expired by my colleague using the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an amendment pending.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I move to strike out the last word in my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that a Member can not offer an amendment, talk five minutes upon it, and then offer an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. MANN. Not if some one else is asking for the floor.

Mr. LEVER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. A point of order was reserved against the gentleman's amendment. Is it competent for him to offer an amendment pending the decision of the Chair?

Mr. MANN. No; of course it is not.

Mr. LEVER. I am not opposed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding for five minutes. The gentleman and I can get along very well together.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; we would if it had not been for the interference of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSTER. The "gentleman from Illinois" will interfere whenever he thinks it best.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina insist on his point of order?

Mr. LEVER. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss that. I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this paragraph provides for experiments and investigations of range conditions within national forests or elsewhere on the public domain, and for methods of improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other means. My amendment conforms to the language of the paragraph. It is wholly germane to the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that this item in the bill provides for experiments and investigations of range conditions within national forests and for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and so forth. The gentleman's amendment is, as I caught from the reading, to encourage the sheep industry and study the sheep industry and give out information about the sheep industry, which is not in line with the work under that item at all, but is carried in the Bureau of Animal Industry. This is to study the range itself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman understand that grazing would apply to sheep as well as to cattle?

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly, but this is to study range conditions, and the gentleman's proposition is for the study of the sheep industry, with a view of developing it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it relates to experiments and investigations in reseeding, the regulation of grazing, and so forth.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman might have that in mind, but the amendment does not say so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I was very careful to follow the language of the paragraph.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is clearly in order under this line of decisions. For instance, to use the old illustration, if a bill is under consideration for the admission of one Territory as a State, it is not in order to introduce an amendment authorizing the admission of another Territory as a State, but if the original bill proposes to admit two or more States then the admission of another State may be included in an amendment.

This particular paragraph is divided into at least two parts. In line 21 it is for the experiment and investigation of range conditions; then, in line 23, the methods for improving the range by reseeding, regulation of grazing, and other means. There are at least four different methods proposed in connection with the appropriation. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply proposes to make a fifth, for which a part of this $30,000 may be expended. The amendment is certainly germane to the paragraph under discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] has divided the paragraph properly; but the Chair is impressed that the method provided for in the paragraph for improving the range is by reseeding, regulation of the grazing, and by other means. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is as follows:

Provided such experiments and investigations shall include the assembling and distribution of information to encourage the development of the sheep industry in and about the forests of the different States.

It seems to the Chair that this introduces an entirely new feature, and would be foreign to the work provided for in this paragraph, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may we close debate on this in five minutes?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I had no thought of introducing the tariff into this discussion by offering this amendment; but I did have a serious purpose, and one which, I think, should commend itself to all sections of the country. There is a great demand for wool at the present time, and we have not in America sufficient sheep to supply a clip to meet the demand. There is a demand for more mutton in this country, and the price of mutton has gone up exceedingly.

If the gentleman thinks that I am discussing the tariff when I refer to the fact that the people of the country to-day have to pay more for their meat and more for their clothing than heretofore, he is welcome to put that interpretation upon it. The fact is that the cost of living has gone up, and under such conditions it is important to bring to the attention of the farmers of the country the necessities of their best customers in the city. We need the wool in the large centers of population. We need it to fabricate into garments to be worn by the people. We need the meat; but while we need these things, the supply of sheep is constantly decreasing in the United States, and we are prevented from invading the foreign market by reason of war conditions. I would like to ask what harm can be done by a simple amendment suggesting to a department to which we are appropriating $24,000,000—$5,500,000 of which is to go into forestry alone—what harm can be done in directing that a proportion of a $30,000 appropriation for improving grazing lands in forests be applied to obtaining and distributing information that will encourage the farmer to improve his own opportunities by increasing the sheep supply in the country?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. Is it the gentleman's contention that under Democratic administration the price of wool is so high as to increase the cost of clothing unreasonably?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman want to go into a tariff discussion and invite the criticism of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not speaking to his amendment.

Mr. KEATING. I would be perfectly willing to enter into a discussion of the tariff with the gentleman, on the subject of wool.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Oh, I am willing to enter into a discussion of it, but not now. We have not sheep enough now in the United States to supply the demand for wool or mutton.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made his explanation that he does not want to enter into a tariff discussion, and he is not discussing the amendment, but is discussing an amendment which has already been ruled out.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The discussion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not germane to his amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the question——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] might have gotten through with his remarks before we rose.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman from South Carolina for that statement. He has been very generous with me; but I shall reserve what I have to say for another occasion. [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to reserve his point of order for a moment.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order for the moment.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present——

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. Friday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum present; evidently there is not.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 1294. An act to amend section 81 of the act entitled, "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911;

S. 4480. An act providing for the establishment of two additional terms of the district court for the eastern district of North Carolina, at Raleigh, N. C.; and

S. 3560. An act to validate a certain title whereon the purchase money has been paid on a private sale by order of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania, at No. 83, June term, 1910, sitting in bankruptcy.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, April 20, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, a bill and a resolution were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MCKELLAR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents, saddles, and bridles for the use of the national encampment, Knights of Pythias, to be held at Nashville, Tenn., in August, 1916, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 574), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13984) granting to the city of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, a right of way through the United States military reservation at Fort Mifflin, Pa., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 575), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14688) granting a pension to Daniel O'Brien; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we lift our hearts to Thee that we may know the orderly will of God and way that Thou dost deal with us as a Nation. Thou has taught us that the pure in heart shall see God. In the midst of unanswered questions, unsolved problems, unmeasured forces; in the midst of the limitations of human life, we come to Thee. We pray that we may have the discernment of the Divine will, that we may be sure we are at peace with God; and out of communion with Thee may we learn the way of life and be found ready to stand by that which Thou dost reveal of Thy will for us as a Nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADSWORTH presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Ashwood, N. Y., remonstrating against the proposed creation of a juvenile court in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAGGART presented a petition of the Indiana State Dairy Association, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide that oleomargarine shall be made without milk and its products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. OLIVER (for Mr. PENROSE) presented a petition of Sergeant Hamilton Fish Post, No. 20, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to grant pensions to widows and orphans of veterans of the Spanish-American War, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 5, American Brotherhood of Cement Workers, of San Jose, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ASHURST. I present resolutions adopted at the Progressive State convention for Arizona, favoring the adoption of the Susan B. Anthony woman-suffrage amendment to the Constitution. I ask that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That we, the Progressive State convention for Arizona, meeting this 8th day of April, 1916, in Bisbee, for the purpose of naming delegates to the Progressive national convention, do hereby most heartily indorse the Susan B. Anthony amendment, known in this Congress as the Sutherland-Mondell amendment, and earnestly urge Congress to pass forthwith on to the States for ratification this amendment enfranchising all the women of the country. We do this because the Progressive Party has always stood for woman suffrage and because we believe that the unjust discrimination now existing between the women of the East and the women of the West should be speedily removed and all women enjoy the same privileges and protection under the National Constitution.

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States; the Speaker of the House of Representatives; Senator THOMAS, chairman of the Woman Suffrage Committee in the Senate; E. Y. WEBB, chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives; ANDREW VOLSTEAD, minority leader of the Judiciary Committee of the House; Minority Leader JACOB GALLINGER, of the Senate; Minority Leader JAMES R. MANN, of the House; and to the two Senators and to the Representative from Arizona, with the request that the resolution be read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PAUL E. FERNALD,
Secretary, Box 397, Tucson, Ariz.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1272) for the relief of Thomas Huggins, asked that that committee be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred Senate resolution 41 providing for the adjudication of certain claims by the Court of Claims, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 374) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4368. A bill for the relief of D. A. Barbour and Andrew Gladden (Rept. No. 372);

S. 4866. A bill to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the Commercial Pacific Cable Co. (Rept. No. 371); and

H. R. 6651. An act providing for the payment for certain services arising under the Navy Department (Rept. No. 373).

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 3294) to appropriate a sum of money to pay Rhoda Menz, W. W. Christmas, and James M. Christmas, heirs of Myra Clarke Gaines, for certain lands in Louisiana, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 376) thereon.

LESTER A. ROCKWELL.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1362) for the relief of Lester A. Rockwell, and I submit a report (No. 375) thereon. As a similar bill passed the Senate at the last session of Congress and is again reported by the committee, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. It was delayed partly on my account in reporting it, and it is submitted by the committee twice. As I stated, a similar bill was passed by the Senate at the last session of the last Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear what the bill is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a bill merely changing the record of Lester A. Rockwell so that he may have a pensionable status. It is not of very much importance except to the man. It was favorably considered by the committee and a similar bill was passed in the last Congress.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask the Senator if it is a case of desertion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a case of technical desertion, but upon the merits and equities the committee agreed, like in many other cases of the same sort, that the man should be given a pensionable status.

Mr. SMOOT. Is there any reason why the bill should be passed immediately, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am merely asking for it because I should have made the report some time ago.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have it go to the calendar.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

Mr. SMOOT. Because I should like to have the calendar taken up at the earliest date possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROUSSARD:

A bill (S. 5672) for the relief of sundry building and loan associations; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 5673) to provide for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service of the United States of America, the establishment of a civil-service superannuation and disability pension system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

By Mr. WALSH:

A bill (S. 5674) to reimburse the county of Lewis and Clark, State of Montana, for expenses incurred by it for the construction of a public highway through the Helena National Forest (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 5675) for the relief of John Henry Gibbons, captain on the retired list of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. BURLEIGH:

A bill (S. 5676) granting a pension to Augustus M. Brown; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 5677) for the proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. TAGGART:

A bill (S. 5678) granting a pension to Joseph M. Adams; and

A bill (S. 5679) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Noble; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5680) granting an increase of pension to Emma R. Adams (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions:

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 5681) providing for an increase of salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Connecticut; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OLIVER (for Mr. PENROSE):

A bill (S. 5682) granting a pension to Catharine R. Hutchinson;

A bill (S. 5683) granting a pension to James A. Stine; and

A bill (S. 5684) granting an increase of pension to John Wonderly; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 5685) granting an increase of pension to Robert Hedrick (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TILLMAN:

A bill (S. 5686) authorizing the Secretary of War to make a donation of condemned cannon and cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PROPOSED FEDERAL MOTION PICTURE COMMISSION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce what I understand is a bill which has been agreed upon by the friends who are in favor of the regulation of motion pictures and a large number of the manufacturers of films. I introduce it, however, by request, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

A bill (S. 5671) to create a new division of the Bureau of Education, to be known as the Federal Motion-Picture Commission, for the regulation of motion pictures intended for interstate and foreign commerce, and defining its powers and duties.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALSH submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $6,387.10 to be paid to the county of Lewis and Clark, State of Montana, being one-half of the cost of construction of so much of the Priests Pass Road in that county as passes through the Helena National Forest, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

THE RESTORATION OF PEACE IN EUROPE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I submit a resolution, and ask that it be read:

The resolution (S. Res. 172) was read, as follows:

The Senate of the United States resolves as follows:

The people of the United States, composed for the most part either of natives or the descendants of natives of the warring countries in Europe, have viewed with distress the existing war, involving, as it does, the universal destruction of the fit and courageous and the general impairment of condition. They have observed with satisfaction the recent announcements of the English and German Governments regarding a possible peace.

Whilst the announcement of each Government contains phrases intended to encourage its own people yet having the effect of irritating the opposing peoples, it is observed that each announcement practically involves the restoration of the status quo ante.

It is to be regretted that on each side phrases have been used which were likely to be misunderstood on the other side, such as the demand of England that German militarism should be destroyed, a phrase which means, to the German people, that German nationalism should be destroyed.

Without going into the contentions of the ancient empires which have been inherited by the peoples descended from them, or elaborating upon the modern contentions of existing empires, it is clear that the immediate cause of the existing war was that one of the two Teutonic States, surrounded by hostile Slavs on the one side and hostile Latins on the other, felt that its national life was threatened by the destruction of its Crown Prince through a conspiracy organized in a Slav State, and insisted upon its right to punish this Slav State without foreign intervention, that from this small commencement an almost universal war has arisen, more destructive than any which the world has hitherto witnessed, that, as a result of this war, the Teutonic allies have won on land, whilst the entente allies have won on the sea, and that the result is a deadlock of forces destructive and paralyzing to all.

The Teutonic allies have accomplished the declared purpose of the war—the punishment of Servia. This has been done. It can not be undone. The people of all the warring countries desire peace. Their governments undoubtedly wish to gratify this aspiration, but in a way that will not involve the impairment of national sovereignty and prestige. Each regards this contest as one for national life. Each disclaims the idea of aggression or conquest. The enthusiasm of the war is over. A grim determination upon the part of each to maintain its national life unimpaired, alone animates the courage and steadies the purpose of all.

The rage of the conflict makes diplomatic parley impossible. The governmental announcements of England and Germany indicate a harmony of view as to many things, such as that no indemnity shall be demanded, that Belgium shall be restored as an independent state, that the portion of France recently occupied by Germany shall be restored, that the status of Alsace and Lorraine, settled over 40 years ago by treaty between Germany and France, shall not be disturbed.

Just as England and France demand that they should be secured by buffer States and proper boundaries against Teutonic aggression in the west, Germany demands that she should be secured against Slav aggression in the east. The disposition of Poland therefore becomes important. Might it not be possible by mutual concessions of existing rights by both Teutons and Slavs to reestablish the ancient kingdom of Poland, or at least a part of it, as a sovereign buffer state?

Austria demands security on the south. The Teutonic States, in conjunction with Bulgaria, have destroyed the sovereignty of Servia. May it not be possible to restore that sovereignty or if that is impossible may not Servia's prosperity be made more secure in the future through a modified autonomy established under Austrian sovereignty?

Germany's colonial possessions have been wrested from her. May they not be restored, or, at all events compensated for through some favorable readjustment of her boundaries or sphere of influence in Turkey and Asia Minor?

Russia, locked in by icebound ports, demands access to the southern seas. She has won her way to the Persian Gulf. Why should not this, or free access to the Mediterranean through the Dardanelles, be secured to her?

There remains the question of German militarism and English navalism, the one dominant on land, the other dominant on sea. Why may it not be possible, without irritating phrases, for each of these Governments to state publicly its views, not regarding disarmament, but a gradual reduction of armament on land and sea, and a gradual approach toward the adjustment of international disputes, as domestic disputes are adjusted, through international tribunals, organized and proceeding as do domestic tribunals, according to the orderly forms of law, with power to enforce their decrees? Surely the progress which has been made in the substitution of law and order for violence in the settlement of individual disputes through domestic tribunals created for the purpose, justifies the hope that a similar international evolution will spring from the blood of the heroes whose valor and courage on land and sea, unequaled in the history of the world, have been fruitless of result except deterioration of race and impoverishment of condition.

The Senate of the United States, profoundly impressed by the solemnity of the hour, urges upon the warring nations a calm consideration of these views.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I shall address the Senate on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR HOLLIS (S. DOC. NO. 411).

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed as a public document the address delivered by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] before the Common Counsel Club, of Washington, D. C., April 13, 1916, on the subject of "What the administration is doing for the farmer."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF LOUIS P. BRANDEIS (S. DOC. NO. 409).

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent that 1,000 extra copies of the report of the subcommittee and the hearings in the Brandeis case be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TARIFF ON SUGAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, and further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate still in disagreement between the two Houses on the bill, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS. I submit the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of the Senate amendment to the title strike out the words "manufactures of sugar" and insert in lieu thereof the words "other articles"; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference has been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate to the bill.

F. M. SIMMONS,
W. J. STONE,
H. C. LODGE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CLAUDE KITCHIN,
HENRY T. RAINEY,
J. W. FORDNEY,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the report.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator is not asking a vote on that question now?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I am simply moving the adoption of the report. It is a formal matter, and only disposes of the matters in agreement.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to move—I shall not ask immediate action on the motion—that the Senate recede from its amendment in disagreement to House bill 11471; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday next, at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to vote on the motion I have made to recede from the amendment in disagreement.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will.

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to say to the Senator that I shall oppose the motion to recede, and I think I shall want something like two hours to discuss the question. Of course the Senator is chairman of the committee and chairman of the conferees on the part of the Senate and will to some extent have priority of consideration. In the opinion of the Senator, does his motion allow an opportunity for me to have that much time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to change my motion to a request that we proceed to the consideration of the motion and that we vote at not later than 5 o'clock on Saturday next. I will, then, lay the matter aside and not call it up until Saturday morning, but I will call it up on Saturday at any hour the Senator desires to begin his speech. I do not know of any other Senator who desires to speak on it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I change my motion to a request for unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 11471, and that on Saturday next, at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to vote upon the conference report. We will take it up on Saturday at whatever time suits the convenience of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, do I understand that this is the so-called sugar bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; the Senator is correct. I am asking unanimous consent that we proceed to the consideration of this conference report, and that on Saturday next, April 22, at not later than 5 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to vote upon the conference report.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, we do not have to have unanimous consent for the present consideration of a conference report, but we might have to have unanimous consent to delay proceedings under the conference report until a specified hour of a specified day.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the presentation of a conference report is privileged, but not its consideration.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; it is only the report that is privileged, and not the consideration of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is lost. The Chair thought the conference report had been agreed to.

Mr. HARDWICK. It has been agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Chair thought that, the Chair is right. I move that the Senate recede from its amendment in disagreement with the House.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. Suppose the unanimous consent requested by the Senator should be given. In what position would the conference report then be between now and Saturday?

Mr. SIMMONS. The conference report has been adopted. The only thing pending before the Senate now is the motion I have just made that the Senate recede from its amendment in disagreement.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In what position would that motion be between now and Saturday if unanimous consent is given? In other words, the unfinished business is on the calendar undisturbed, the hour of 2 o'clock not yet having arrived. Supposing that by unanimous consent we now proceed to consider the motion made by the Senator that the Senate recede from its disagreement and agree that not later than 5 o'clock on Saturday we will vote upon it. Where does it stand between now and then; in other words, on to-morrow and Saturday?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it would be the unfinished business between now and then.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not understand whether or not the Senator intended to displace the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not wish, to-day and to-morrow, to interfere with any other legislation, nor do I think that if this motion should prevail I would interfere. To remove all trouble about it, however, I will change the motion so as to move that at 12 o'clock on Saturday next we proceed to the consideration of the motion that the Senate recede from its amendment in disagreement, and that not later than 5 o'clock——

Mr. LIPPITT. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest that instead of moving the Senator ask unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I said "move," I meant to ask unanimous consent, because that is what I have been asking for all the time. It was a mere inadvertence in the use of terms.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator would better ask unanimous consent that at a certain hour on Saturday we proceed to the consideration of the motion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have just done that.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator did not make it very clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Secretary state the request as he understands it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me state it, if there is any misunderstanding about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been taken down. Let the Secretary State it.

The SECRETARY. It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Saturday, April 22, 1916, at 1 o'clock p. m., the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] on the 20th instant, that the Senate recede from its amendment in disagreement to H. R. 11471, and that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the said day the Senate will proceed to vote without further debate upon the said motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not believe that this unanimous-consent agreement comes fairly within the rule requiring a call of the Senate for a quorum. It is not for the purpose of taking a final vote on the passage of a bill or joint resolution. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order now to proceed with the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to proceed with the calendar of unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Unobjected bills.

Mr. SMOOT. Unobjected bills.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it limited to unobjected bills?

Mr. SMOOT. We would be limited to unobjected bills under my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not considered it myself, but I desire to ask if the motion can limit the consideration simply to unobjected bills? Is it not in order at any time under the rule when a bill is reached to move to proceed to its consideration? Is it not in order at any time to move to consider a bill under the rule, and would such a motion exclude that privilege?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Utah has a right to make the motion, and if the Senate adopts it unobjected bills alone will be considered. If it is not agreed to, any Senator, of course, has the right at any time to move to take up any bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understand it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first bill on the calendar will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 1053) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. There has been a House bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands upon the same subject matter, and I move that Senate bill 1053 be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from South Dakota, who introduced this bill providing for stock-raising homesteads, that, as the Senator knows, a House bill covering this same subject has been reported, and it is on the calendar.

Mr. STERLING. I understand that, but I will ask the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. I therefore move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

Mr. STERLING. I wondered if the Senator from Utah might not have House bill 407 reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands considered.

Mr. SMOOT. That can not be done under the motion at this time, but we will reach that bill to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the indefinite postponement of Senate bill 1053.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1062) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over on objection.

The bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move to proceed to consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I object to its consideration at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled that if the motion of the Senator from Utah prevailed it would not be in order to move to take up another bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not so understand the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was the ruling of the Chair. The Chair also ruled that if the motion did not prevail, then any Senator could move to proceed to the consideration of a bill on the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The noise was so great that it was impossible for me to hear what the Chair ruled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will make the ruling now, and there can be an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I venture to express the hope that the Senator from Georgia will not press that motion at this time. As he knows very well, the bill will give rise to debate. We have not had an opportunity to clear up the calendar for a long time, and I should like to see the calendar proceeded with.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that under the ruling of the Chair we can not proceed with it unless I appeal from the decision of the Chair. I do not intend to do that, although I thought under the rule the Senate at any time could change from one order to another order. But I will not make the motion. I will ask the privilege of withdrawing the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over under objection.

The bill (S. 609) to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 611) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 72) to provide for holding the San Antonio Bicentennial Exposition in 1918, was announced as next in order.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Let it go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was going to ask that the joint resolution go over, inasmuch as I intend to address the Senate tomorrow in regard to this exposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 2406) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

COST OF LIVING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) authorizing and directing the Department of Labor to make an inquiry into the cost of living in the District of Columbia, and to report thereon to Congress as early as practicable, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there are two committee amendments to the joint resolution, one of which I urge should not be adopted. I think it was inadvertently placed in the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, in line 4, after the word "living," to insert "of wage earners."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry before the amendment is agreed to. What is the reason why an investigation of this sort should cost $6,000 in the city of Washington when we have all sorts of Government employees under salary whose business it is to investigate questions of this kind?

Mr. KENYON. I do not understand that there are any employees of the Government who are authorized to make this investigation. The joint resolution has been recommended by the Department of Labor. We passed a law here some years ago fixing the hours of employment for women in the District of Columbia. Unless there is some investigation of the cost of living the other law practically amounts to nothing. The basis of this whole matter, I will say very frankly, will be to get information which possibly may lead to the adoption of a minimum wage law in the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just one question further. Is it not true that the Department of Labor itself has a very large number of men who are engaged in occupations akin to this and that they could simply be detailed for the work? I am not going to object to an investigation. Indeed, I say to the Senator from Iowa frankly I am not going to object to the joint resolution if he insists upon it in this form, but it appears that every time there is anything to be done by any of the departments here it must cost a lot of money, although they have a great number of employees. I have often wondered what those employees were doing. Most of them draw good salaries; there are a lot of them in Washington; and to investigate the cost of living in a practical way in the city of Washington ought not to be very difficult. If, however, some one proposes to go into an exhaustive examination, it will cost money.

There are three or four ways to make an investigation. One is the common-sense practical way, which is a very short way. The other is a long-intricate device to run indefinitely into any sort of cost.

Mr. KENYON. I realize that, of course; but the investigation can not be extended indefinitely under this appropriation. It may be that the appropriation is a little too large, but it need not all be expended if a lesser amount will suffice.

This has been recommended twice, I will say to the Senator, by the Committee on Education and Labor. Last year it was on the calendar, but was never reached. Hearings were had on the subject before a subcommittee, and again the joint resolution was recommended. I feel that this is a very meritorious proposition. I do not want, of course, to increase the number of Government employees.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, would not the Senator from Iowa be content to change his joint resolution so that the Department of Commerce and Labor would be directed to make this investigation? I make the suggestion; I may be wrong in making it, for I have not examined the matter. I do, however, know that every time the Government starts to do anything it appears that it has got to get a lot of new employees. I know that our appropriation bills this year will necessarily carry an astounding amount of money. This only involves an expenditure of $6,000, but a large number of $6,000 items will help to swell the grand total of our appropriations. I simply make the suggestion to the Senator from Iowa. I am not going to object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. KENYON. I will say that I do not desire to have appropriations made which are not necessary, and if there is any opportunity of saving money anywhere I will join in doing so. Let this joint resolution go over, and I will make an investigation as to whether or not the Department of Commerce and Labor can do the work without the extra appropriation.

Mr. GALLINGER. Then let the joint resolution go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 640) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan was announced as next in order.

Mr. WORKS. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The resolution (S. Res. 43) for the appointment of a committee to investigate and inquire into the causes of the existing freight blockade and embargoes on the trunk-line railroads entering into the port of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

SOLICITATION OF FUNDS FOR POLITICAL COMMITTEES, ETC.

The bill (S. 668) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any Member of the Senate of the United States or any Member of the House of Representatives of the United States, during the term for which such Senator or Member has been elected, to solicit funds, directly or indirectly, for any political committee, club, or organization.

SEC. 2. That the violation of this act is hereby declared to be a misdemeanor, and any person convicted of violating the same shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 or imprisonment for a term of not less than 60 days, or both, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I understand the bill correctly, if a Member of this Senate belonging to a local political club in his own city should ask some one to contribute a box of cigars he could be fined $1,000?

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In addition to being punished by "imprisonment for a term not less than 60 days."

Mr. REED. I think the bill is absurd, and I object to its consideration on that ground.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the consideration of the bill, and it will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 665) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 669) to limit the use of campaign funds in presidential and national elections was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1840) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1891, and the acts amendatory thereto, approved February 21, 1893, June 27, 1898, and February 26, 1909, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1082) to prevent the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 2730) to fix the compensation of assistant appraisers of merchandise, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

The bill (S. 703) to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate at this time just to speak briefly of this bill. At an early day I hope to discuss it more in detail. I hope in the meantime Senators may begin studying it.

My wish is to call the attention of the Senate to the leading features of the bill, and then to ask Senators to consider it. I very much hope that I shall have the cooperation of the Senate to pass this bill within the next 30 days, and send it over to the other House. I stop now to ask any Senator who can to think about it.

The bill proceeds upon three lines: First, to appropriate money in cooperation with the States to pay vocational teachers in agriculture; second, to appropriate money in cooperation with the States to pay vocational teachers in the mechanic arts; third, to appropriate money in connection with the States to pay for training teachers to give instruction in these specialties. The bill requires contribution by each State equal to the amount received from the Government.

The bill provides for a State board in each State; it also provides for a national board. The State board is to work out the plan for the use of the money in a State and submit it to the national board; and the national board is to approve it if the money is to be paid from the National Treasury, to cooperate with the States. That is the general line of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, let the bill go over for the present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course the bill will go over. I only take occasion to ask Senators to think about it, and, if possible, to read it over and also to think about this question. The bill as it stands makes the national board from the members of the Cabinet. There are friends of the measure who desire an independent board. I ask Senators to consider the question as to whether we should have an independent board or use a board made up from the Cabinet and the Commissioner of Education.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, considering the present condition of the Federal Treasury, I think Senators ought to look at the appropriation carried in this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will state what the appropriation is. The appropriation begins with $500,000 a year for each of the three lines of work I have mentioned; it finally reaches $3,000,000 for the actual instruction in agriculture and the same amount in the mechanic arts, and $1,000,000 finally for the training of teachers. It also proceeds upon the same lines as our agriculture extension law, guaranteeing a certain amount of the fund to each State, without regard to the size or population of the State, so each State will at least have a sufficient fund to conduct the effort in a reasonable way. The bill is generally constructed along the line of the agricultural extension bill, which we adopted nearly two years ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had observed that, and as I am solicitous to help my Democratic friends in the matter of taking care of the deficit, it occurred to me that the Democratic Party did not want to make these appropriations this year for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, the first appropriation amounts to less than a million and a half dollars. We begin with that for next year. Two or three amendments will be required to the bill.

The bill was prepared by a commission appointed under a resolution which originated in the Senate, authorizing the President to appoint a commission to study the question and to frame and suggest a bill. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and I represented the Senate upon that commission, and the Senator from Vermont, to whom again I desire to pay tribute publicly for his devotion to this subject and for his splendid work in behalf of vocational education, will certainly join me in presenting the measure to the Senate. I would not under any circumstances be willing to take it up or to act upon it in his absence, and I am glad at all times to give him that credit for this work which his services deserve.

COL. JAMES JACKSON.

The bill (S. 1162) to place certain officers of the Army on the retired list was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and place him on the retired list of the Army with the rank and retired pay of brigadier general, any colonel now on the retired list of the Army who served with credit as an enlisted man and officer of the Regular Army of the United States during the Civil War, who has been brevetted captain, major, and lieutenant colonel, respectively, for gallant services in battles in the Civil War and in actions against Indians, who has been awarded the congressional medal of honor for most distinguished gallantry in action against Indians, and who is now and has been since early in 1904 on active duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, when this bill was under consideration on a previous occasion there was an objection to its passage in the form in which it was reported from the committee. It applies only to one officer, as I understand; and I will ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] if he has prepared the amendment which was suggested when the bill was last under consideration, stating the name of the officer to be benefited by the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I can do that, I will say to the Senator, and I am prepared to do it if the Senator prefers to have it as a special bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it will be very much better to have it as a special bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Then, Mr. President, if the Senator prefers to have it in that form, I will state the amendment. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint Col. James Jackson, United States Army, retired, to the position and rank of brigadier general on the retired list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, the title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the President to appoint Col. James Jackson, United States Army, retired, to the rank of brigadier general on the retired list."

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 7) providing that any Senator upon his own request may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules with an amendment at the end of line 4, to add the word "state," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended as follows: In Rule XII, clause 1, after the words "by the Senate," there shall be inserted the following: "and any Senator may arise and declare that he is paired and state how he would vote if not paired, and may add that being present he desires to be so recorded, in order to constitute a quorum; whereupon he shall be so recorded and his presence as a part of the quorum announced by the Chair."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if I understand the resolution from the reading by the Secretary, it authorizes the Presiding Officer, if a Senator is present and makes an announcement of his pair, to count him as present for the purpose of making a quorum. It has been the practice of the Senate in recent years to count him under those circumstances as present; and it seems to me that the resolution is unnecessary and futile, and so I object to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Washington will not object to the passage of the resolution. I will explain to the Senate the practical difficulty it is designed to meet. The resolution, by the way, was reported unanimously, I will say to the Senator from Washington, by the members of the Committee on Rules.

Every now and then the roll is called to ascertain whether or not a quorum is present. It develops on the roll call that a quorum is present, and immediately after that there is a yea-and-nay vote, and those Senators who are present and paired announce their pairs and withhold their votes, and are not counted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have observed a number of instances in which Senators were counted as present under those circumstances, if they were actually present.

Mr. GALLINGER. But there is no uniformity about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know of no rule of the Senate whereby they can be counted as present, and, if that has occurred, it must have been in addition to the rule or something else.

I am as much opposed as anybody can be to counting a Senator present against his will; but when a Senator thinks he can represent his constituents best by being counted in order to make a quorum, and he is counted at his own request, it seems to me undoubtedly that he ought to be counted. The only question that could arise in any Senator's mind is as to whether the rule should not be changed still further so as to count the Senator present against his will, which is done in the other House; but certainly a Senator ought to be counted present by his own request to make a quorum. I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection. The matter was pretty well discussed in the Committee on Rules, and finally the committee unanimously reached the conclusion to report the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. Will not this rule, if adopted, carry the necessary implication that a Senator actually present can not be counted to make a quorum unless with his consent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He can not be counted now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, he is counted now.

Mr. WALSH. The fact about the matter is that the presiding officer now actually does count him, and has repeatedly counted him against his protest within the last two years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know of no rule of the Senate under which that may be done. In the House of Representatives, in order to count Members as present, they had to change the rule, and it seems to me we would have to change it here before we could do that. Whether that has been done or not, it has missed my observation; but if it has been done, it has been done, to express it in the most charitable way, in addition to the rule, for no rule of the Senate gives any right to a presiding officer of the Senate to count a Senator as present who has not voted.

I want to obviate that difficulty and give the Senate a quorum wherever Senators are willing to be counted as present—and in most cases they are willing and want to be so counted. When I rise and say that I am paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania and therefore must withhold my vote, and other Senators make similar announcements, and then when the roll is called upon a vote it is found that a quorum has not voted, it is necessary to make another point of no quorum and call the roll for a quorum again. That happened during the last session of Congress again and again and again. There ought to be some uniformity about it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that Vice President Sherman and the present occupant of the chair, as I remember, have counted present to make a quorum Senators who were paired. I made a mild protest against it on one occasion, thinking that the Chair had transcended the authority given him by the rule; but I think it is very desirable to have a rule of this kind so that we may have uniformity in the administration of the rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. GALLINGER. And I am strongly in favor of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Washington will pardon me, the point made by the Senator from New Hampshire strikes me as irresistible. If there is any question about the right to do what has been done, then why not cure the trouble by adopting a rule making it uniform and universal in its operation, and leaving a Senator to represent his constituents by being present to constitute a quorum when he thinks that is the proper way to represent them?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a case in which the Chair thinks the Chair has a right to make an inquiry, because if this rule should be adopted it would be the duty of the Chair to enforce it. What does the Senate expect the Chair to do under this rule if Senators rise, state that they are paired, state how they would vote, but do not vote, and if they had voted the result would be different from the vote as shown by those who actually did vote? What is the Chair going to do under circumstances of that kind?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have heretofore objected to the consideration of this resolution a time or two because I thought it was not only unnecessary but wrong. There has been manifest a spasmodic disposition to improve the rules of the Senate by enforcing these according to their true spirit and real meaning, which, it is needless to say, is the way in which rules should be enforced. I believe that 90 per cent of the rules and ruling which control our proceedings here were made by repeated acquiescence by the Senate in the action of the Presiding Officer in deciding that a given matter should be disposed of in a certain way. During the short periods that I have occupied the chair I have undertaken on occasion to test out the sentiment of the Senate with reference to that method of improving the rules rather than by the enforcement of the mere letter of the particular rule. I thus sought to utilize the element of growth which is necessarily and inherently a part of every written code that is intended ultimately to control or regulate human affairs. I have, therefore, not hesitated to say that a Senator is present when he is actually present in person and in fact. I did not believe and do not now believe that a rule is necessary to affirmatively confer power to do this. If a Senator actually present should elect to withhold his vote, under a custom here which authorized him to do it when he was paired with another Senator of opposite views, he should have the added right to object to his presence being noted for the purpose of making a quorum and thus have the effect of disfranchising those who are present by developing the absence of a quorum. I felt that I was authorized to hold if he is present for one purpose that he is present for all purposes. I have not hesitated to say that. The Senate has had repeated opportunities to reverse that ruling if it should see proper to do so and has persistently refused to challenge such ruling by an appeal therefrom.

The proposed rule gives to the Senator himself the right to say whether he is present or absent for legislative purposes. He may rise in his place and say he is absent in a parliamentary sense although everybody knows he is present in fact. Now, I am not going to take advantage of the right to object to the present consideration of this resolution and thus afford the Senate further opportunity to dodge doing or refusing to do what the proposed rule is intended to do. If the Senate wants that kind of a rule, it ought now to vote for this resolution.

I am gradually getting into that state of mind where I believe that the rules of the Senate must get worse in order to get better. The present rules of the Senate do not enable this body to do business as intelligently and expeditiously as the public welfare demands, nor to properly conserve its time so as to utilize the function of debate for the purpose of enlightening those who have not made a special study of the particular question which is under consideration at the time. I think the way to bring that about is to abuse the rules to a point of nullification, to a point where they will become absolutely absurd—and that point is not far away now—and then something will be done in the direction of their reformation and improvement.

I have heretofore antagonized all attempts to adopt a cloture rule because I believed that the history of the absence of cloture during filibusters has justified the existing practice; but the filibusters come so infrequently that they can hardly be relied upon further to justify a continuation of the present practice. I believe I can say now that there ought to be a majority cloture rule in this body; that is, the old previous question ought to be adopted, so that in the current consideration of bills there could be something like a rational saving of time.

The only thing that makes me add a qualification at all is the existence of the necessity for a filibuster. The very thing which on occasion makes the absence of a cloture rule unpopular is the very thing that leaves in my mind the lingering belief that possibly it is justified. But I have now about become convinced that the good in it has steadily grown less, until it has now reached a point where it bears no just relation to the evil which comes from the waste of time during the current transaction of business here on occasions when no filibuster is in progress. Unlimited and uncontrolled debate in the Senate in the transaction of routine, ordinary business is an evil that can not be much longer ignored.

This matter here, as the Senator from Mississippi has said, presents a square issue and gives the Senate an opportunity to record its real preference concerning the disputed matter. I do not prefer to have the rule changed as the Senator proposes; but if the Senate does, it is all right. I think it will make the rules worse, and as soon as they are made as bad as they can be made a movement will grow up here to change them. I have attempted, as I said before, in my small way, utilizing the small opportunities that have come to me at intervals as temporary presiding officer, to make some progress in that direction. I hold to the view that under the existing demoralization in the enforcement of the rules of the Senate and the uncertainty in their meaning a presiding officer who is worth his salt will be continually making rulings that call for challenge; because it is no part of the duty or mission of a progressive, intelligent, and independent presiding officer who wants to conserve the time of the Senate, to the end that it may be devoted to the things that the Senate is assembled to do, to sit here and avoid friction by allowing abuses to continue without deliberately creating situations that may be utilized for their correction and betterment.

I think we have enough law about counting a quorum; but if any presiding officer has a notion that he has not authority to repeat what has been done by others, then the Senate ought to come to his help and say by a special rule that he can count a quorum. I do not want to leave it to the individual Senator to say that he can be counted or not at his exclusive election, because in many instances that will defeat the very purpose in allowing the presiding officer to have anything to say about it.

I shall vote against the resolution, although I am not going to object to its consideration.

Mr. OVERMAN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LIPPITT. The consideration of the resolution has been objected to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is there not an objection to this resolution? If so, I call for the regular order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As I made the objection, I want to say just one word further as to the ground upon which I object.

I will confer later with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in regard to the resolution; but if it shall be adopted it will be the first time that the Senate has recognized in a rule the practice of pairing. My opinion is that there are many abuses in that practice. I believe that there are many cases where the practice serves a perfectly legitimate and useful and almost necessary purpose; but the purpose of pairing indiscriminately and generally on every occasion, whether there is any emergency affecting the Senator who requests to be paired or not, is an abuse. Because of the fact that the resolution seeks to establish that practice in the rules of the Senate, in my opinion is objectionable.

I insist at this time upon my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will be passed over.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 20) for appointment of a committee of Senators to examine into questions relating to the acquisition or construction of manufacturing plants to supply the Army and Navy with arms, armament, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr LODGE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1428) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], who reported the bill, is absent. I think it had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3551) relating to the procedure in the United States courts was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT.

The bill (S. 2986) to provide capital for agricultural development, to create a standard form of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

H. P. BALDWIN AND OTHERS.

The bill (H. R. 6241) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act amending the franchise granted to H. P. Baldwin, R. A. Wadsworth, J. N. S. Williams, D. C. Lindsay, C. D. Lufkin, James L. Coke, and W. T. Robinson, and now held under assignment to Island Electric Co. (Ltd.), by extending it to include the Makawao district on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii; and extending the control of the Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii to said franchise and its holder, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GRONNA subsequently said: I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado if the bill just passed is the one to which I objected the other day?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; it is the bill the Senator objected to and of which an explanation has been made to him.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been passed.

Mr. GRONNA. Then, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. WORKS. I hope the Senator will not do that until he can look into the matter. I have investigated it, and it seems to me an entirely proper piece of legislation.

Mr. GRONNA. Very well; I will simply enter a motion to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 34) granting to the State of Utah title to certain lands in said State for uses as a fish hatchery was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over.

MEXICAN PEAS.

The bill (S. 3536) to provide for the storing and cleansing of imported Mexican peas, commonly called "gorbanzos," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That under such regulations and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, bonded warehouses may be established in which imported garbanzo, wheat, barley, and other grains and seeds may be stored, cleaned, repacked, or otherwise changed in condition, but not manufactured, and withdrawn for exportation without the payment of duty thereon: Provided, That the whole or any part of such imported garbanzo, wheat, barley, or other grains and seeds, and the waste material and by-products incident to cleaning or otherwise treating said imported grains and seeds, may be withdrawn for domestic consumption upon the payment on the quantity so withdrawn of the duty imposed by law on such garbanzo, wheat, barley, and other grains and seeds in their condition as imported: And provided further, That the compensation of customs officers and storekeepers for all services in the supervision of such warehouses shall be paid from moneys advanced by the warehouse proprietor to the collector of customs and be carried in a special account and disbursed for such purposes, and all expenses incurred shall be paid by the warehouse proprietor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ASHURST subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to be pardoned for a moment while I make an explanation to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. I was very anxious to have Senate bill 3536 passed, but the Senator from North Dakota objected to it unless it was amended. It was passed while I was discussing the matter with him. I hope the Senate will recur to it, because I do not want any advantage taken in that way. I wish to propose some amendments.

The Senator from North Dakota objects to the provision in the bill which inserts "wheat, barley, and other grains and seeds." If the Senate will agree to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed, I would suggest, to meet the objection of the Senator from North Dakota, that certain amendments be made: On page 2, line 2, to strike out "wheat, barley, and other grains and seeds"; in line 6, to strike out "wheat, barley, or other"; in line 7, to strike out the words "grains and seeds"; in line 8, to strike out the word "grains" and insert the word "garbanzo"; in line 9, to strike out the words "and seeds"; in line 11, to strike out the words "wheat, barley, and other"; and in line 12, to strike out the words "grains and seeds."

Mr. GRONNA. I will say if those amendments are adopted, I shall have no objection to the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is passed now.

Mr. ASHURST. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I move, on page 2, line 2, to strike out the words "wheat, barley, and other grains and seeds."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. In line 6, I move to strike out the words "wheat, barley, or other."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. In line 7, I move to strike out the words "grains and seeds," and in line 8 to strike out the word "grains" and insert the word "garbanzo."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. In line 9, I move to strike out the words "and seeds"; in line 11 to strike out the words "wheat, barley, and other"; and in line 12 to strike out the words "grains and seeds."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. With these amendments agreed to the bill simply applies to garbanzo.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I think it is only fair to myself to say that I was not in the Senate when this bill was reached for consideration. I was busily engaged on other important business of the Senate, namely, attending a hearing on the so-called sisal hemp investigation. I did object to the passage of the bill the other day, and I informed the Senator from North Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, having the bill in charge, that I would oppose it unless the amendments which have been submitted by the Senator from Arizona were made to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to make one statement regarding the bill. As it passed the House it provided only for what are known as garbanzo peas. It was amended by the Committee on Finance at the suggestion of the Treasury Department so as to include wheat, barley, and other grains. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] objects to those additions, and I am perfectly content to have them stricken from the bill and that the bill should be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to provide for the storing and cleaning of imported Mexican peas, commonly called 'garbanzo.'"

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I now ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have the address of Hon. Edward N. Hurley, vice chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, made at Boston in the last few days, printed in the RECORD. Mr. President, this is the only address that sets forth the general procedure of matters which come before that commission, and also establishes the relationship that this commission bears to the general trade of the whole country and the manner in which it may be remedied wherever there is complaint before that body. It also discloses directions as to economy and finance of value to all the commercial men of the Nation, and copies have been demanded in numbers approximating 5,000.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, we have enforced the rule against matter happening outside the Chamber. We can not now make an exception. Will the Senator not let us give him privilege to print as a document?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from New Jersey asks me to consent to have a document of this; but, Mr. President, an address made by another member of the commission was put in the RECORD, and it is the desire of the vice chairman to have this put in the RECORD so that both may be read in the RECORD upon the same level with each other. I know I ask an exception to the general rule, but this is an exceptional address.

I am anxious to have this accommodation afforded, if it can be done without a violation of any rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Because we made a mistake before it is no excuse for us to make another one. This is the same matter the Senator has brought up a number of times this week. I must object to it going into the RECORD. I have no objection to its being printed as a public document, but I do object to printing it in the RECORD.

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Senator to withhold his objection for the present. I could not accept to have it made a document until I can confer with those who have asked me to present Mr. Hurley's address for the RECORD. Therefore I temporarily withdraw it from consideration and will return to it later after I have presented to those interested the condition of our rules on this subject, and that the disposition is to allow it to be made a public document, if I will consent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest to the Senator that it will be better to print it as a public document. It will be of more use to those of us who wish to read and keep it. I could not get a speech made from the outside on similar subjects printed in the RECORD, and we can not under our conditions make exception, as much as we would like to accommodate the Senator.

Mr. LEWIS. I withhold the matter for the present.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

The bill (S. 1107) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

NATIONAL BANKING ACTS (S. DOC. NO. 412).

The resolution (S. Res. 110) to print the pamphlet entitled "The National Bank Act and Other Laws Relating to National Banks" as a Senate document was read, considered, and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That the pamphlet submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] on December 13, 1915, entitled "The National Bank Act as Amended the Federal Reserve Act, and Other Laws Relating to National Banks," be printed as a Senate document, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

MEMORIAL TO ALFRED NOBLE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to Alfred Noble was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on the Library with amendments on page 2, line 1, after the word "memorial," to insert "fountain"; in line 4, after the word "memorial," to insert "fountain"; and in line 5, after the word "memorial," to insert "fountain," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant permission to the American Society of Civil Engineers for the erection on public grounds of the United States in the city of Washington, D. C., other than those of the Capitol, the Library of Congress, and the White House, of a memorial fountain to Alfred Noble, a civil engineer of distinguished ability in connection with Government work, whose services have been of conspicuous benefit to the country: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial fountain shall be approved by the Commission of Fine Arts, and that the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of the said memorial fountain: Provided further, That if the erection of this memorial fountain shall not be begun within three years from and after the passage of this resolution the permission granted may, in the discretion of the Chief of Engineers, be revoked at any time.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed,

The title was amended so as to read "Joint resolution authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial fountain to Alfred Noble."

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 4654) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of wars other than the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JUVENILE COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (H. R. 9803) to emancipate from certain disabilities children who have judgments of conviction for crime of record against them in the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that no judgment of conviction against any child of record in the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia under an act entitled "An act to create a juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia," approved March 19, 1906, shall operate as a disqualification of any such child for jury duty, or for holding office, or for any other public service under the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia, and no child against whom a judgment of conviction may stand in said Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia under said act aforesaid shall be denominated a criminal by reason of any such judgment, nor shall such judgment be denominated a conviction.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 645) to provide for the closing of barber shops in the District of Columbia on Sunday was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARDING. I ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 7571) to provide for the appointment of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let that go over.

Mr. LODGE. It is an adverse report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we may be able to amend it and put it in a shape where the Senate would like to pass it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (H. R. 11240) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is to pension soldiers and sailors other than those of the Civil War. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is a House bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But it is not only for soldiers of the Civil War but for those other than of the Civil War.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That is true. The bill has been on the calendar for nearly two months.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not object to regular Civil War pension bills, and I am not going to object to any of them, but when it comes to the Spanish-American War I think the rules applicable to Civil War pensioners ought not to be applied to Spanish-American War pensioners. I want to have an opportunity to look at this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 50) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell the coal deposits in and under certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes over.

The bill (S. 3329) for an appropriation of $105,000 to purchase water rights within the West Okanogan Valley irrigation district, and for other purposes was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4424) to provide for the payment of drainage assessments on Indian lands in Nebraska was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

JOSHUA NICHOLLS.

The bill (S. 509) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, to strike out "$33,450" and insert "$20,450," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Elizabeth R. Nicholls and Joanna L. Nicholls, heirs at law of Joshua Nicholls, deceased, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $20,450, for and on account of property belonging to said Joshua Nicholls destroyed and captured by the United States soldiers in the year 1863, in the State of South Carolina, during the late Civil War. The said Joshua Nicholls was throughout said war a loyal citizen of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELLEN B. MONAHAN.

Mr. LANE. I should like to return to the bill (S. 640) for the relief of Ellen B. Monahan.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that that bill was objected to by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. It went over upon his objection, and he is absent from the Chamber now.

Mr. LANE. All right.

JAMES STANTON.

The bill (H. R. 5835) for the relief of James Stanton was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to James Stanton, of Leavenworth, Kans., $1,912.40, the same being for extra work performed by said James Stanton on a contract with the War Department, dated June 8, 1908, for grading, paving, curbing, and rock hauling on Grant Avenue, Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW ENGLAND COAL & COKE CO.

The bill (H. R. 7862) for the relief of New England Coal & Coke Co., owner of the American barges Emilie and Cassie, and Bruusgaard Kiosterud Dampskibsaktieselskab, owner of the Norwegian steamship Hesperos, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the New England Coal & Coke Co., owner of the American barges Emilie and Cassie, and the claim of Bruusgaard Kiosterud Dampskibsaktieselskab, owner of the steamship Hesperos, for injuries alleged to have been suffered in collisions which occurred in Elizabeth River, Va., on October 18, 1915, between the U. S. S. Arethusa and said barges and U. S. S. Arethusa and the Hesperos, for and on account of the damages resulting to said barges and said steamship Hesperos, respectively, by reason of said collisions, may be submitted to the United States court in the district in which suit shall be filed by the United States to recover damages and losses by said collision, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collisions, if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, and with the same right of appeal

SEC. 2. That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES DRAINAGE & IRRIGATION CO.

The bill (H. R. 7248) for the relief of the United States Drainage & Irrigation Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the United States Drainage & Irrigation Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, $9,498.43, in full for additional work performed by said United States Drainage & Irrigation Co. under its certain contract with the War Department, dated December 15, 1911, for jetty work at the mouth of Broadkill River, Del.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATOR OF H. B. GARTON.

The bill (H. R. 7502) for the relief of Ellis P. Garton, administrator of the estate of H. B. Garton, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to rehear, retry, determine, and finally adjudicate the claim of Ellis P. Garton, administrator of the estate of H. B. Garton, deceased, No. 70075, Indian depredations, in the Court of Claims, and to award judgment therein as fully and completely as if the petition had not been dismissed, and also gives full jurisdiction and power to the Court of Claims to rehear and retry the claim upon all evidence that has been or may be presented upon a hearing in the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) relative to leasing of Osage oil lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think that had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

The bill (S. 1093) to permit the Denison Coal Co. to relinquish certain lands embraced in its Choctaw and Chickasaw coal lease and to include within said lease other lands with the segregated coal area was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think that had better go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1100) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on February 16, 1903, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to be present when this bill is taken up, and if it is in order under the rule, I move that the bill go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will go to the calendar under Rule IX.

The bill (S. 1096) to provide for carrying into effect of the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nations of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties with said tribe of Indians, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I make the same motion with respect to that bill which I made as to the bill just preceding it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is absent from the Chamber. He reported the bill, and seems to be in charge of the matter. I object to the bill going over under Rule IX. Indeed, I object to either of the bills being placed under Rule IX. Of course, that would cut them out of consideration entirely on this order of the calendar. We can pass them to-day.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, these two measures have been before the Senate many times and have always been defeated. I wish to be present when they are taken up, as I do not desire to have them go through this body without opposition. They are very objectionable bills. I should, therefore, like to have them go to the calendar under Rule IX. Then they can only be taken up on motion. If it is in order, I move that Senate bill 1096 go to the calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion is out of order at the present time. We are proceeding under a motion, which we adopted, to call the calendar and dispose of those cases which are not objected to. That order is not broad enough to permit the change of position of these bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia make a point of order, or does he object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the immediate consideration of the bill, and I also object——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bills will go over on the objection of the Senator from Georgia.

The bills referred to are as follows:

A bill (S. 1100) to pay the balance due the loyal Creek Indians on the award made by the Senate on February 16, 1903; and

A bill (S. 1096) to provide for carrying into effect of the agreement between the United States and the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Indians ratified by act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, and supplemental agreement of June 30, 1902, and other laws and treaties with said tribe of Indians.

The bill (S. 4251) to authorize the Ponca Tribe of Indians to appear in and be made parties to any suits filed in the Court of Claims by the Omaha Tribe was announced as next in order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 1094) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, Orders of Business 218, 219, and 220 are all about the same class of bills, and I ask that they all go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The bills referred to are as follows:

A bill (S. 1094) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in claims of the Ponca Tribe of Indians against the United States;

A bill (S. 1098) to adjust and settle the claims of the loyal Shawnee and loyal Absentee Shawnee Tribe of Indians; and

A bill (S. 4250) for the relief of the Ottawa Indian Tribe of Blanchards Fork and Roche de Bœuf.

CLAIMS OF INDIANS ON FORT BERTHOLD RESERVATION, N. DAK.

The bill (S. 4526) authorizing the Arikara, Gros Ventre, and Mandan Tribes of Indians, of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., to submit claims to the Court of Claims, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which any or all of the tribes of Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribes from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribes, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the said tribes or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said tribes or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other verification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribes or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians, under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribe or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fee shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribes or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY AND NAVY MEDAL OF HONOR ROLL.

The bill (H. R. 4701) to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll," and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. WARREN. Will not the Senator from Georgia withhold that objection for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withhold my objection for a moment.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the Senator from Georgia to understand what the bill is. I feel some responsibility for the bill, Mr. President, because there are many poor men who might benefit by its passage who will expect me to represent them here, since I happen at this moment to be the only one whose duty it is to explain the measure. It is a bill which has twice passed the other House and has been favorably reported twice in this body. It is a bill which provides $10 per month for every man 65 years old who for exceptional gallantry in battle has been awarded the congressional medal of honor. The number of men who can receive the benefits of this bill is but few, and the total amount per annum can hardly exceed $12,000, which will most likely rapidly grow less. I think every nation provides special pensions or extra allowances to all those who have been thus honored, and in most countries the amount is greater than provided for in this bill.

Originally under the law only enlisted men—privates and noncommissioned officers—could receive the bestowal of the congressional medal, but later commissioned officers were included, and also the Navy was included with the Army. The conditions now imposed are very exacting, and but very few are recipients of the medal.

Heretofore I have hesitated about any monetary consideration being added to the exceptional distinction of possessing the highest national honor medal within the gift of any nation; but while very many may never apply for this pension, yet many others are poor, crippled, ill, and in need. They took their lives in their hands to perform feats of daring uncalled for in the way of regular assigned duty, and this in time of our Nation's great need.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is a bill with reference to medals of honor. It excludes the bunch that came altogether from some one State?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, I do not object to its consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll." Upon written application made to the Secretary of the proper department, and subject to the conditions and requirements hereinafter contained, the name of each surviving person who has served in the military or naval service of the United States in any war, who has attained or shall attain the age of 65 years, and who has been awarded a medal of honor for having in action involving actual conflict with an enemy distinguished himself conspicuously by gallantry or intrepidity, at the risk of his life, above and beyond the call of duty, and who was honorably discharged from service by muster out, resignation, or otherwise, shall be, by the Secretary of the proper department, entered and recorded on said roll. Applications for entry on said roll shall be made in such form and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, and proper blanks and instructions shall be, by the proper Secretary, furnished without charge upon request made by any person claiming the benefits of this act.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War and of the Secretary of the Navy to carry this act into effect and to decide whether each applicant, under this act, in his department is entitled to the benefit of this act. If the official award of the medal of honor to the applicant, or the official notice to him thereof, shall appear to show that the medal of honor was awarded to the applicant for such an act as is required by the provisions of this act, it shall be deemed sufficient to entitle the applicant to such special pension without further investigation. Otherwise all official correspondence, orders, reports, recommendations, requests, and other evidence now on file in any public office or department shall be considered. A certificate of service and of the act of heroism, gallantry, bravery, or intrepidity for which the medal of honor was awarded, and of enrollment under this act, and of the right of the special pensioner to be entitled to and to receive the special pension herein granted, shall be furnished each person whose name shall be so entered on said roll. The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall deliver to the Commissioner of Pensions a certified copy of each of such of said certificates as he may issue, as aforesaid, and the same shall be full and sufficient authority to the Commissioner of Pensions for the payment by him to the beneficiary named in each such certificate the special pension herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That each such surviving person whose name shall have been entered on said roll in accordance with this act shall be entitled to and shall receive and be paid by the Commissioner of Pensions in the Department of the Interior, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, a special pension of $10 per month for life, payable quarter yearly. The Commissioner of Pensions shall make all necessary rules and regulations for making payment of such special pensions to the beneficiaries thereof.

Such special pension shall begin on the day that such person shall file his application for enrollment on said roll in the office of the Secretary of War or of the Secretary of the Navy after the passage and approval of this act, and shall continue during the life of the beneficiary.

Such special pension shall not deprive any such special pensioner of any other pension or of any benefit, right, or privilege to which he is or may hereafter be entitled under any existing or subsequent law, but shall be in addition thereto.

The special pension allowed under this act shall not be subject to any attachment, execution, levy, tax, lien, or detention under any process whatever.

SEC. 4. That in case any person has been awarded two or more medals of honor, he shall not be entitled to and shall not receive more than one such special pension.

Rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed hereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (H. R. 12027) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. This is a Civil War pension bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is it confined exclusively to soldiers of the Civil War?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I do not object to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 3, line 7, before the words "per month," to strike out "$36" and insert "$40," so as to make the clause read:

CLAIMS OF SIOUX TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 4371) authorizing the Sioux Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature which the Sioux Tribe of Indians may have against the United States, which have not heretofore been determined by the Court of Claims, may be submitted to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, for determination of the amount, if any, due said tribe from the United States under any treaties, agreements, or laws of Congress, or for the misappropriation of any of the funds of said tribe, or for the failure of the United States to pay said tribe any money or other property due; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, with the right of either party to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, to hear and determine all legal and equitable claims, if any, of said tribe against the United States, and to enter judgment thereon.

SEC. 2. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said courts, they shall settle the rights therein, both legal and equitable, of each and all the parties thereto notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation, and any payment which may have been made upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as an offset in such suits or actions, and the United States shall be allowed credit for all sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said tribe or any band thereof. The claim or claims of the tribe or band or bands thereof may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment, suit to be filed within five years after the passage of this act; and such action shall make the petitioner or petitioners party plaintiff or plaintiffs and the United States party defendant, and any band or bands of said tribe the court may deem necessary to a final determination of such suit or suits may be joined therein as the court may order. Such petition, which shall be verified by the attorney or attorneys employed by said Sioux Tribe or any bands thereof, shall set forth all the facts on which the claims for recovery are based, and said petition shall be signed by the attorney or attorneys employed, and no other vertification shall be necessary. Official letters, papers, documents, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence, and the departments of the Government shall give access to the attorney or attorneys of said tribe or bands thereof to such treaties, papers, correspondence, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys for said tribe or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That upon the final determination of such suit, cause, or action the Court of Claims shall decree such fees as it shall find reasonable to be paid the attorney or attorneys employed therein by said tribe or bands of Indians under contracts negotiated and approved as provided by existing law, and in no case shall the fee decreed by said Court of Claims be in excess of the amounts stipulated in the contracts approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, and no attorney shall have a right to represent the said tribe or any band thereof in any suit, cause, or action under the provisions of this act until his contract shall have been approved as herein provided. The fees decreed by the court to the attorney or attorneys of record shall be paid out of any sum or sums recovered in such suits or actions, and no part of such fees shall be taken from any money in the Treasury of the United States belonging to such tribe or bands of Indians in whose behalf the suit is brought unless specifically authorized in the contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior as herein provided: Provided, That in no case shall the fees decreed by said court amount to more than 10 per cent of the amount of the judgment recovered in such cause.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HOURS OF SERVICE OF RAILROAD EMPLOYEES.

The bill (S. 3769) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by limiting the hours of service of employees thereon," approved March 4, 1907, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, on page 2, after line 23, to strike out:

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be held to affect or abate any violation of the act hereby amended or any suit or action pending because of such violation at the time of the approval of this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall affect, or be held to affect, any suit that may be instituted for recovery of penalty for violation of the act hereby amended occurring prior to the approval of this act, or any suit for such penalty or growing out of alleged violation of the act hereby amended which may be pending in any court at the time of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN L. MOON.

The bill (S. 3539) for the relief of John L. Moon was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John L. Moon, of Opelika, Lee County, Ala., the sum of $200, as a reward for services rendered in the apprehension of criminals in the burglary of the United States post office at Auburn, Ala.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROTECTION OF FISHERIES.

The bill (S. 4401) to conduct investigations and experiments for ameliorating the damage wrought to the fisheries by predacious fishes and aquatic animals was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Commissioner of Fisheries be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to conduct investigations and experiments for the purpose of ameliorating the damage wrought to the fisheries by dogfish and other predacious fishes and aquatic animals.

SEC. 2. That the said investigations and experiments shall be such as to develop the best and cheapest means of taking such fishes and aquatic animals, of utilizing them for economic purposes, especially for food and to encourage the establishment of fisheries and markets for them.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $25.000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Commissioner of Fisheries to carry out the provisions of this act, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES C. HILTON.

The bill (S. 606) for the relief of James C. Hilton was considered as in Committee on the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit in the accounts of Passed Asst. Paymaster James C. Hilton, United States Navy, $6,033.61, being the amount stolen from United States funds by a person or persons unknown and charged against the accounts of James C. Hilton on the books of the Treasury Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPOSITS OF ASSETS OF INSOLVENT NATIONAL BANKS.

The bill (H. R. 3575) to amend section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to permit the Comptroller of the Currency to deposit upon interest the assets of insolvent national banks in other national banks of the same or of an adjacent city or town was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, before the word "for," to insert "with the Treasurer of the United States," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"Provided, That the comptroller may, if he deems proper, deposit any of the money so made in any regular Government depositary or in any State or National bank either of the city or town in which the insolvent bank was located or of a city or town adjacent thereto as practicable. If such deposit is made, he shall require the depositary to deposit United States bonds or other satisfactory securities with the Treasurer of the United States for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the money so deposited. Such depositary shall pay upon such money interest at such rate as the comptroller may prescribe, not less, however, than 2 per cent per annum upon the average monthly amount of such deposits.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I have no objection to what is evidently the purpose of the bill, but I want to call attention to the language of the proviso which reads:

That the comptroller may, if he deems proper, deposit any of the money so made.

I do not know what that language means, and I will inquire if any Senator can explain it?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to state that the purpose of the bill is to provide in the case of insolvent banks when they are placed in the hands of receivers that whatever money is collected may be deposited in banks in the neighborhood of the insolvent bank.

Mr. HUGHES. Is that what is meant by the words "deposit any of the money so made"?

Mr. NELSON. That means money made out of the receivership; that is all. The bill is designed to keep the money in the neighborhood instead of sending it off to some large city in a central point.

Mr. HUGHES. If the language is satisfactory to the Senator, it is to me; but I do not entirely understand it.

Mr. NELSON. That is the only purpose of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3927) for the relief of the legal representatives of Francis Busch, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The bill will be passed over.

MAINE CENTRAL RAILROAD CO.

The bill (S. 3405) for the relief of the Maine Central Railroad Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,566 to the Maine Central Railroad Co. for a special train from Mount Desert Ferry, Me., to New York City conveying foreign mails from the steamship Kronprinzessin Cecile, per order of the acting superintendent of the Railway Mail Service at Boston, Mass., August 6, 1914.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS, OREGON.

The bill (S. 1550) to authorize the establishment of fish-cultural stations on the Columbia River or its tributaries in the State of Oregon was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment on page 1, line 6, after the word "Oregon," to insert "or the State of Washington," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish two or more fish-cultural stations on the Columbia River or its tributaries in the State of Oregon or the State of Washington for the propagation of salmon and other food fishes, and to make the necessary surveys, and purchase sites, construct ponds and buildings, construct, purchase, and hire boats and equipments, and employ such assistance as may be required for the construction and operation of such fish-cultural stations at suitable points to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce, and the number of such stations to be determined by him; and for said purpose the sum of $100,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated: Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of fish-cultural stations in accordance with this bill, the States of Oregon and Washington, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper: Provided further, That the operations of said hatcheries may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatcheries.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the establishment of fish-cultural stations on the Columbia River or its tributaries in the State of Oregon or the State of Washington."

FLATHEAD INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The bill (S. 1059) to provide for the payment for certain lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "June," to strike out "sixth" and insert "twenty-fifth"; on line 8, after the words "nineteen hundred and," to strike out "twelve" and insert "ten"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "have," to strike out "heretofore settled upon or entered such lands" and insert "between August 26, 1910, and June 14, 1911, settled upon, or between said dates filed applications to enter such lands, and which applications have been or may hereafter be allowed," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where lands within the former Flathead Indian Reservation which were classified and appraised during the years 1912 and 1913 by the commission appointed for that purpose under authority of the act of June 25, 1910, have been appraised at an amount in excess of the amount at which similar lands were appraised by the Flathead Commission of 1907 and 1908, persons who have between August 26, 1910, and June 14, 1911, settled upon, or between said dates filed applications to enter, such lands, and which applications have been or may hereafter be allowed, shall not be required to pay more for the lands so settled upon or rented by them than the highest amount specified by the Flathead Commission of 1907 and 1908 for lands of like character and similar classification.

SEC. 2. That in all cases where patents shall be issued for land paid for under the foregoing sections of this act there shall be transferred, from any funds belonging to the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the credit of the Indians for whose benefit such lands are disposed of, such an amount as shall equal the difference between the amount so paid under said sections and the amount at which the lands so paid for have been appraised or reappraised by the commission of 1912 and 1913.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1065) to provide for summer-residence homesteads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NORRIS. Let that bill go over.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator who made that objection will at least wait until the bill is read, and see the nature of it. Under the rule I believe he can object at any time.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no objection to having the bill read, but I shall object to its consideration. I know what the bill is.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no need of wasting time.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought I would interpose the objection now, in order to save time.

Mr. MYERS. I do not make the request, then.

LANDS IN GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 1741) for the relief of certain homestead entrymen for land within the limits of the Glacier National Park was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 5, after the words

"Pat Doyle," to insert "Walter E. Barricklow," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the homestead entries heretofore made by Howard E. Jones, Ernest R. Henthorn, Daniel C. Doverspike, Ora Reeves, Louis N. Fournier, Pat Doyle, Walter E. Barricklow, and Frank Kelly for lands within the limits of the Glacier National Park, in the Kalispell, Mont., land district, which entries were allowed under an order issued by the Secretary of the Interior on May 21, 1910, based upon lists approved by the Secretary of Agriculture prior to the passage of the act of May 11, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 354), creating the said Glacier National Park, be, and they are hereby, excepted from the force and effect of said act of May 11, 1910: Provided, That should said entries not be perfected as required by law the lands embraced therein shall revert to and become a part of the said Glacier National Park.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DELILAH SIEBENALER.

The bill (S. 1746) for the relief of Delilah Siebenaler was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to refund to Delilah Siebenaler the sum of $188.41, paid to the Department of Agriculture by said Delilah Siebenaler for certain timber which she cut from her homestead entry within the Cabinet Forest Reserve, Mont., prior to her receipt of patent therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATENTS AND SURVEYS OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

The bill (S. 1860) in reference to the issuance of patents and copies of surveys of private land claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that upon the payment into the Treasury of the United States of one-half of the cost of surveying and platting, which may have heretofore been made and not paid for, or which may be hereafter made, of any private land claim in New Mexico which may have been confirmed, and in reference to which the survey and plat thereof may have been or may be reported to the General Land Office and approved, a patent shall be issued to the confirmee, his heirs or assigns, for such claim, and also copies of the field notes of such approved survey and plat thereof, when requested from the proper officer, the cost of the copies of such field notes of such survey and plat to be paid for by the confirmee, his heirs or assigns, in addition to paying the said one-half of the cost of surveying and platting said claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHNSTON-M'CUBBINS INVESTMENT CO.

The bill (S. 3257) for the relief of Johnston-McCubbins Investment Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Johnston-McCubbins Investment Co., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being settlement in full of an unpaid balance of rental due for discontinued terminal railway post-office premises used for terminal purposes in the city of Salisbury, N. C., from December 16, 1913, to July 1, 1914, the sum of $644.33.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is there a report on the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no report on the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATE SUITS AGAINST FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

The bill (S. 5126) giving the consent of the United States for the bringing of certain suits in the Supreme Court of the United States, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of the bill. It simply gives certain States the right to sue; that is all. I do not see why those States should be deprived of the right.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection at all to the bill, but the last time the calendar was under consideration there was an objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I would suggest to the Senator that the Judiciary Committee, after having this matter under consideration for quite a length of time, worked on it until I think we all agreed that this bill was proper.

Mr. LODGE. My State has a claim, and other States have claims, and I think they ought to be allowed to go in like a private suitor to try the claims. This covers all of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will not object to the consideration of the bill; and if the Senator who made the objection before wants to do so, he can ask for a reconsideration.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I should not like to have the statement made by the Senator from Georgia passed by. He says that the whole Committee on the Judiciary was satisfied with the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was under that impression.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator is mistaken about that; but I am not going to object to the present consideration of the bill. My objection to the bill was that this litigation ought not in the first instance to go into the Supreme Court of the United States. The Senator may remember that I made that objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was under the impression that when we finally passed upon it there was no objection. There were several objections at times. If I was mistaken about that, I thank the Senator for correcting me.

Mr. WORKS. My opinion about it is that the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims should be enlarged, and any suits of this kind should be commenced in that court. I object to loading up the Supreme Court of the United States with original jurisdiction.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I simply ask permission to print in the RECORD the report of the subcommittee to the Committee on the Judiciary, giving the history of this matter and the authorities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred S. 902, S. 4059, and S. J. Res. 68, all of which sought to give the consent of the United States that suits may be brought against it by the States, beg leave to report as follows:

In addition to the above, S. 3346, giving to the Court of Claims jurisdiction to adjudicate certain claims of the State of Massachusetts against the Federal Government, was also referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, but that bill was reported back to the Senate and the Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from further consideration thereof and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims. However, if the solution of the subject made by the Committee on the Judiciary shall be approved by the Senate, it is submitted that there may be no need of any further consideration by the Senate of that bill.

The committee recommend as a substitute for all the bills above mentioned and pending before it the following:

"Be it enacted, etc., That any State which now has or hereafter shall have a cause of action against the United States, which, as between individuals, would be cognizable in a court of justice, is hereby authorized to sue the United States thereon in the Supreme Court of the United States. The United States shall have the right in any such suit to interpose any counterclaim, set-off, equitable, or other defense which could be made by the defendant were such suit between individuals.

"SEC. 2. Process against and notices to the United States in any such suit may be served upon the Attorney General."

And the same is now reported to the Senate with the recommendation that the same do pass as S. 5126, and that the said S. 902, S. 4059, and S. J. Res. 68 be indefinitely postponed.

The judicial power of the United States as fixed by the Constitution extends "to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States; between a State and citizens of another State; between citizens of different States; between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States; and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects."

The Constitution further provides that—

"In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, and those in which a State shall be a party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make." (Art. 3, sec. 2.)

By the eleventh amendment these powers were restricted as follows:

"The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State."

It has been held that the United States can sue a State in an original suit brought in the Supreme Court of the United States. (136 U. S., 211; 143 U. S., 621.)

In the latter case, on page 643, the court says:

"The words in the Constitution, 'in all cases * * * in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction,' necessarily refer to all cases mentioned in the preceding clause in which a State may be made, of right, a party defendant, or in which a State may, of right, be a party plaintiff.'"

These cases settle beyond all question the constitutional power of the Supreme Court of the United States to determine any suit in which a State may be a plaintiff or defendant, as well as the proposition that the United States can sue a State in the Supreme Court of the United States. The anomalous rule of allowing the United States to sue a State without the reciprocal right of a State to sue the United States rests upon the doctrine that a sovereign can not be sued without its consent, and that the States gave their consent to have suits brought against them by a sister State, or by the United States, when they came into the Union and ratified the Constitution. (143 U. S., 646.) But the United States has not given its consent to be made a defendant, and the purpose of the bills before us and of this substitute bill is to grant that consent.

The question presented is whether or not it is right, just, and expedient to grant that consent. In the above-cited case of the United States v. Texas the question at issue was the boundary line between Texas and the Territory of Oklahoma. It seems that the whole of Greer County governed by Texas was involved, Texas claiming that the county was within the boundary of that State and the United States claiming that it was within the Territory of Oklahoma. The Supreme Court decided that a proper running of the boundary line put Greer County within the Territory of Oklahoma, and thereupon the claim of Texas was held to be erroneous and she was deprived of the jurisdiction which she had theretofore exercised over the county. The effect of the judgment was to transfer the land and people of the whole county from the jurisdiction of the State of Texas to the jurisdiction of the Territory of Oklahoma. If it had happened, by a similar mistake of running the boundary line, that Greer County had been erroneously placed under the jurisdiction of the Territory of Oklahoma, the State of Texas would have been helpless, except by an appeal to Congress, to correct the mistake. No reason has been assigned, and, as we think, no reason can be assigned, why, in this kind of a controversy, the State should not have the same right to appeal to the judicial power of the United States and to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court for relief. If the sovereign State of Texas could be compelled to release its jurisdiction of a whole county by virtue of a judgment and decree of the Supreme Court, then it would seem only fair, if the position of the parties were reversed, that the Federal Government should be compelled, by the exercise of the same judicial power, to submit to a full legal investigation and to the decree and judgment which would follow the ascertainment of the facts.

The Senate has very recently passed an act granting to the State of Nevada a large tract of land for the benefit of its school fund. The same kind of grant has been made to other States. Under the terms of the grant to Nevada the State makes certain selections and locations under a plan set forth in the act. After the State shall make the selection and location it is entirely possible that there may arise a conflict due to one construction by an engineer or other subordinate officer of the Interior Department on the one side and a claim of the State on the other. If the State shall get upon the wrong side of any such controversy, the United States can fix the boundary and recover her rights by a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States against the State of Nevada. But if it should so happen that the United States through its officer should claim and occupy any part of the land granted to the State, the latter is left to the arbitrary judgment of the Department of the Interior, right or wrong, and has no recourse to any court.

A bill is pending in the Senate to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto (H. R. 408). Section 13 of that bill provides:

"That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water."

But suppose rights are claimed by the State, which rights are, in fact, invaded by the execution of the law of Congress. This might make a controversy between the State and the United States. There would be no trouble for the United States to get relief by a suit in the Supreme Court; but the State, however much its rights might be trampled upon by an executive officer, will be relegated to the tedious processes of Congress for relief.

Instances could be multiplied of the need of this reciprocal right of the States to sue the Federal Government. When we recall that the United States has had dealings with States and that contractual relations exist by virtue of acts of Congress and grants of lands, and that controversies have already arisen over boundaries, trust funds, and mutual obligations arising out of these acts and out of actual contracts, it seems that the question whether or not the Federal Government should be compelled to give the States the right to bring suit against it on the grounds of fairness and justice must be answered in the affirmative.

The Federal Government is a sovereign, but so is each of the States. Except so far as they have by the Constitution granted powers to the Federal Government, the States are supreme. Therefore the same reasons which can be urged against compelling the United States to submit to being made a defendant in the Supreme Court could be urged on behalf of each one of the States.

In the case of the United States v. Texas (143 U. S., 648), in a dissenting opinion by Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Lamar, the position is taken that the United States can not sue a State in an original suit in the Supreme Court. This dissenting opinion makes no reference to the case of The United States v. North Carolina (136 U. S., 211), wherein the original jurisdiction of the Supreme Court was exercised without question; and the only significance to this dissenting opinion is that, as late as 1891, it was seriously denied that the United States could sue a State without the latter's consent.

But for the eleventh amendment the States would have been compelled to submit to suits brought by individuals, because the original grant of judicial power was broad enough to embrace such controversies. (Chisholm v. Georgia, 2 Dall., 419.) This latter decision, holding that a State may be sued in the Supreme Court by a citizen of another State and that judgment may be rendered in default of an appearance, was made in February, 1793. As a direct result of this decision, on the 5th of March, 1794, a resolution of Congress was passed submitting the eleventh amendment to the States for ratification. It is hardly worth while to consider to what extent the States then recognized the right of the Federal Government to sue them in an original suit in the Supreme Court of the United States; but it is altogether probable that had the right been then asserted the eleventh amendment would have contained a provision to compel the United States to submit to a suit by a State to the same extent that the State could be sued by the Federal Government. It must be borne in mind that nowhere in the Constitution is there an express consent given by the States to a suit brought by the United States. That consent is inferred from section 3, article 2. (143 U. S., 646.)

In the last case cited the Supreme Court held that the States, having adopted the Constitution, "agreed" to the grant of judicial power and original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court in all cases "in which a State shall be a party," without excluding those in which the United States may be the opposite party, and that, therefore, the exercise of original jurisdiction in a suit brought by the United States against a State was not infringing upon the sovereignty of the State, but was "with the consent of the State sued."

It is too late to argue that by the grant of judicial power the States did not mean to create the anomalous condition that if there were mutual accounts between them and the United States which could not be adjusted out of court the State must wait for the Federal Government to bring a suit before it could file its sets-off. The thought constantly recurs, however, that the decisions leave the relations between the Federal Government and the States in the position that if the United States should sue a State upon an account the State might file a set-off which would more than avail to defeat the claim of the United States, and yet might not have a judgment over for the difference between the claim of the plaintiff and that of the defendant. The above considerations make it clear that there are no constitutional reasons why this bill should not pass. The grant of judicial power extends to "controversies to which the United States shall be a party." The Supreme Court has held that because original jurisdiction is given in those suits "to which a State shall be a party" the United States may sue a State in the Supreme Court.

It is the opinion of this committee that justice is denied when one party can sue and the other can not. It can not long obtain that the United States can sue a State, denying the reciprocal right to the State, without engendering a feeling of distrust, suspicion, and envy which is not conducive to patriotism and cordiality. The sovereign dignity of the States is as much their pride as is the sovereign dignity of the United States. The judicial construction which has evolved an actual consent of sovereign States to be sued by the Federal Government by an interpretation of article 3, section 2, of the Constitution, has clearly created an anomalous and unfair, if not a dangerous, situation. We hear much these days of the rights of States. All admit that in so far as power has not been granted by the Constitution the States are supreme, but the fear is often expressed that gradually the Federal Government is encroaching upon the rights of the States. Is not this one-sided right to invoke the judicial power, in controversies between the Nation and the States, an instance of such an encroachment, as well as a needless denial of justice?

The suggestion is made that this Republic, composed of 48 sovereign States, each with equal dignity and right, and all, outside of the granted powers in the Constitution, real sovereigns, has so construed the grant of judicial power and of jurisdiction to the Supreme Court as to leave the States, in their contractual relations with the Federal Government, but half sovereigns. A national tribunal has been created which has jurisdiction over all suits to which a State may be a party, and yet the States are in the humiliating position of being compelled to submit to a suit brought by the Federal Government without the reciprocal right of compelling the Government to submit to a suit brought by a State in the same kind of a controversy. In other words, the Federal Government, one sovereign, can compel the State, another sovereign, to keep the latter's obligations; but, no matter how solemn may be the duty and the obligation of the Federal Government, the State is powerless to enforce it. Does not such a condition imply a misconception of the purposes and objects to be attained in giving original jurisdiction to the Supreme Court? How can we expect the States to be satisfied, to feel that security which comes only with the consciousness of justice, when the enforcement of justice is one-sided and arbitrary?

The general grant of judicial power in suits in which the United States may be a party and the grant of original jurisdiction in the Supreme Court in a suit in which a State shall be a party have been so construed as to read that "the judicial power shall extend to suits to which the United States shall be a party plaintiff," whereas the Constitution meant to create a tribunal to try cases in which the United States is a "party."

The substitute bill will put into operation the full judicial power granted by the Constitution.

Upon the grounds of expediency, nothing can be urged against this bill except the possibility of the United States having to defend many suits. Such a claim is an indictment of each one of the 48 States of the Union. It is unfair to the States and entirely inconsistent with their sovereign dignity to presuppose that any of them will attempt to implead the United States except in a controversy which has received careful consideration and which can not be adjusted except by an appeal to the highest court in the land and is of such importance as to demand that judgment.

It might as well be argued that the United States would, upon slight cause, harass the States as it is to contend that the States would, except in the utmost good faith, sue the United States. The States act by the authority of their legislative bodies and through their executive departments. There is nothing in the past history of the government of the States to justify the belief that the legislature of a State would authorize a suit to be brought against the Federal Government unless it was concerning a matter of great importance which could be settled in no other way. If the Federal Government has not abused its right of suit against the States, so we may well conclude the States will not abuse the proposed legislation. The 48 sovereigns of the United States may well be trusted to confine their suits brought under the proposed legislation to matters which comport with the dignity of the Supreme Court and the high regard which the people of the country have for that tribunal.

In the opinion of this committee, the proposed legislation will make for peace, contentment, and good feeling. The Supreme Court of the United States is the national tribunal. It now tries controversies between States involving all sorts of questions of boundary and mutual obligations. (N. J. v. N. Y., 5 Peters, 284; R. I. v. Mass., 12 Peters, 657; Mo. v. Iowa, 7 How., 660; Fla. v. Ga., 17 How., 478; Ala. v. Ga., 23 How., 505; Mo. v. Ky., 11 Wall., 395; Va. v. W. Va., 11 Wall., 39; Nebr. v. Iowa, 143 U. S., 359.)

An investigation of the record in those suits will show that they were not instituted for slight cause, but that the controversies embrace matters which were in good faith in dispute between the parties and were of such dignity and importance as to demand decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. There is nothing in any of these cases to warrant the suggestion that the States acted hastily in bringing the suits. It is submitted that to legislate upon the assumption that one sovereign State of this Union would abuse the jurisdiction of the United States court is entirely out of harmony with the history of this country, the conduct of the States in the past, and is almost insulting to the sovereign dignity of the States.

The proposed legislation limits the suits which can be brought under its provisions to those which would be cognizable in a court of justice "between individuals." That clause was intended to exclude any chance of involving a political right or claim as the subject matter of a suit. There was inserted in the bill the right of the United States in any such suit to interpose any counterclaim, set-off, equitable or other defense, which could be made by the defendant were such suit between individuals. One of the purposes of that clause was to make it perfectly clear that where the questions involved would be the settling of accounts there could be no doubt of the right of the United States to interpose any matter which might make the settlement complete.

In the case of Virginia v. West Virginia (220 U. S., 27) the Supreme Court held that in suits between States—

"The case is to be considered in the untechnical spirit proper for dealing with a quasi-international controversy, remembering that there is no municipal code governing the matter, and that this court may be called on to adjust differences that can not be dealt with by Congress or disposed of by the legislature of either State alone."

And in Kansas v. Colorado (206 U. S., 46) the court said:

"In a qualified sense and to a limited extent the separate States are sovereign and independent, and the relations between them partake something of the nature of international law."

Inasmuch as the court announced this principle upon the ground that the parties to the suit were sovereigns, the same rule would apply in controversies between the United States and a State.

In the case of Virginia v. West Virginia (220 U. S.) it was held that in the exercise of its original jurisdiction the Supreme Court is not bound by any special rule or by any particular form of pleading, but that it could exercise its original jurisdiction in its own way. Suits brought under the proposed act would, of course, be governed by this rule.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that while I shall not object to the consideration of this bill at this time, I am opposed to the bill, and shall vote against it, and was not in favor of it in the committee.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, with reference to the statement of the Senator from Georgia as to the attitude of the committee, I will state that there was opposition to the bill in the committee, and there was a roll call on it, if I remember correctly. I think it was only reported favorably by a majority of one, but of that I am not quite sure. I voted against it in the committee, and I shall be compelled to vote against it if it comes up for action; but I do not object at all to its present consideration.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I should like just for a minute to make an explanation. I think the Committee on the Judiciary has put in more time upon this subject than probably upon any other matter that has been before it, certainly since I have had the honor to be a member of that committee. I do not wish to take up the time. Certainly this matter has been considered enough, and I do think the Senate ought to act now, and the bill ought to be passed. As the law now is the Government can sue a State, but a State can not sue the Government. In other words, only a part of the judicial power granted by the Constitution to the Supreme Court can be exercised. The report which I have filed explains the situation; and as we are working now under unanimous consent and the five-minute rule, I desist in the hope that a vote may be taken before the time shall expire.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall oppose this bill, but in view of the objections that are made I should like to give the subject a little further consideration. I think I shall object to its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (H. R. 54) to pension widows and minor children of officers and enlisted men who served in the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, or in China was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHILTON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 655) to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHILTON. Let that bill go over.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator to give me an opportunity to explain the bill to him for a moment? Then, if he wants to object——

Mr. CHILTON. No; there is no use of taking further time with the calendar. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4256) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit national banks located near the boundary line of adjoining States, subject to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, to select only a majority, instead of three-fourths, of their directors from residents of the State in which they are respectively located was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHILTON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. CHILTON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 5221) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pension the following-named persons at the rates named:

Cornelius A. Ahearne, late acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, $12 per month.

Eliza J. Crittenden, widow of Charles Crittenden, late of Company I, Twenty-fifth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Delia Carey, widow of Michael Carey, late of Company I, Seventh Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Susan Bryant, widow of George Bryant, late of Company D, First Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Lucy Babcock, widow of Aaron E. Babcock, late of Company B, Sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Walter H. Hutchinson, late first lieutenant Company A, Ninety-ninth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Joseph W. Crowell, late of Company D, First Battalion Nebraska Veteran Volunteer Cavalry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mary Megrady, former widow of Edward Haney, late of Company B, Fourteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry, $12 per month.

Luther W. Garrett, late of Company D, One hundred and forty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

William M. Dern, late of Company A, Forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

James Cronan, late of Company C, Forty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Jeremiah Cramer, late of Company D, One hundred and fifty-second Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Francisco Wadsworth, late of Company C, First Regiment Maine Volunteer Cavalry, $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD B. CRAIG.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 87) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Edward B. Craig, as collector of internal revenue of the collection district of Tennessee, in the sum of $2,034.89, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue documentary stamps which were taken from the office of said collector by an act of burglary, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Edward B. Craig, as collector of internal revenue for the collection district of Tennessee, in the sum of $2,034.89, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue documentary stamps which, on the night of June 23, 1915, were, by an act of burglary, taken from the safe in which the same had been properly deposited while in the custody and care of said collector.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is nearly 2 o'clock. At that time we must take up the unfinished business. I am unwilling to pass from the call of the calendar without expressing an earnest dissent from the action of the Senate taking up the calendar under Rule VIII and limiting by motion action upon bills on the calendar to those bills to the consideration of which no objection is made.

Of course, the calendar can be called under Rule VIII, and by unanimous consent the consideration may be limited to bills to which there is no objection. The rule provides that at the conclusion of the morning business, unless otherwise ordered by the Senate, the Senate shall consider the calendar of bills until 2 o'clock, and that the consideration shall be of bills and resolutions not objected to, and "the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings, but upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration."

The right by motion to continue the consideration of a bill objected to is expressly given in this rule of the Senate.

The right at any time under the rules is given at the conclusion of the morning business to move to proceed to the consideration of any measure ripe for consideration in the Senate, and this right can not be withdrawn over objection; it can only be withdrawn temporarily through a unanimous consent.

Is it not therefore clear that the rules of the Senate forbid the limitation of consideration of bills on the calendar to bills unobjected to, except where by unanimous consent the limitation is made?

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I have a precedent to which I could cite the Senate, but the Senator says he does not desire to discuss it, and I will not cite it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Utah is right in saying that there is a precedent, but it is a very bad precedent.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to refer to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 7617.

Mr. WORKS obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from California yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to ask the Senator having the bill in charge if he would not agree to lay aside the unfinished business for an hour in order to finish the calendar? I do not believe it would take over an hour, and then to-morrow, immediately after the routine morning business, he can call up the bill he has in charge for the balance of the day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Utah can call up the calendar to-morrow morning at the close of the routine business.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be very much easier to take up the unfinished business instead of the calendar at that time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the Senator from Utah will allow us to proceed with the bill. I do not feel that I can yield under the circumstances, and I must insist upon proceeding with it.

Mr. SMOOT. I regret that the Senator so decides.

GOOD ROADS.

The Senate as in Committee of the Whole resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I had intended to speak upon the pending bill to-day, but I am not in a physical condition to do so. I wish to give notice that to-morrow, after the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], I shall address the Senate upon the pending bill.

Mr. WORKS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for about an hour and a half, he said:

Mr. President, I expected to complete what I had to say this afternoon, but the interruptions that have occurred have taken much of the time, and I am feeling somewhat weary, so I will ask the Senate to allow me to complete these remarks to-morrow or at some later time. I desire next to go into the question of the legality of this effort to appropriate the public funds. I presume there are other Senators who are ready to go on, so that no time will be lost. For that reason I will suspend here and give notice that I will proceed with what I have to say to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] desires to speak next. He is not in the Chamber. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bankhead	Kenyon	Overman	Sterling
Borah	Kern	Page	Stone
Brady	La Follette	Pittman	Swanson
Burleigh	Lane	Poindexter	Taggart
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Thompson
Chilton	Lewis	Ransdell	Tillman
Cummins	Lodge	Reed	Underwood
Curtis	McCumber	Robinson	Walsh
Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Warren
Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard	Williams
Hollis	Myers	Simmons	Works
Husting	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Johnson, Me.	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smith, Mich.

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to the bill, which I should like to present to the Senate at this time. The bill in the first part provides that the Nation shall pay half and that the States shall pay the other half for the construction of these roads. I have drawn a provision which fits into the bill very well. It is after the word "roads," on page 6, line 22, to insert these words:

By the payment of one-fourth of the total cost of any such road, in the manner and upon the condition hereinafter provided, whenever individuals, the county, and State in such such road is situate shall each have contributed an amount equal to one-fourth of the estimated cost thereof.

Mr. President, the object of this amendment is, first, to get twice as much road built with the money that is contributed by the National Government. Instead of the Government paying one-half it is to pay one-fourth, and the balance of the cost is made up by contributions of the State, the county, and individuals.

The second object of the amendment is to provide that individuals shall subscribe, and therefore have a personal interest in the construction of the road, which will prevent unworthy enterprises from being undertaken. When it comes to the pocketbook men will not agree to pay their own money to construct a road unless it is necessary.

So those are the two objects which it seems to me this amendment will serve in the bill.

Now, as to the first one, the one-fourth and the one-half contribution, I want to say that the tables that are shown in the report and the tables that are found in the World Almanac as to the amount of money that is contributed for road building are perfectly astonishing. Individuals, counties, and States now contribute enormous sums of money to road building. The report estimates that $300,000,000 last year was contributed for these purposes. The World Almanac shows in detail that there was contributed in the year 1914, $249,055,068 by States, counties, and individuals. The bill appropriates simply $5,000,000 for the first year, $10,000,000 for the second year, $15,000,000 for the third year, $20,000,000 for the fourth year, and $25,000,000 for the fifth year.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator the aggregate amount contributed by individuals?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the total is not divided. I will state to the Senator that the experience we had in the State of Colorado——

Mr. GALLINGER. Before the Senator proceeds to give that information I wish to say I have had a little experience in trying to raise money for various public purposes, and my impression is that the amount which will be contributed by individuals will be negligible.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The experience in Colorado is directly contrary to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is true that individuals will not subscribe where they have to pay for all the road. That is true; but where they get a large contribution from the State, a large contribution from the county, they readily respond.

This is the experience which I had with the legislature of our State: It passed laws appropriating certain amounts of money in large sums for the construction of roads between certain points on condition that the counties should contribute a like amount and the individuals benefited would pay a like amount. For instance, there is one road I have in mind to which the State contributed $5,000. The county immediately contributed $5,000. The individuals found that $15,000 would not build the road and so they contributed $10,000, and did it readily.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Were not those instances where the road was built to some resort or to some club or to some golf links where people of means were willing to put up some money to make it a little pleasanter to get there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, sir; it was built between two towns. The money that is to be subscribed by individuals need not be along the line of the road absolutely. It can be subscribed by citizens in each town to some extent, but the people who raise the money will do so all along the line and in towns also.

Mr. President, when you go to a farmer in the country or to an individual in a city and say, "We want you to contribute to build a road between certain points," he will ask, "What help do we get?" If there is no help, they do not do it. The result is that the road is not built. But as quick as you say that the State will help, that the Nation will help, that the county will help, then you will find that people will be eager to get those roads and eager to contribute their share to build them. It is on that account that I believe if you make it one-fourth that the Nation is to contribute you will get many times more roads where the people are willing to have them constructed under it, and in the end you are bound to get twice the length of road by reason of this provision.

Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the enormous amount spent upon roads in the various States. There are only two States in the Union that have their roads surfaced to the extent of 50 per cent. The State of Massachusetts has 51 per cent; the State of Rhode Island has a little over 50 per cent. The Western States have a very small percentage of their roads surfaced. But, Mr. President, it is marvelous how much has been contributed by individuals, counties, and States in the construction of roads. Take, for instance, Arizona. She contributed last year $1,009,733 for the construction of roads.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator will permit me, and the Government owning about 50 per cent in permanent reservations from which the State gets nothing.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I fully concur in the statement that there is a great outrage done to Arizona by reason of these permanent reservations upon which the State can not raise a dollar by taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator's amendment relieve the Government from paying for the roads proposed in the bill from one-half to one-quarter?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; the amount appropriated is $5,000,000. Now, the question is how much road building can we get for that $5,000,000? If you make the United States Government put up half, you will get only half the quantity of roads that you would get by making it a quarter. I should like to make it less, because I believe you could get that much more road building from this fund, but inasmuch as there are only about four organizations that could contribute, namely, the Government itself, the State, the county, and then the individuals, or cities on the road, it seems to me that we are getting as much as we can out of this bill in the shape of road building. Does the Senator from Utah desire to ask any further question?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the bill before me, but on reading the amendment it looks to me as though the effect of the amendment will be just the opposite.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; if you turn to the bill which I have here you can readily see that it is immaterial what proportion comes in. Section 3 provides:

That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the sum of $5,000,000—

And so forth. That is the amount. Now, how far can we make that appropriation go? If you are going to make the General Government pay one-half of the cost of the road, then you can see you will have one-half as much of the road constructed, whereas if you make the division one-fourth you will have double the amount of road building.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator was mentioning the percentage of State highway mileage. Did he mention Massachusetts?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. LODGE. It is 51 per cent.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir. I have before me the amount of funds contributed by the States and by local contributions of all kinds to road building. Massachusetts spent $6,020,609 on roads in 1914. She has 8,908 miles of road surfaced. She has 17,272 miles of public roads, improved and unimproved, which makes 51.7 per cent of the roads of that State that are surfaced and in good condition.

Mr. LODGE. That is the amount of State highway mileage, what are called good roads.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator believe that he has afforded the Government too small a proportion? My idea is that many States would not accept the red tape and trouble and expense, and so forth, connected with having a partnership with the United States, where the United States paid only a quarter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not think so. I think the result of this will be that you will get double the road building.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me answer the suggestion of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me further, I am of the opinion that the Senator is going to defeat his own object in placing the percentages along the line which he has indicated.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think the State of Colorado, and I am taking the States as they present themselves——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I can take any State here and demonstrate that the State is now putting up twenty times as much money as it will get from the Federal Government. Surely, if in the year 1914 it put up twenty times as much, there would be no trouble in putting up the balance of this money in the way of getting roads built partially by the Federal Government. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to say, apropos of what the Senator from Wyoming has stated that nearly all the States are doing more or less road building. I can not conceive that it is possible that any State would ever refuse to aid the contribution from the Federal Government.

Mr. WARREN. In contribution, but what about the things that go with it by the terms of the bill, in the matter of management and consultation and delay, and so forth?

Mr. POMERENE. It requires no more expense to manage the building of a road which is built totally by the State authorities than it does when it is built in partnership with the Federal Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the fact that Ohio is a good illustration. Ohio built, in the year 1914, $11,261,880 worth of roads. The portion which would come to the State of Ohio by reason of this bill is inconsiderable compared to that sum. The amount which it would receive the first year under this bill would be simply $118,000. Is it possible when it gets $118,000 that it would not put up the other three-fourths in road building, and if it put up three-fourths would not the amount of construction be twice as much as if it put up only half? Certainly it would.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then why not make it one-twentieth?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The trouble is when you make it one-twentieth the amount is so small you get from the Federal Government that it would be subject to the objection which the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] just made, namely, the quantity of red tape and things of that kind would make obstacles so great as to make it undesirable to take the trouble.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. POMERENE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I simply wanted to ask the Senator from Colorado what would become of his amendment with the argument he makes in case the individuals he talks about as being so generous refuse to put up their share?

Mr. SHAFROTH. We have not had that condition.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think we have it everywhere.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not think so, but I am perfectly willing in that contingency to say that these three—State, county, and individuals—shall do it. Now, what proportion the State wants to undertake or what proportion the county wants to take in that event, it seems to me, is immaterial to us, perhaps, although I think there ought to be an element here of the individual subscribing, because it is going to be a check upon the pork-barrel construction. Whenever you have individuals interested, then unquestionably you will get constructed a road that ought to be built. But if you are going to have simply the States contribute with the National Government it will depend upon who has got the best pull in order to get a road built, and roads may be built that are unnecessary by reason of that. The element of individual subscription is most valuable in getting a good road. Now I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has answered the question which I intended to ask as to whether he would have these subscriptions voluntary or compulsory under the law.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, voluntary.

Mr. POMERENE. In my own State the plan we have adopted, when it comes to the permanent construction of roadways, is that the State contributes 50 per cent, the county 25 per cent, the township 15 per cent, and the other 10 per cent is assessed against the property which may be benefited.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In our part of the country there has been no occasion for assessment against property. If you make the proportion small which the individuals must contribute, it will be that much easier for the individuals. I am not wedded to these particular proportions, although I do believe there ought to be an element of personal interest in individuals in order to get roads that are worth being constructed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator from Colorado agreed to the statement made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] that the roads could be built under the supervision of the Government as cheaply as they could under the supervision of the States. If that ever happens it will be the reversal of all the work that has been undertaken by our Government in the States.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I do not believe the roads can be built under the supervision of the Government in the Western States as cheaply as they can be built under the supervision of the States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I agree with you.

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that the provision of the bill is very much better than the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado for this reason.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But that does not affect my amendment. It does not affect what you are going to do. I adopt the other provision of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that; but I was going to tell the Senator why I think the half is better than the quarter plan. The State receives just so much money out of the proposed appropriation, and it takes just so much money to build a mile of road. If the Government of the United States pays the State of Ohio, for instance, $180,000 out of the first year's appropriation, they might just as well pay half as one-quarter, and complete the road as far as it will go upon that basis and then there would only be the control of the Government over that length of road. But if the State wants to extend its road building beyond what the Government appropriation will build, and can raise money in any way for the extension, as the State of Ohio has done in the past, the Government paying one-half the cost would not prevent it from doing so and the road so extended; the State would have control of the road and would not be under the Government supervision.

Mr. POMERENE. I think I failed to make myself clear or the Senator from Utah did not understand me. I do not mean to say that these roads are to be built under the control of the Federal Government. I think the State authorities should have general supervision.

Mr. SMOOT. But the bill does not provide that.

Mr. POMERENE. It does in substance. In any event, my thought is that these funds are only provided where the plans may be subject to the approval of the Government here.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. But that the general work, the actual construction, shall be under the State or county authorities, as the case may be.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think that is the provision of the bill. The work is to be done by the State under the supervision of the State. The general plan is to be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States, through their respective State highway departments, in the construction of rural post roads.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true, but the actual work is to be done under the supervision of the State.

Now, Mr. President, I want to answer the objection just made by the Senator from Utah with respect to this one-half and one-fourth contribution. He says let the National Government contribute half on the highway construction and then let the individual, the county, or the State do the balance of the road. Suppose you have enough money by the National Government contribution to construct 10 miles of road and suppose the others contribute one-half. On that basis only 10 miles of road are constructed. When only one-fourth of the cost is contributed by the Nation out of its appropriation to that State it will construct 20 miles. Now that is a great advantage to the people of the State along the 20 miles. If the National Government pays one-half, then those persons who are living along that 10 miles of road will only have to put up a small part for their own private use and the people on the other 10 miles will have to pay double in order to get a road along their land.

Here is a proposition that by the payment of the National Government's one-half, 10 miles of road can be constructed. If that is true, the State and the counties and the people contribute only one-half of the amount. Suppose the Nation contributes one-fourth, then 20 miles will be constructed. If 10 miles only are constructed, as the Senator from Utah suggests, then the other 10 miles can be built by private subscription, but they will have to build it at their own expense, and they will not do it at all. Now, I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have been in vain endeavoring to understand the Senator's logic. He has asserted again and again that if the General Government contributes but one-fourth, twice as many miles will be constructed and paid for.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The reason is simply this, and it is very plain, it seems to me. Where the Nation contributes one-fourth and you require somebody else to contribute three-fourths, you will build twice as much road. If you pay one-fourth of it out of the National Treasury and compel the other people to contribute three-fourths, you can readily see that under this bill there will be twice as much constructed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator means, as I understand him, that for the same amount of Federal cash you get twice as much road in one instance as you will in the other.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; that is my idea.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if I may——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. The question arose a moment ago as to whether this construction should be done by the State or the Federal authority. Let me call the attention of the Senator from Utah to that portion of section 6, on page 12, beginning with line 15, which reads:

The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws, and under the direct supervision of the State highway department, subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to this act.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is right, and that is as I understand it; but all the work will be subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado what difference it makes if we are going to build a road, say, from Tucson to Nogales, in Arizona? It is the scheme to build a road between two towns. They estimate immediately what the Government will give. We know before that road starts that we will have to give all that is necessary to build it except what the Government itself contributes. Then, in the scheme of every road you start it is absolutely immaterial. The only materiality is as to how much they get from the Government. So the mere proportion has nothing whatever to do with the amount of road that the State will build.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In answer to the Senator's inquiry I will state that, in my judgment, directly the contrary takes place. It seems to me to be plain that if 10 miles of road can be constructed by the Government under this bill upon a contribution of one-half, if it requires the people and the county and the State to contribute three-fourths and the National Government one-fourth, the result will be that they will get 20 miles of road constructed under this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I fail to put my question fully. There are between a number of these towns nothing but Government reservations lying, and there is nobody living on them, and no one can live on them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. You will find that the condition will be that Nogales will want to contribute something under that. You will find that they will make a contribution without any trouble or without any difficulty.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. Referring to the particular question put by the Senator from Arizona, would not this be the result: If we constructed roads hereafter from one town to the other and the Government contributed one half, there would be a part of the people, if there was a law similar to the one in Ohio, who would have to make up the other half?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. There are no people there to pay.

Mr. NORRIS. The land is there; there is something to put the road on.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Government owns the land.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, I suppose there will be an amendment that the Government will have to contribute something, and I am not sure but that it ought, in States where the Government owns the land. If we had a law similar to the Ohio law, that is what would take place. The result would be that the owners of land on that portion of a particular road would have more to pay than the owners of land on other portions that the Government had to construct.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It would be unfair as to them.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; it would be unfair. So, when the Senator spreads the Government contribution out over the entire length of the road, he makes everybody who has to contribute something equal in his contribution.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In some years past the only contributions that were made in the construction of roads were by individuals, by working upon the road. That was a great hardship upon the individuals. It is true it was mostly in labor, but, nevertheless, inasmuch as other people use the roads, it was proper and right that other people, living in distant parts even, should pay certain parts for the construction of the road. Then there was a township element that entered into the contribution. This whole country has been developed very largely by the contribution of individuals and counties. It has been only in recent years that at least any large number of States have been contributing anything to the construction of roads. This has grown so that the States are contributing large amounts. In my State a constitutional amendment was adopted which provides for the levy of a certain number of mills upon the taxable property of the State, which brings a return of $600,000 each year. When you take into consideration what else is paid there, you will find that the State of Colorado spent in the year 1914 on roads $2,601,449. The amount which Colorado would get under this bill during the first year would be $86,000. What proportion is $86,000 to $2,601,449? Is it possible that if the contributions were divided into fourths, so that the National Government would contribute one-fourth only, that the other three-fourths would not be raised by those counties and individuals and States, when right now they are contributing twenty times as much as this bill would give to the States?

It seems to me there is no other difficulty. You will find that citizens have objected to putting money into roads because they had to do it all. That is the reason, and whenever they get an opportunity to receive some aid or some assistance in the way of a State or county contribution they have readily cooperated with the county. When you add one-fourth by the National Government you will find the success of this bill will be largely increased in enlarging and doubling the amount of road building there will be under this bill for the same amount of money that is contained in the appropriation made in the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if Colorado is raising the amount of money he mentions, which she is able to do, why should the Government contribute at all to build her roads?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are contributing a considerable amount of money it is true, and by the people taxing themselves for it. It is quite a burden, and I believe the Federal Government ought to assist. I think it is of benefit to the Federal Government. I think from the standpoint of post roads and of military roads and a number of standpoints, and for the interest of interstate commerce, it is a matter of concern in which the National Government ought to contribute. These States, of course, pay these amounts in preference to not having the roads. It simply shows their interest in the roads.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the fact that even in a rural district where you have a road that is to be constructed you will find that if the individuals have got to do it alone they will say no. Some enterprising individual may say "I will put the road through for a distance of 5 miles," and sometimes they do.

But, Mr. President, whenever you get cooperation, whenever you can make it so that a good road will pass a man's farm and he will pay but one-fourth of the amount for its construction, you will find that he will readily cooperate and join with the Government, and that you will have a good deal more road building than if you had to rely solely upon the individual. That being the case, it seems to me that to provide that the proportion which the United States Government shall pay shall be one-fourth instead of one-half is vastly to the advantage of good road building.

Mr. President, the logic of the position of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] would be good if it were to the effect that you would get but half of the amount appropriated. That is true. If, for instance, we should say that we would appropriate only for two roads then, whether 50 per cent or 25 per cent would be paid for the roads, if the amount were limited by the division of one-fourth or one-half, the Senator's logic would be good; but here is the exact amount appropriated—$5,000,000 the first year. What is that? It is a mere bagatelle compared to what the State, by reason of the contributions by the State government, by the county governments, and by individuals——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Why does not the Senator from Colorado make the amount to be contributed by the Government one-twelfth or one-twentieth? I will say that the amount which will go from the Government to the States under this bill will not amount to more than one-twentieth of the amount which the States expend in road building.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; that is so.

Mr. SMOOT. Then why not make the amount one-twentieth? If the Senator wants to cover more miles of road by his proposed amendment, that is the way to do it. Let us extend it as far as possible. I believe if the Senator will look at the figures showing the amount of money expended by the States in road building, he will ascertain that nearly every State in the Union has spent twenty times more than the amount which the bill, in case it becomes a law, provides shall go to the States.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is true; but I want to answer that argument by a statement which the Senator from Utah made a little while ago. He said the reason the States will not contribute in this case and will not come into the plan is because of the red tape necessary in order to get money from the National Government; that for that reason they would not do it; and if you make the proportion too small, there is not any doubt but what that would be the case.

Mr. President, you can readily see what would be the result. Suppose a man owned a farm lying along a road which he desired improved, or on which rural postal service was desired, and the question arose as to whether or not the Government would contribute one-twentieth, he would say "that does not amount to much, and I will not go into it"; but if you say that the Government will pay one-fourth, that the State government will contribute one-fourth, and that the county government will contribute one-fourth, he would say "I will get a good road which passes my land for one-fourth of its cost; that will improve my land." It would then be to his interest financially to subscribe to the plan.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. TAGGART. Under the Senator's amendment, as I understand, the State, the county, and individuals are respectively to pay a quarter of the expense of the construction of roads and the Federal Government the other quarter?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAGGART. In some of the States which do not have highway commissions they have no right, as I understand, to levy a State road tax. In order to meet the requirements of the Senator's amendment, would it not be necessary that the constitutions of such States should be changed in order that the States might impose a State road tax? In our own State of Indiana we have a township tax and a county tax, but we have no right to impose a road tax on account of not having a State highway commission. So that the Senator's amendment for the building of roads there would not be applicable, so far as the State part of it is concerned.

The question I want to put to the Senator is whether, in case a State was not able to levy such a tax or had to change its constitution so as to get its quarter, and the individual should not pay his quarter, what would become of the Senator's amendment so far as the building of roads is concerned?

Mr. SHAFROTH. This bill contemplates that there will have to be legislation on the part of the State, and the State doubtless can arrange that. In the State of Colorado we have a constitutional amendment which permits a levy of a certain number of mills upon all taxable property of the State. That, however, was not true up to within six years ago. Until that time we had to rely upon general appropriations, just as appropriations are made by Congress here with respect to general matters. The legislature would appropriate so much for a certain road, provided that the county and individuals would subscribe a certain amount.

Mr. TAGGART. But suppose the States which have not at present the power to make the levy contemplated by the Senator's amendment should not pass the appropriate legislation, what would be the result?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Then, in such an event, they will not get the road; that is all. That is the very test. The test is as to whether the road is a good road, whether it is essential that it should be constructed; and you will find that there are enough people who want the advantage of securing the Government fund, who will be glad to get the benefit of it, and will subscribe for the road if it is needed. It is true that heretofore it has been in the richer communities of our State, where the people have been willing to subscribe to road building and where the counties and the States have been willing to subscribe.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I appreciate the patience of the Senator from Colorado in yielding to interruptions, but right at this point I should like to interrupt him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I desire to state a condition which I know applies in may of the Western States where there are but few individuals who could contribute. If they were required to contribute one-fourth, as the Senator's amendment provides, it would impose a burden upon the people which they are unable to bear by individual subscription. That is the condition in my State to-day.

Further, is it thought that the Government under any sort of supervision will permit any county or any State to receive a dollar of the Federal contribution for road construction unless the program for the building of the road, including its location and the points between which it is to be built, is determined and fixed by the Government? Would the amendment be of any benefit under those conditions? While it might help the State of Colorado, it would certainly be injurious to other States. Will it help a particle that Government assistance is based on mileage? The Government will not spend the money to build a road starting from a town and stopping perhaps so abruptly that it will be absolutely worthless.

The only question of any importance to us, so far as our road building is concerned, is the amount of money contributed by the Government. When the Government makes its contribution, and we lay out a plan for a road, and they agree to it, we know we have got by hook or by crook to raise all that the Government does not put up for the enterprise. It matters nothing in the world, except as an embargo on many of the Western States, to change the proportion from the one-half plan proposed by the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. By changing from the half plan to the one-fourth plan, if the amount of money which the Senator from Arizona has stated is to be appropriated, you could have two roads instead of one; that would be the difference.

The conditions in my State are almost identical with those described by the Senator from Arizona as existing in that State. There is not quite as much vacant land in Colorado, but we have large mountainous sections. Roads are built there principally by contributions from towns that want to get access to other parts of the State. Consequently there is no trouble with relation to that matter.

Mr. President, it seems to me that these are the two important things to be attained by this amendment, namely, getting twice as much road building for the same amount of money contributed by the National Government under the bill; and, the second is, getting an individual interest aroused which will prevent people from lobbying with and urging officials to construct roads which are not needed. You will find when an individual contribution is required, if the roads can not be obtained unless the contribution is made, that you will get good roads in every instance.

It is a small amount with which the Government is appropriating. As I have shown here, twenty times as much money is spent in every State in the Union by the State, county, and individuals as the States will get under the appropriations of the bill; yet the amount is going to grow, it is going to be larger and larger each year. If you start upon the basis of one-half, you will find that you will not get much road building. This amendment simply tends to increase the amount of road mileage which will be built.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be adopted. To my mind, it spoils "the whole plan of salvation." So far as this bill is concerned, it is built upon different lines and upon a different theory from that contemplated in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado; and I hope the Senate will promptly dispose of it by voting it down.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was under a misapprehension as to what part of the bill the amendment was offered. I supposed it was an amendment offered to come in on page 11 to strike out "50" and to insert "25." I want to ask the Senator from Alabama why it was or how it was that the committee reached the conclusion that a division on the basis of a 50 per cent contribution was the proper division? I refer to the language on page 11 of the bill, where it is provided that the payment by the Federal Government shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost. Did the committee reach that conclusion after taking evidence or making investigation; and if so, what was it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, this question has been debated both in committee and in the Senate, and the general consensus of opinion has been, so far as I know, that the division provided for in the bill is a proper one; that the Government, if it is going to participate in the building of post roads at all—as the Government is certainly authorized to do, and as it is certainly its duty to do—then it ought to be willing to pay one-half of the cost of the construction. That is the theory upon which the proposition was based.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood that the committee had reached that conclusion, but I was asking my question purely for information, because I have wondered a good while what part of the contribution ought to be made by the National Government. I was wondering if the committee in its investigation had reached that conclusion after some tangible evidence or what their reasons were as to why the division should be made on that basis.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Our reason, as I have already said, was that, after very thorough discussion of the question, we thought it was a fair distribution between the States and the National Government.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I was temporarily out of the Chamber when the Senator from Colorado offered his amendment. From the conversation I had with him in regard to the proposed amendment I was under the impression that he was offering an amendment on page 11, line 21, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

Mr. SHAFROTH. I expect to follow the pending amendment with that amendment; but the amendment which is now pending comes in in the first part of the bill, after the first three lines.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have had it pointed out to me.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I told the Senator from Colorado in our conversation that I had made up my mind to offer an amendment on page 11, in line 21, to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five." If the Senator is going to offer that amendment, of course I will not offer it; and I was under the impression when I came in and heard the debate that that was the pending amendment.

It seems to me that there are serious objections to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado now pending. I believe that the object sought to be accomplished could be fully met by such an amendment as I have indicated, and the questions I have asked the chairmen of the committee have been asked for the purpose of getting light on the subject.

Of course we must draw an arbitrary line somewhere. The committee has drawn it in the bill at 50 per cent. It may be that that is right; but to me it seems that we ought to make the contributions of the Federal Government just as small as we can make it, with a view of having all of the States take advantage of the appropriation. It seems to me that 50 per cent is entirely too large, and that if that were cut in two, and made 25 per cent, instead of 50 per cent, there is no State that would not take advantage of it, and it would result in more road building under the bill than though the bill were left as it is. I will have more to say, however, on that subject when the amendment is offered. At the time I took the floor I was under a misapprehension, and supposed that the amendment to which I have referred was pending. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in discussing that amendment now, if the Senate is anxious to vote on the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Colorado, and which is now pending.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if this amendment is adopted, in my opinion, there will be little road building in any State in the Union.

Mr. GALLINGER. Under this bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Under this bill. It seems to me that it will be almost impossible to get the officials of the county, the officials of a State, and individuals to agree to provide $3 for the Government's $1 to build a road. The State may agree to it and the county not agree to it, or the State and the county may agree to it, and the individuals not agree to it. The amendment provides that each must contribute an amount equal to one-fourth of the estimated cost of the road. Under such a provision the State would not get $1 of appropriations from the Government for building roads unless all agree.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Would the Senator object to a provision that the State, the county, and individuals shall contribute three-fourths?

Mr. SMOOT. That certainly would be better than the present provision.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think the element of money paid by individuals is an important element; but, of course, if the amount could not be obtained under the present provisions of the amendment, it would be better to make it three-fourths from the three sources instead of one-fourth from each source.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator must admit that under the wording of the amendment individuals could prevent any appropriation from the Government for building roads in any State in the Union under this bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; but the individual, above all others, is the one who is interested and wants the road.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, who pays the taxes which the State will contribute? The individual. Who pays the taxes which the county will contribute? The individual.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not a particular individual, but all the individuals.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, no individual will contribute unless he is directly interested in the road and in the locality where it is going to be built. There is no question, of course, so far as the money paid by the State is concerned, that it may be contributed in the form of taxes by individuals in the various counties of the State; but so far as the money that is to be contributed by the county is concerned, nearly all of it will be contributed by individuals who have to contribute the other one-fourth of the amount, and to me it seems that it would be perfectly useless to adopt this amendment, and if it is adopted, in my opinion there will be no road building under this bill.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Utah a question. If a road should cost, for example, $10,000 a mile—and under this bill a road may cost $20,000 a mile and the Government would contribute half of it—but say that a road costs $10,000 a mile and the General Government contributes one-fourth, leaving $7,500 to be divided between the State, the county, and individuals, the individual to pay $2,500, how many individuals does the Senator think would be able to contribute that much as a road tax or how many roads would be built under such conditions?

Mr. SMOOT. Indeed, the question may be asked how many individuals will do that. The contributions will be voluntary; they are not compulsory; and I do not think it would be possible to secure a great many contributions from individuals under this plan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. After the word "roads," in line 22, page 6, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting:

By the payment of one-fourth of the total cost of any such road, in the manner and upon the conditions hereinafter provided, whenever individuals, the county, and State in which such road is situate shall each have contributed an amount equal to one-fourth of the estimated cost thereof.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think this is such an important amendment that we should have a quorum present; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	O'Gorman	Sterling
Bankhead	Jones	Overman	Stone
Brandegee	Kenyon	Page	Swanson
Chilton	Kern	Pomerene	Taggart
Cummins	La Follette	Robinson	Underwood
Curtis	Lewis	Shafroth	Walsh
Gallinger	Lodge	Sheppard	Warren
Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Hollis	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Hughes	Nelson	Smith, Mich.
Johnson, Me.	Norris	Smoot

Mr. WARREN. My colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber to-day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the list of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. LANE, Mr. MYERS, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, and Mr. THOMPSON answered to their names when called.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. BECKHAM, and Mr. BURLEIGH entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to perfect my amendment before it is voted upon. In line 5 of the printed amendment I desire to strike out the word "each," and in line 6 to strike out "one-fourth" and insert "three-fourths," so as to read:

By the payment of one-fourth of the total cost of any such road, in the manner and upon the conditions hereinafter provided, whenever individuals, the county, and State in which such road is situate shall have contributed an amount equal to three-fourths of the estimated cost thereof.

It seems to me that that will bring about twice the road building that will be brought about under the bill in the form in which it was reported, and I offer the amendment in that form.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, as modified, to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, in line 5, after the word "time," it is proposed to add:

Provided, That in States where the constitution prohibits the State from engaging in any work of internal improvements, then the amount of the appropriation under this act apportioned to any such State shall be turned over to the highway department of the State or to the governor of said State, to be expended under the provisions of this act and under the rules and regulations of the Department of Agriculture, when any number of counties in any such State shall appropriate or provide the proportion or share needed to be raised in order to entitle such State to its part of the appropriation apportioned under this act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I examined that amendment before the Senator offered it. I think it is a very proper amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on page 11, line 21, I move to strike out "50" and insert "25."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment on page 11, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "50" and insert "25," so that, if amended, it will read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 25 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it has seemed to me for some time that the Federal Government could well afford to contribute something toward the building of roads. As to just how the contribution ought to be made, as to just how much the contribution ought to be, as to the exact conditions under which the contribution should be made, there is a very wide difference of opinion, and I confess I have no well-defined idea in my own mind as to just what these conditions and these proportions ought to be. There are some reasons that have not yet been given in this debate, why it is perfectly legitimate for the Federal Government to make these contributions.

Originally, I think, roads, as a rule, were constructed by direct labor or by direct taxation in road districts, perhaps the smallest unit, and later on the unit was enlarged, and townships were required to look after the roads within the townships, and then counties, and then States; and now for several years there has been an agitation in favor of the Federal Government making some contribution. This bill is here in answer to that sentiment.

These changes in the road question have come about on account of the changed conditions of travel. When we had practically no travel, when the travel was confined to the oxcart and later on to the horse vehicle, there was not such a demand. There was more reason why the roads should be constructed and maintained by local authority. The development of the automobile, however, has enlarged the scope of the road question, and made it, to a certain extent at least, a national one.

I know it is argued by those who are opposed to Federal contribution that the States ought to build the roads. When it was first agitated that the States should build the roads, the opposition was on the ground that the counties ought to do it; and when it was first agitated that the counties should do it, the objection to that, at the beginning, was that it ought to be done by the townships. I think a fair examination and consideration of the question will lead the unbiased mind to the conclusion that all of these different geographical subdivisions ought to be taken into consideration, and that the Federal Government—not to all of the roads, but to some interstate highways, as I will call them—ought to contribute a share. The State ought to contribute, perhaps not to all of the roads within the State, but to those that are used for the purpose of connecting the counties or the business places in the counties of the State. It seems to me that the Federal Government ought to contribute something, the State ought to contribute something, the county ought to contribute something, and something ought to be contributed by those who receive a more direct benefit from the road.

We have no jurisdiction here over the State, over the county, or over the individuals, and we can only go as far as to say what portion the Federal Government shall contribute and under what conditions the contribution shall be made; and, notwithstanding the views of some of those who object to this bill, I believe it is the object of this legislation for us to do that thing. The State, then, in raising its share of the funds can divide it up, for instance, as Ohio has done, by providing that the State shall pay, I believe, one-half and the county another proportion——

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in Ohio the county pays 25 per cent, the township 15 per cent, and the property holders 10 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. The county 25 per cent, the township 15 per cent, and those directly benefited the other 10 per cent. It seems to me that is a very fair division of it. But whatever that may be, so far as the State is concerned, each State will determine for itself; and this bill does not undertake to provide anything further than the division between the Federal Government and the State. I think the contribution of the Federal Government ought not to go to all of the roads in the country. It ought to be confined to a system of interstate highways; and, as I look at this bill, giving, as it does, to the Secretary of Agriculture power to say what the conditions shall be, what the specifications shall be, and where the roads shall be, it is intended to carry out that theory.

What proportion the Federal Government ought to pay is another question, as I said at the beginning, that is not well settled in my mind. Earlier in the day I asked some questions of the chairman of the committee with a view of getting some information on that subject, as to whether the committee had ascertained just what the proper division should be, whether it had taken any evidence or made any investigation to ascertain what the division should be; but, as I take it from the chairman's answer, the committee have just arbitrarily settled on the particular division of 50 per cent named in the bill because they believe it to be just, and I am not sure that the taking of evidence or further investigation would throw any additional light on the subject. It must necessarily be a question upon which minds will disagree.

To my mind this ought to be the basis: We ought to have the Federal Government contribute the smallest sum that will induce all of the States to take advantage of the law and get the Federal contribution. If we make the contribution too small, the States may not take advantage of it. If we make it too large, it becomes a Federal "pork-barrel" proposition, and puts upon the Federal Government too much of the burden of constructing the roads.

I believe most people will agree that the larger portion of the contribution made for the purpose of building good roads must be made by local authorities—State, county, and township, and those directly interested in the proposition. What the Federal Government ought to do is to make a contribution that would compensate for the interstate nature of the traffic, and, since the advent of the automobile, particularly, the interstate traffic upon what would be called interstate roads is quite an item.

You can go into almost any of the States and find highways bearing various names, upon which there is travel every day by people from almost every State in the Union. In my own State, on the great Lincoln Highway, passing through there, as it also passes through a large number of other States, you will find every day hundreds of automobiles from States outside of Nebraska. Where it passes through the State of Iowa you will find using the road hundreds of automobiles that are owned by people living outside of the limits of Iowa and who pay no tax in Iowa. Now, a contribution made by the Federal Government on the theory that the people of the entire Nation use these international highways, it seems to me, would be just and fair, providing the contribution were not unjust.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says that automobiles pass through the State of Iowa and pay no tax. Do they not pay an automobile tax?

Mr. NORRIS. I think not; no—not unless they are owned in Iowa.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is very different, then, from what it is in other parts of the country. Take it in the District of Columbia. We pay an automobile tax in the District of Columbia, and if we cross over the Maryland border we have to pay another automobile tax.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; so I understand.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a great abuse, I think.

Mr. NORRIS. I think so, too.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can suggest the dividing line with respect to the payment of tax by foreign automobiles.

There is in this country a system of reciprocity with regard to automobile taxes. If an automobile proposing to enter the State of Iowa comes from a State which allows an Iowa automobile to enter its territory without pay, the automobile can pass into Iowa without pay; but when there is no such reciprocity established by the laws of the respective States, then it must pay the regular automobile fee, just as here. For instance, take Maryland. Maryland and Iowa are reciprocal States, and an automobile bearing an Iowa license can enter Maryland without any further pay, just as an automobile from Maryland can enter Iowa without pay.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish that might be extended to the District of Columbia. The automobiles from Maryland and Virginia pass over our streets without any tax being assessed against them, but if we cross the border, either north or south, we have to take out a State license.

Mr. NORRIS. We can remedy that very easily by prohibiting their entrance into the District without payment unless they grant the same privilege to the automobiles of the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been hoping that might be done. I know that I paid an automobile tax in Maryland of $15 or thereabouts, and I think I have crossed the line twice.

Mr. NORRIS. I read very frequently of automobilists from the District being arrested if they pass over the line. It always seemed to me it was a hardship. I do not suffer directly, because I have not been able yet to buy even a Ford, so that I am not bothered in that way; but——

Mr. GALLINGER. In view of what has seemed to happen in the State of Nebraska, perhaps the Senator will be favored to some extent. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORRIS. I hope so. It may be that if I had been there and had contributed to the result I might have some claim for one; but as it is I have not.

Mr. President, I have talked with many people who have crossed the continent in automobiles, and have asked them whether they had any trouble, and almost invariably they say they passed from one ocean to the other without ever being interrupted or caused any inconvenience whatever.

What I have said about the automobile applies to the automobile truck as well. There are many places where there is a great deal of interstate traffic in produce from the farm. It applies also to the carrying of the mails; and I can see how it is going to be extended, it seems to me, greatly. All these things indicate to me that it is not unfair that the Federal Government should pay something toward the upbuilding of interstate highways.

I remember that when I was a boy and lived on a farm in Ohio we were compelled to work on the road to pay for the levy that was made against the land that we owned; and that was about the only attention that was given to the road. It was worked by the various people who lived in the community, and, of course, as a rule, very poor work was done. As I said a while ago, we passed from that era. The city man became interested in the country roads. He is interested in a great many ways, and by taxation he ought to be required to pay something toward the upkeep of the road and toward its building, and so we can carry it on clear through to the Nation. It has become a national question as well as a local one.

Mr. President, there is no system of constructing highways that is complete unless the law provides for the maintenance of the highway after it has been constructed. It would be folly, I think, for any legislative body, State or national, to provide for the building of highways unless there was a provision in the law for the maintenance of the highway after it was constructed. It has always seemed to me that the authorities—the State authorities, perhaps—ought to maintain men who do nothing else but look after the highways, just as the railroads maintain section men, because everybody knows that where a little damage is done to a road a little work done immediately after the damage will save the expenditure perhaps of hundreds of dollars—if the matter were neglected for a week or 10 days. This bill, it seems to me, makes a pretty good provision about the maintenance of the highways. I have sometimes wondered whether it would not be fair and whether it would not be right for the Federal Government to pay a portion of the maintenance fee. There is not any such thing provided in this bill, and I am not sure that the bill is right in that respect. The State that does not maintain the highway that has been constructed, where there has been a Federal contribution toward its construction, will immediately lose the right to get any further Federal contribution if the Secretary desires to enforce the law. I think in that respect the bill is not exactly what it ought to be; and I expect later on to offer an amendment that will make it compulsory upon the Secretary of Agriculture to refuse any further contribution in case the roads constructed in any State are not properly maintained by that State. As the bill is now drawn, it seems to me it gives some leeway by which the Secretary might permit States to disregard their duties in this respect.

Now, Mr. President, coming down to the particular amendment I have offered——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before the Senator from Nebraska passes to the amendment he has in mind, I should like to ask him a question that has rather a broad scope, and that presents at least one of the difficulties in my mind. I should like a little aid from him, if he is willing to give it.

Premising the question with a statement, I may suggest that in my State the aggregate length of the highways is, I believe, 107,000 miles. If all these highways were improved, as some time they must be, at a cost, we will say, of $6,000 a mile, the entire expense would be nearly $700,000,000. This bill proposes to give to my State, in the course of five years, a little more than $2,000,000. That, of course, is but a drop in the bucket, it is almost a negligible amount, as compared with the entire expense of improving all the highways of my State. Each State must have a system which ultimately will cover the improvement of all the highways of the State that are to be improved, the manner of their improvement, the kind of material that is to be used in the improvement, and everything of that sort.

Under this bill the Federal Government, represented by the Secretary of Agriculture, I believe, must be consulted with reference to the location of the highway to be improved and the kind of improvement that is to be put upon it. I have doubted the effect of that interference. I have wondered whether the amount proposed to be given to a State is compensation for the attempt to adjust what may be the policy of the State with regard to the improvement and the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture with regard to the improvement. I should like to have the Senator's view about the conflict which may arise between the view of the State officials or the view of the State legislature and the view of the Secretary of Agriculture with regard to the improvement of highways, and whether, if that difference is not reconciled, it would be fair to make a State that can not adjust its system to the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture pay any part of the tax which must necessarily be levied in order that other States that can so adjust themselves shall be benefited by the appropriation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to answer the Senator from Iowa before I yield further.

I can see how it is possible under this bill for very serious disagreement to take place between the State authorities and the Secretary of Agriculture. I should be glad to obviate that in the bill, if I could, but I do not know how it could be done. It seems to me that it is impossible to obviate that possible difficulty, although I do not think it is a probable one, if we retain, as I think we must, the right to say to the State what kind of road shall be built, providing the State gets Federal aid.

I can see how a Secretary of Agriculture and the authorities of the State of Iowa might get into a dispute and both be stubborn and unreasonable, or one of them be unreasonable, and not accomplish anything. As I said, on the other hand, I do not know how to obviate that possibility, but the probabilities are that there will be no such difficulty. I take it that the Secretary of Agriculture will be anxious to do what is fair and what is right, and that he will provide rules and regulations for the building of these roads that will apply alike to all of the States, and that he will treat Iowa the same as he will treat Illinois; that States having similar territory or similar conditions to meet in the construction of roads will be treated along the same line. On the other hand, the officials of Iowa, being anxious to get the Federal contribution, will necessarily pay some attention to the ideas of the Secretary of Agriculture. It means that we are leaving this matter to a board consisting of a State authority and a Federal authority, and there must be an agreement of those two authorities before any road can be constructed or Federal aid obtained. If there is any way to avoid the difficulty that may possibly arise, I should be glad, of course, to see it done.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I make the possible controversy a little more concrete? I think in many of the Western States—I know in my own—there is now going on a controversy with regard to the improvement of highways. One school of statesmen or engineers insist that gravel roads are all that are necessary and that the proposal to put down hard-surfaced roads at an expense of ten, twelve, or fifteen thousand dollars a mile is unwise and unnecessary. There is another body of men who are just as certain that the roads ought to be of some hard-surfaced variety, either macadam or brick or cement, or some material of that sort.

Now, suppose that my State was finally to conclude—and I am not saying that it will, and I am not suggesting that I hope it will—that the gravel road, which is fairly usable for 365 days of the year, is the best way, everything considered, to deal with the question. The Secretary of Agriculture says that a hard-surfaced road is the only true solution of the present difficulty. He could take money from the Federal Treasury and put down a little hard-surface road in some particular locality and leave all the rest of the State under the general policy that it might adopt for the gravel road. That is what I have in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I can see, of course, there is a possibilty of a dispute there that might be serious. That same possibility exists in the Senator's own State among the authorities of his State. If he were going to build a road in Iowa and this bill were not passed, he would have, as he says, some citizens of Iowa, some engineers who would say, "We must have a brick pavement." Other engineers would say, "We want a gravel road." Other engineers would say, "We must not only have a brick pavement, but we must have some certain specifications in regard to the foundations for the brick."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the Senator in just a moment. There is endless opportunity for disagreement; but in Iowa, without any Federal aid, they would have to come to some conclusion at some time through some instrumentality or get no road; and of course it would be that way with the Federal conditions. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Nebraska has answered partly my question in the last statement he made. It seems to me it rests within the State among the engineers in regard to the material of which the road shall be constructed or how it shall be constructed before Federal aid can be invoked. It must be settled by the State authority, by the highway commission of the State, for example.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am assuming just that; but suppose it does not suit the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. NORRIS. It would have to suit the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; and therefore all our roads would have to be built with the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. STERLING. While I agree, in the main, that it will have to suit the Secretary of Agriculture as to the plan of construction, the material of which constructed, and so forth, yet I think the Secretary of Agriculture must, in the various States with their different conditions, take into consideration the conditions in those States. For example, in Iowa or in South Dakota it would be impossible to get the material without too great a cost with which to build a hard road. He would agree to Federal aid with the construction of a road with such material as they had.

Mr. NORRIS. I have no doubt there would be no serious difficulty. The Secretary of Agriculture would be anxious, and so would the State authorities, to get the best possible roads for the money expended. We must remember that under this bill the amount that goes to any State is a definite fixed sum. I presume the Secretary of Agriculture, wanting to do what was right and to get the most good roads possible, would be guided a great deal by the opinion and the judgment of the engineers who represented the State authorities of a particular State where he was building a road.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I was on the subcommittee with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] and aided in preparing the bill, and I answered the very objection that has been presented by the Senator from Iowa. At the beginning of the bill the first section provides—

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States.

We think that language is as strong as could be made without absolutely surrendering the right of supervision. It is the purpose of the bill to have cooperation and to aid the States in the initiation. If the Senator will consider the full force of the word "cooperation," he will see that it is about the strongest term we could use without absolutely surrendering the right to see that the money is properly expended.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree that there is some difference between cooperation and coercion, but section 6 of the bill says specifically—

That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve a project, the State highway department shall furnish to him such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require.

And thereafter the bill says:

If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he shall notify the State highway department and immediately certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury.

I assume that the Secretary of Agriculture will exercise an honest judgment, but there is a great variety in honest judgment, and I can easily see how the controversy will arise, because it is in my State now in the most aggravated and intense form; neither side is willing to give up.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, right here suppose we have a Secretary of Agriculture to come in during this dispute that is existing in Iowa and decide the question?

Mr. CUMMINS. That would make it very much worse than it is now. The only way we can ever settle that dispute is in the Legislature of the State of Iowa, whose law or whose decision will not convince but control all the people of the State.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. This bill was prepared with a view that the initiation in the plans and the character of the roads and the method of construction shall be with the States. The department can not originate a proposition; it must be brought here by the State authorities. Consequently there is no limitation as to the amount to be spent, except that it can not exceed $10,000. There is a limitation in the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. A limitation on the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. On the Government. The Government can contribute no more than that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Do you contemplate having roads built that cost $20,000 a mile?

Mr. SWANSON. No; they can not exceed that. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, we have had the same discussion in every State near the cities where the travel is immense, and a gravel road is very quickly destroyed, and the State and county insist on a surfaced road. Where the travel is very small through Virginia and other States a gravel road or a sand-clay road is constructed by the State authorities, and those roads are being approved. When we had the appropriation of $500,000 for experimental purposes in the Post Office appropriation act, the Federal department approved various kinds of roads as were desired and needed by the State authorities.

Mr. CUMMINS. Personally——

Mr. SWANSON. I do not see how the Senator can have language stronger by leaving it to the States to initiate and making it cooperative without absolutely turning the money loose and with the chance that a great deal of it would be wasted.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not in favor of that. I was originally in favor of what is known commonly as the Bourne plan, in which the Government loaned its credit to the State and assumed that it would enable the State in the course of 47 years to take advantage of the credit of the General Government to receive a great deal more money than is proposed here without costing the Federal Government anything and without any supervision as to the character of road that should be built by this loan. That seems to be impracticable at the present time. While I do not say I am going to vote against this bill, for I am very much in favor of Federal aid to roads, and I think it is due the country that the Federal Government should spend money in the improvement of the highways, my impression has been toward the selection of certain prominent roads in a State, and allowing the General Government to build those roads in any way it saw fit to build them. For instance, take the Lincoln highway. The Federal Government takes the Lincoln highway across Iowa and across Nebraska and builds it so that it would be an example of the best highway building in the country. In my judgment that would do very much more for the cause than to spend a similar amount of money through a State in this way.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, this bill was drawn so that a thing of that kind can be done in Iowa or Nebraska. With the money you get under this bill, if it is desired by Nebraska and Iowa, and request is made to the department, and that is the proposition presented, and if the plans and specifications are proper, it can be approved. It was fixed so that the States themselves could determine the road upon which the money should be expended.

I think if the Senator from Nebraska will consider he will see why we could not adopt the amendment limiting it entirely to 25 per cent. There was a great deal of debate in the committee and in the subcommittee as to what sum should be fixed definitely that the Federal Government should pay. Some wanted it one-third, some wanted one-fourth, some wanted one-half, and, after much discussion and consideration, the conclusion was reached that not exceeding one-half should be the term used. That would allow latitude also to let the States adopt as they may see fit, one-fourth or one-third, but not exceeding one-half. There are some large States where there is a great deal of population, but there are other States where the population is sparse and the expense is large and they could not construct good roads if limited to one-fourth or one-third. There was a great deal of difficulty in getting some States to take hold of the $500,000 which was appropriated in the Post Office appropriation act, dividing it among the States. It provided for one-third, a specific sum, and some States would not even accept that, stating that rather than to be bothered with it they would let it go. With the specifications and all they gave it up and it went to other States. After considering this matter in all its phases——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska surrender the floor?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not intend to do so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the Senator from Nebraska kindly yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have a chance to answer some of the questions, and then I will be glad to yield. I should like to get in a word myself before the Chair decides that I have lost the floor.

Mr. President, I think the objection made by the Senator from Iowa could be applied to any possible bill that could be brought before the Senate, not only on the building of roads but anything else. There must be some discretion somewhere. Somebody must be left to determine what is the proper plan, the proper conditions, the proper specifications. If we had a bill here to build a public building and we decided that it should be left, as we have often done, to a commission consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Treasury to decide on the plans, the objection might be made that those three men would never agree, and it is possible that after the money is appropriated and the law passed we would get no building because it would be possible for them to disagree. There is not a bill providing for a judgeship but what there is a possibility of some one being selected to carry out the provisions of the law who will be dishonest, who will be unreasonable, or who will be incompetent.

It seems to me that, in the first place, we ought not at least to pass a law that will turn money over to the State and let them build as they please, under any conditions that they see fit, and at any place that they may see fit. That is contrary to the theory on which we are trying to get aid to some of the interstate highways.

Mr. President, as to the particular amendment that I have offered, we must bear in mind that the amount we have appropriated for each State is specific, it is definite. This amendment has nothing to do with that. I see the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has returned to the Chamber. I yield to him now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understood the Senator from Nebraska to say that he intended to offer an amendment to the bill providing that the Secretary of Agriculture should withhold the appropriation made for a State unless the State maintained the road. Am I correct in that?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Senator is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Now, I want to ask the Senator if he has read section 7 of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have read the entire bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If he has not, when he reads it, I ask him if he does not think that covers the ground entirely? I make the suggestion in order that we may avoid delay in discussing or voting upon amendments that are entirely covered by the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is laboring under a misapprehension if he thinks I have not read the bill. He is laboring under another misapprehension if he thinks I have not read section 7. I have one amendment pending on page 11, but I expect to offer an amendment to section 7 to strike out in section 7 the words "is authorized to" and insert in lieu thereof the word "shall," so that, if adopted, the bill will read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall withhold apportionment of funds to any State—

And so forth, instead of reading as it does now:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to withhold—

And so forth.

Mr. President, I am going back again to the amendment that is now pending. The effect of the amendment, as I started to say a while ago, if adopted, would be, from every dollar appropriated out of the Federal Treasury, to get just twice as much road under this bill as we would if the amendment were not adopted. In other words, suppose a State should receive a million dollars as its portion of the fund in any one year, instead of spreading that million dollars out over a length of road that could be built for $2,000,000, where the State would have to contribute the other half, it would spread it out over just twice that much road. In other words, the State would have to build 2 miles instead of 1 to get the same contribution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why not put it down to one-tenth, then, and get ten times as much road.

Mr. NORRIS. I will answer that question, Mr. President. It is a proper question. It has been asked and answered before to-day, but I will take it up again. Why not put it down to 25 cents a mile or one-twentieth, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] said? Mr. President, this is the answer to it: It is because that would be no inducement to the State to make application for Federal funds. It would be no inducement to the State to construct a road under this bill. It would be so small that it would not pay to make the application and comply with the law, and hence no road would be built under the law. As I said at the beginning, if my judgment is right, we ought to fix the contribution as small as we can and yet get each State to take advantage of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Under the Senator's amendment, reducing from 50 per cent to 25 per cent, why not reduce the appropriation one-half?

Mr. NORRIS. That could be done.

Mr. KENYON. It is a little contrary to custom; but would not that be a good thing?

Mr. NORRIS. That might not be the proper thing to do. Of course, this division is arbitrary and the appropriation is arbitrary. I am not sure but that that might be a good idea. That, however, has nothing to do with the merits of this amendment.

Some Senators ask, Why not cut this down? Let us take the other view of it and ask, Why not raise it? Why not say that the States shall contribute 10 cents for each mile of road constructed out of funds from the Federal Treasury? Would we want that? Is there anybody here who would want to advocate that kind of a proposition? I think not. Immediately we would get on dangerous ground. That is an extreme. If we fix the amount to be paid by the Government at one-twentieth, that would be the other extreme. It may be that 25 per cent is right; it may be that 50 per cent is right; but I believe that every State would take advantage of the law if the amount were fixed at 25 per cent, the same as it would if the rate were fixed at 50 per cent. As has been shown here this afternoon by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], in the last year every State in the Union has expended twenty times—I believe those were the figures—more money for the construction of roads within its limits than it would have to pay to get the advantage of this bill if the amount were fixed at 25 per cent instead of 50 per cent.

Mr. President, is there anything sacred about this 50 per cent? Is it like the famous, time-honored, sacred, but rather abandoned, theory of 16 to 1, and that nothing else will do except 50 per cent? Would 49 per cent hurt? Would 51 per cent be criminal? It is possible that some other provision ought to be made than the one I have drawn in my amendment; I am not contending anything to the contrary. My own judgment is we could put it still lower, because, after all, this contribution is not going to be a drop in the bucket so far as the construction of the highways of the Union are concerned. Every State has got to build and will build and does build many times more highways than it would build under the provisions of this law; and so long as the States are going to build more roads anyway, it seems to me as to the contribution that the Federal Government makes, it would be wise to spread it out over as great a length of road as possible, and get what I think everybody will concede will be a first-class road, and require the States to properly maintain the road after it is constructed.

The nearer you put the Federal contribution to the total cost of the road, the nearer you come to making a "pork-barrel" proposition of the whole thing; and the nearer you approach the other limit, so low, but yet so high, that the State will consider it a benefit to take advantage of the law, you come that much nearer to perfection in the bill, as I look at it.

It seems to me, therefore, that we ought to adopt an amendment that would cut down the Federal contribution at least as far as the amendment I have proposed does so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. KENYON and Mr. NORRIS called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to know what the motion is.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What is the exact question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] to the amendment reported by the committee. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The SECRETARY. On page 11 of the committee amendment, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "fifty" and to insert "twenty-five," so as to read:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 25 per cent upon the total estimated cost thereof.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll:

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SIMMONS. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. LEE] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I wish to inquire if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when the name of Mr. THOMAS was called). I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], but I believe if he were present he would vote as I am going to vote, and therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I inquire whether the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed the Senator from Rhode Island has not voted.

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I inquire if the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed he has not voted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a general pair with that Senator, and in his absence will withhold my vote; but will be glad to be counted to make a quorum if necessary. I shall not object to that being done.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. CLARK of Wyoming], who is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], as stated by that Senator.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. BECKHAM] is unavoidably detained, and is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] and vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING], who is paired on this vote, under the statement of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

Mr. TILLMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I am requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS];

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 11, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Brandegee	Jones	Oliver	Shafroth
Cummins	Kenyon	Page	Wadsworth
Hughes	Norris	Pomerene

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	La Follette	Ransdell	Stone
Bankhead	Lane	Robinson	Swanson
Burleigh	Lewis	Sheppard	Tillman
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Townsend
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Underwood
Gronna	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Vardaman
Hollis	Overman	Smith, Mich.	Walsh
James	Pittman	Smoot	Warren
Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Sterling	Williams

NOT VOTING—49.

Beckham	du Pont	Lee, Md.	Sherman
Borah	Fall	Lippitt	Shields
Brady	Fletcher	Lodge	Smith, Md.
Broussard	Gallinger	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Goff	McLean	Sutherland
Catron	Gore	Nelson	Taggart
Clapp	Harding	Newlands	Thomas
Clark, Wyo.	Hardwick	O'Gorman	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Hitchcock	Owen	Weeks
Colt	Husting	Penrose	Works
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan
Curtis	Kern	Reed
Dillingham	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment reported by the committee, the yeas are 11 and the nays 36. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] being present but not voting, a quorum is present, and the amendment is rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.), on motion of Mr. BANKHEAD, the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, April 21, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 20, 1916.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

William M. Ingraham to be Assistant Secretary of War.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Andrew J. Foster to be receiver of public moneys at Lakeview, Oreg.

POSTMASTERS.

VIRGINIA.

Sidney Sheltman, Christiansburg.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 20, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, we appeal to Thee with all the fervor of our soul in the present crisis and pray most earnestly that the strained relations 'twixt our Government and the Government of Germany may be justly and amicably adjusted without violence, for what affects one nation affects all nations for weal or for woe. Already the earth is reeking with the blood of innocent men, women, and children. Millions are dead and other millions are maimed for life. Thousands of homes have been destroyed and desolation stalks over the land where once peace and happiness reigned. Move, we beseech Thee, upon the hearts of those responsible for the awful conditions existing in half the world. Teach them and all mankind the art of living together in peace and harmony; that love may fill all hearts, all homes, all peoples, that Thy kingdom may indeed come and Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. In the name of the Prince of Peace. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GARD. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. It is too late.

The SPEAKER. It is too late. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this vote 340 Members, a quorum, have responded to their names.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The Clerk will read the Journal.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5415. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Fox River at Geneva, Ill.; and

S. 697. An act authorizing a credit in certain accounts in the office of the Auditor for the War Department.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12766. An act to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States.

CADETS AT WEST POINT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4876, a bill to increase the number of cadets at the West Point Military Academy, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4876) to provide for an increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate disagreed to the House amendments and asked for a conference.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants the House to insist upon its amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill 4876, insist on the amendments of the House thereto, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

The Clerk called the Committee on Printing.

REVISION OF PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 8664.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8664) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8664, with Mr. SISSON in the chair.

On assuming the chair Mr. SISSON was greeted with applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 8664. The Clerk will report it.

The title of the bill was again read.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I wish first to make an uninterrupted explanation of the provisions of this bill, after which I shall be glad to yield to any Member who desires to ask me any question in reference to it.

To the Members of this House who served in the Sixty-third Congress, and to many who served in previous Congresses, the revision of the Government printing laws is no new subject. Some 15 years ago abuses and recklessness in Government printing and binding procedure became so apparent that the Congress appointed a committee of experts to investigate and report, and the findings of this commission were so strikingly suggestive of needed reforms that a good many abuses and much of the carelessness in printing excessive and practically useless documents were abandoned. But the printing laws which permitted or encouraged this abuse or carelessness in Government printing have not been materially changed, and in both the Sixty-second and the Sixty-third Congresses diligent effort was made to enact a comprehensive and efficient public printing law, with the result that in the Sixty-second Congress the bill passed the Senate, but failed on account of time in the House, and in the Sixty-third Congress the bill passed the House, but failed in the Senate on account of lack of time necessary to consider it. The bill hereby presented is virtually the same that passed the House in the Sixty-third Congress after many days of diligent and painstaking consideration of the needs of the public service and the efficient organization of a force necessary to promote accurate, prompt, and economical Government printing, and dependable distribution of the same. It is the same as the one introduced by the Senate Committee on Printing. It carries, with one or two exceptions, the same wages of employees agreed upon in the bill which passed the House, and which are generally satisfactory to all concerned, the same being based on reports furnished by the Department of Labor and also by inquiry on the part of the committee for wage scales in printing establishments of the leading cities of the United States. Furthermore, the bill carries provision for furnishing Members of Congress the kind of public documents needed in their respective districts, rather than an assortment of documents for all districts alike, whereby all Members find more or less documents allotted to them which their constituents can not use to any advantage, and which policy of distribution is the cause of an enormous waste of public documents.

To the Members of the present session of Congress who were not Members heretofore I especially present some of the features of this bill and point out some of the causes that necessitated, as the committees of both branches of the Congress believe, the revision of the printing laws so as to conform to present needs. In presenting this bill to the House in the Sixty-third Congress I presented a brief carrying the fundamentals of the bill and some argument in favor of improved legislation for the public-printing service, and am pleased to resubmit it both for the edification of those not familiar with the bill and with the Government printing service, and that it may have place in the RECORD that new Members may gather therefrom a comprehensive grasp of the scope and purpose of the proposed legislation.

This bill is a plain business proposition in which every Member of Congress and every reading and thinking individual in our country is interested, for it has to do with their general information, their convenience, and their expenditures. And inasmuch as I am anxious to spend as little time as possible in general debate and give you the most intelligent and comprehensive outline of the proposed legislation possible, it will be a favor if I be spared from interruptions during the formal presentation, and after I am through with this I will try to answer any interrogatories which may suggest themselves to you.

FOREWORD.

As a matter of information, the Government has a public printing office the buildings and equipment of which are invoiced at $5,500,000, the annual expenditure for the operation of the establishment is approximately $7,000,000, and the output must be the mental and mechanical product of the best and most accurate skill in the printer's art. The building is a model in architectural arrangement, the equipment is modern and complete, and the four thousand and more employees have sanitary system, medical attention, and emergency hospital facilities highly creditable to the best Government in the world.

In addition, in comparison with the wage scales of printers, binders, and machinists in the printing industries of the large cities of the United States, as shown by the union wage scales officially compiled by the Department of Labor, our Government pays its Printing Office employees more than the average wage scales, it gives them an annual leave of absence of 30 days with full pay, it guarantees stable wages whether prosperity or panic prevails in the country, it provides them with medical and surgical relief during working hours, and it assures them permanent employment if they are faithful. With these ideal conditions as a foundation for a public printing service the people have a right to expect helpful results, and they may have if Congress will systematize and economize to the end that a maximum of service in useful public documents be given at a minimum of expense.

Your Committee on Printing has carefully and impartially considered the necessity for better legislation for this branch of the Government service. It has given hearings to all who asked to be heard and to many whose knowledge and advice might aid in the preparation of a good bill. And it has gathered data from the hearings and investigations of preceding committees in both House and Senate, and comes to you with the fundamentals, at least, of a just and wholesome measure, in which every Member is interested.

The impression is abroad that Members of Congress—in both branches—are following long-established customs of grab-bag methods in printing and franking privileges not creditable to those big enough to make laws for our national welfare. It is doubtful if this impression is justified, as a whole, but that there is a tremendous waste in our methods of printing and distributing public documents there is not a doubt, as the official report accompanying this bill will readily show you. You would be amazed if I were to tell you that in public-document procedure alone we surely waste a half million dollars a year; and add to this the wrapping, franking, envelopes, leave to print, and other excesses which this bill aims to correct and it will amount to more than a million dollars a year that is absolutely wasted, except to those who profit by the production.

FEATURES OF THE BILL.

Most of this bill is reaffirmation of existing law. Whenever present law has been found conducive to good results, it has not been changed, but the advantageous new features of the bill, as the committee sees them, grouped into general subjects, are as follows:

Valuation system of allotment of documents to Members, so each may have the publications he needs for distribution in his particular locality.

Restrictions of departments in free-hand and duplicate document printing.

Limitation of printing frank slips and envelopes, correcting both printing and franking abuses.

Restricting leave to print extraneous matter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

More satisfactory plan for printing for committees.

Labor-saving method of folding, wrapping, and handling public documents.

Publication of morning bulletin of day's program of House and Senate business, showing advance program of congressional proceedings.

Rearrangement of Government printing officials and salaries.

More general supervision by joint committee and Public Printer over all public printing.

Requiring all printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office.

And providing fines and imprisonment for violations of franking and distribution privileges.

FAULTY DOCUMENT DISTRIBUTION.

Not only is our present system of printing and distributing extravagantly wasteful, but it does not give Members of Congress their allotment of the kind of publications that are most helpful to the people they represent. For instance, every Member of Congress sends out many publications to his people which are of little or no use to them, because they are allotted to him and he thinks it better to send them out than to let them lapse and be sold for junk paper. A Member in a purely agricultural district has little use for the publications useful in cities now allotted to him, and the Member representing the city has little or no use for much of the agricultural literature, and so forth, allotted to him. As it is now, Representatives from forest and prairie, from seacoast and interior, from cotton belt and wheat fields, from shop and live-stock ranch, and from city and country, are all given the same kind of free documents for their constituents, and, of course, much of it is useless because it has no relation to conditions in the locality to which it is allotted.

Hereafter each Member of the House will be allotted $1,800 worth of public documents for his district each year and each Senator $2,200 worth each year. This is practically the same expense per Member—a little more, indeed—as the Government is now incurring in printing documents. But the advantages of the new system are many. In brief, the Printing Office will issue limited-edition copies of documents from time to time as the demand requires, and this will save much waste in printing allotment stuff not wanted, as is now done; each Member will be given only what he orders, and many will therefore draw less than their allotment, which will be another saving; no Member can draw on his allotment after his term expires, and new Members can supply the wants of their constituents as soon as their term begins and not encounter an exhausted document list because the predecessor had drawn out everything available, both present and future; Members can order what they need, and nothing else will be printed and wasted for them, and thus the people will get that which is helpful in their vicinity and vocation, and there will be no excess printing of unwanted documents, as is always done where Members are given the same allotments of the various documents.

And so this provision will be a great saving in printing expense, a great convenience to Members, and a great help to those for whose benefit public documents are issued.

FRANKED STATIONERY PRINTING.

The franking privilege is much abused at much cost and without profit to any considerable number. True, this is a function of legislation not strictly within the province of this committee, but we can help by the regulation of frank slip and envelope printing, so that the possibility of excessive franking shall be limited. To say nothing of the number of frank slips and white document envelopes used by Representatives during the year 1914, the Public Printer reports that twenty-two and a half million manila document envelopes of various sizes were furnished to Representatives and Senators—an average of 41,500 each. In addition to this departments used millions, and committees of the House and Senate were furnished with hundreds of thousands of free white envelopes and letter sheets for correspondence purposes, and each Member had his liberal cash stationery allowance besides. You say this is only the custom established by years of precedents. That is true, but wrongdoing is not justified by all the precedents and customs of the ages, and that misusing public funds in this way is plainly and inexcusably wrong who will deny?

How will our limitation of printing document envelopes and forbidding their use under penalty by others than Members work economy in the franking expense, you ask. I will tell you: First, the abolition of the small-size document envelope will estop Members from using large quantities of them contrary to law in correspondence; second, it will stop the wholesale practice of inviting the public to pitch in for free public documents whether or not they are needed or used; third, it will stop the abuse of private interests promoting speeches in Congress, paying for the printing of large quantities of them and then using some Member's envelope, folding, and franking privilege to send them out; and, fourth, the curtailment of not-wanted document printing will discourage the practice that has long prevailed of some Members franking out any kind of useless document stuff just to show constituents on the mailing lists that they are not forgotten by their Representatives in Congress.

FRANK-PRIVILEGE ABUSES.

If I were to give you all the reports of abuses of the franking privilege which have come to the knowledge of members of this committee it would require a considerable extension of my time, and some of it might not be accurate, for evasion of the law is usually covered up; but if I were to tell you that 750,000 speeches of a Member of Congress were once sent to an agency in Philadelphia to be used by an organization to boost a high protective tariff, and that the Government paid for the folding, for the envelope printing, and for the franking through the mails, you would have a hint of the possibilities of abuse of the franking privilege. Or if I were to cite the alleged distribution of a million and a half of speeches by a Member of Congress through Government franked envelopes by an organization which sought to exploit its ideas of a combined moral and industrial question, all at Government expense, you would see evidence of the abuse of the franking privilege. Or if I were to cite you to part 65 of the hearings pursuant to Senate resolution 92 by a Senate subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, you would be astounded at the evidence that 320,000 copies of a selfish interest pamphlet had been printed, wrapped, and franked at Government expense, and you would applaud the Post Office Department in its undertaking to recover from this selfish interest $57,600 postage expense which the Government incurred in transmitting this illegally franked document through the mails. Or if I were to tell you that a congressional campaign committee had more than 1,000,000 Government-printed speech envelopes left over after a campaign, which represented a large public expense, and that these envelopes were disposed of as junk by some one unknown to a Government record, you would admit carelessness, to say the least. Or if I were to show you that a certain congressional exponent of a will-o'-the-wisp political propaganda had 2,000,000 speech envelopes printed at one time, and either sent them out carrying his hallucination or wasted them, you would be justified, after knowing these few instances of the many of the kind, in sidestepping your dignity far enough to exclaim, "Rotten!"

PENALTIES FOR VIOLATIONS.

I want to also call your attention to the fact that there are enough sharp teeth in this bill to protect the proposed law from imposition. Section 50 provides a fine of $1,000 as penalty for any Government distributing agent selling or disposing of for gain any public document printed for free distribution; and also provides a fine of $5,000 or imprisonment for 5 years, or both, for any officer or employee of the Government Printing Office who violates this section. Section 31 provides a fine of $3,000 or imprisonment for 7 years, or both, for the Public Printer if he shall by himself or in collusion with others defraud the Government. Section 32 provides a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for five years, or both, for the Public Printer or any of his official subordinates if any such be interested in any industry which furnishes supplies for the Government Printing Office. And section 49 provides a fine of $1,000 for any Member of Congress or agent or employee of the Government who shall assist any private institution or individual to the unlawful use of franked envelopes or frank slips.

Furthermore, section 51 protects the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD from misuse by providing that any matter not spoken in order on the floor of the House or Senate shall first be offered, then considered by the respective Printing Committee, and passed on by the respective House before it be published. There is an exception, however, whereby leave-to-print matter germane to the subject under consideration may be inserted in the RECORD by unanimous consent, but it must be limited to four pages. And these provisions, the committee estimates, will greatly curtail the inconvenient bulk and the unnecessary expense of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which ought to be a succinct reproduction of the proceedings of Congress and not the carryall for every Tom, Dick, and Harry in the country to exploit his ideas at the expense of the Government and to the inconvenience of everybody who would like to read the actual proceedings of Congress.

ECONOMY IN THE BILL.

To the casual observer the proposed changes might seem inconsequential, but to the investigator they show large possibilities of retrenchment and benefit to the public service. In the matter of economy alone this bill must attract your approval. Here is a table of estimates of curtailment and increases of expenses carried in the bill which we ask you to inspect. It specifies the provisions of the bill upon which the committee bases its estimates of economies to be effected:

Economies.

Section 2: Vesting Joint Committee on Printing with authority to prevent duplications and waste in printing and distribution of documents, and authority to investigate other abuses in the public printing (estimate based on actual savings effected by printing investigation commission under similar authority)	$25,000.00
Section 3: Compilation of memorial volumes and other documents by clerk of Joint Committee on Printing	900.00
Section 5: Reduction in salary of Deputy Public Printer	500.00
Section 8: Reduction in salary of purchasing agent	600.00
Section 10: Reduction in compensation of assistant superintendent of work in charge of night work	600.00
Section 15: Leave of absence at day rate paid at time granted instead of at rate earned	8,000.00
Section 34: Folding of documents for valuation distribution at Government Printing Office	25,000.00
Section 35, paragraph 1: Restriction of "unanimous-consent" printing of documents by either House (estimated)	25,000.00
Section 36: Elimination of departmental publications from numbered-document series of Congress, and thus preventing duplication	19,952.25
Section 38, paragraph 1: Elimination of print of private pension and war claims bills as introduced (cost, Sixty-first Congress, $172,554.80)	80,000.00
Section 43, paragraph 2: Restriction of use of embossed letterheads and envelopes by Members of Congress	33,132.71
Section 45: Restriction of committee binding	10,000.00
Section 48, paragraph 1: Franked document envelopes issued free to Members of Congress to be of manila stock instead of more expensive grade	43,560.00
Section 50, paragraph 1: Valuation plan for distribution of documents by Members of Congress	150,000.00
Section 50, paragraph 4:
(2) Elimination of one edition of Congressional Directory in long session	4,187.52
(5) Substituting new process instead of engraving for memorial volumes	5,000.00
(8) Elimination of abridgment of messages and documents	13,847.83
(8) Limiting size of annual reports of departments and establishments (estimate)	10,000.00
Section 50, paragraph 4—Continued.
(17) Elimination of list of patents from annual report of commissioner to Congress	$6,646.07
(20) Discontinuance of geological depository libraries	4,418.48
(22a) Elimination of Secretary's report from Agricultural Yearbook	16,029.00
(22g) Discontinuance of Annual Report on Field Operations, Bureau of Soils	17,310.66
(23) Discontinuance of annual list of officers of merchant steamers, etc	2,500.00
Section 51, paragraph 4: Restricting matter inserted in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to subjects germane to proceedings of Congress (estimated)	100,000.00
Section 51, paragraph 6: Limiting remainder copies of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be bound for Members	72,588.00
Section 63:
Paragraph (4): Limiting distribution of Decisions of Comptroller of the Treasury	8,712.00
Paragraph (10c)—
Increasing subscription price of Patent Gazette from $5 to $10 per year	15,000.00
Patent Gazette from $5 to $10 per year	15,000.00
Eliminating Patent Gazette depository libraries	12,858.74
Paragraph (12): Sale of Daily Commerce Reports	30,000.00
Discontinuing publication of Commercial Relations	6,245.99
Section 64, paragraph 1: Requiring all printing and binding to be done at Government Printing Office (based on 10 per cent saving on $500,000 worth of such work now done outside)	56,000.00
Section 78, paragraph 4: Elimination of duplicate copies of documents sent to depository libraries	23,730.87
Section 79, paragraph 2: Selection of documents to be sent to depository libraries	110,000.00
Section 79, paragraph 6: Revising library mailing lists of departments	5,000.00
Total economies	936,320.12
Less increases	138,557.00
Net economies	797,763.12

Increases.

Section 4, paragraph 1: Salary of Public Printer, from $5,500 to $6,000 per annum	$500.00
Section 10: Salary of medical and sanitary officer, from $2,600 to $3,000	400.00
Section 10: Salary of assistant superintendent of work and foreman of printing, from $2,500 to $2,750	250.00
Section 14: Compensation of 320 printers and 270 bookbinders, from 50 to 55 cents an hour	75,120.00
Section 15: Leave of absence to 82 temporary employees	2,787.00
Section 40: Printing clerk for House of Representatives	2,500.00
Section 51, paragraph 2: Daily table of contents	10,000.00
Section 63 (10a): Copies of patents for sale to libraries	12,000.00
Section 72, paragraph 1: Division of publications in each department and independent establishment of the Government	10,000.00
Increase in miscellaneous publications (estimated)	25,000.00
Total increases	138,557.00

In most instances the figures in this list are based on unquestionable statistics of actual saving. Other estimates of probable economies are based on conclusions of clerks and heads of divisions who are familiar with present practices which they know to be excessive and uselessly expensive. And, besides, we can safely add another big item of economy in franking cost to the Postal Service by the limitation of the free-for-all use of franked envelopes, in the lesser quantities of documents that will be sent out under the proposed allotment reform, in lesser number of documents of little or no interest to anybody, and in the reduction of bulk of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Yearbooks, and many other publications carrying a superfluity of space filled with reports, and so forth, in which the public has little or no concern. For instance, the elimination of the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture in the Yearbooks will amount to a saving per year of $16,000 worth of paper and printing and the weight of the book and consequent franking expense will be reduced proportionately. Many other similar instances of franking economy by reason of reduction in bulk could be cited, but you see the horse sense in the Yearbook illustration as well as the committee saw it and as the wayfaring man, though a fool, can see it.

GENERAL OBSERVATIONS.

Time forbids that I go into general details of the manifold merits of this bill. It has no politics in it, it has no favoritism in it, and it has no purpose except that Members of Congress be given a more useful and more economic public printing service than now. Of course, it is not satisfactory to all. No improved legislation was ever proposed which curtailed privileges or eliminated unnecessary expense that did not incur opposition from those who want to be let alone or those who want more than consistency and justice will permit.

There are, as we believe, so many advantageous features in this bill that no Member of Congress can vote against it and serve his constituents best. It may be improved by amendments, and to that end the committee invites sincere endeavor from any source. But opposition which arises because the bill provides for a faithful public service, rather than continue the present method of a service wide open to imposition, ought not to have much influence with Members who are here to serve the public rather than the public serve them with advertising facilities.

It is high time that the people measure the merit of their Members of Congress by their work and votes in legislative endeavor rather than by the number of letters and the amount of free document stuff they frank out. But I would not be understood as opposed to the legitimate use of the franking privilege. The people have a right to know the nature of bills, what is being said of them, and what is being done in their Congress and by heads of their Government. They, too, have a right to Government helps in suggestions of experts in health, comfort, industry, and vocational endeavor. This is a people's Government, and they have a right to be liberally advised through free postage privilege what is being done for them or to them, so they may intelligently direct the future by their votes.

The present methods of misusing the public printing and franking privilege is not graft. It is a custom that has grown up because of lax and flexible regulations, which means most anything that precedent or differences of opinion have established. It has not been actual violation of law, for there has been no well-defined enactment, and officials and Members have placed their own interpretations on what they have a right to do and the people's Treasury has suffered accordingly.

But hereafter the law will be specific if you enact this bill; department heads, subordinate officials, and Members will all know what is proper and what improper, and Congress and the public can easily learn from official publicity if officials are overdoing in the matter of promiscuous document distribution.

Gentlemen, the citations in the committee report and in this presentation merely touch the high places of economic possibility in congressional printing and franking. Abuses that result from "everybody's business is nobody's business" are the bane of the public service. We can correct much that is wrong and wasteful by passing this bill, and we owe it to the country as exemplars of finance, of public trust, and of honor to do it.

There is an adage as old as honesty itself which says if we be true to ourselves we will not be false to others. Therefore, in fairness to Members of Congress and in justice to those whom they represent we ought to pass this bill and make clear what is right and what is wrong in public-document printing and distribution. The misuse of Government printing and franking has been the stalking horse of common scandal for years, and whether or not it is warranted we can here efface the cause, and I believe it is up to every Member of this House to aid in this legislation that this public service may be vastly improved and its use freed from criticism forever.

I now gladly yield to any who may want to submit interrogatories relative to the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman what will be the cost of the Yearbook under this new arrangement?

Mr. BARNHART. The bill as provided dispenses with the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture in the Yearbook, which materially reduce its size, and while the Yearbooks now cost something like 82 cents, under this plan they can be reduced to something like 50 cents per copy. The present arrangement that I have referred to, carrying an allotment to each Member of about $1,800, covers the Yearbooks, agricultural bulletins, and things of that sort.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the printing of these documents be submitted to public contract or bid, or be done by the Government Printing Office?

Mr. BARNHART. It will be done by the Government Printing Office, as at present.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Indiana said this new arrangement would do away with the report of the Secretary of Agriculture. What does that consist of?

Mr. BARNHART. It comprises about 200 or 250 pages of prefix to each Yearbook that is published. It is the annual report of the Secretary of Agriculture, which the Secretary himself concedes can be put into a little pamphlet, with a great saving. This report is a matter in which the general public is not concerned.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Hereafter it will not appear in the Yearbook?

Mr. BARNHART. It will not appear in the annual Yearbook, and therefore the cost of both printing and carrying through the mail will be reduced, so that the total cost will be considerably less than it now is.

Another thing about this feature of the bill is that a new Member coming into Congress will have his annual allotment of $1,800 worth of documents available as soon as he is in. Under the present arrangement a Member going out of Congress, if he sees fit, may take out with him all of the documents that are credited to his district, and the incoming Member, as most of you know, has a great struggle in order to secure anything in the way of documents that his district needs and to which it is entitled.

Mr. EMERSON. Is it not also a fact that the outgoing Member can claim his documents allotted to his district until the beginning of the next session of Congress, although he is out of Congress and has not been a Member for nine months?

Mr. BARNHART. I understand that ex-Members take them out. The new Congressman, not having been sworn in, has no authority to take them, even if there be any left for him.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I should like to ask the gentleman if this practice of the outgoing Member claiming the documents allotted after his time has expired is not upheld by the rule of the folding room which is made under direction of the House Committee on Printing?

Mr. BARNHART. In reply to that I will say that there is something to that effect in the old law that is not very clear. It is subject to various constructions and has been carried along in that way. Whatever may be the fact about what has been, the provision of the new bill removes that objection fully, as we verily believe.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. When does this bill go into operation?

Mr. BARNHART. On the 1st of July, 1916.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. What would the present Members lose under it?

Mr. BARNHART. Nothing at all. They would have all the allotment that is due them for the balance of the year.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Who fixes the value of the documents?

Mr. BARNHART. That is determined by the actual cost of them.

Mr. WALSH. Why could not the allotment of a new Member be made available on and after his term begins on the 4th of March?

Mr. BARNHART. That is what the bill does.

Mr. WALSH. I understood the gentleman to say it was not available until he was sworn in.

Mr. BARNHART. I should have said it would be available when his term begins.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. On the 4th of March?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that is the provision.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Under your proposed plan there will, I presume, be no fixed number of public documents that will be printed? There will have to be, I should think, some elastic rule by which the number will be determined after the Congressmen select documents, as they will under the new law.

Mr. BARNHART. The Government Printing Office is authorized in the bill to keep on hand an adequate supply of these documents that are authorized by the Congress from time to time, and there will always be a stock on hand that you can draw against as long as you have any document value remaining to your credit.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I am in favor of the gentleman's bill, but it is probable that there will be a very much greater number of some documents desired under this plan than we are given under the present law. For instance, we now get about 800 copies of the Yearbook. There is no doubt in my mind that if this act is passed there will be more demand for Yearbooks and for horse books and for cattle books than are now printed, and therefore an increased quantity of those books will be required.

Mr. BARNHART. That will be taken care of by the Government Printing Office, so that the folding room will have a supply of those documents on hand all the time. It will be carefully regulated in the matter of editions, and a great saving will be effected. I will explain to the gentleman from Missouri that at the present time he has a great number of documents to his credit that no doubt he can not use, for which he has no demand, and they are left in the folding room, and every two years or so the Joint Committee on Printing makes a general housecleaning of obsolete publications. Some years ago we sold about $100,000 worth of paper junk which had cost probably ten times as much as we got for it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I have found that to be the case. For instance, the books or documents of the Coast and Geodetic Survey I never have any use for, not a single copy of them. I give them to the Members who do want them, because in my district there is no call for them.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I am very much in favor of this bill, but it seems to me it is hardly fair to retiring Members of Congress to cut them off on the 4th of March, when there are always a number of documents authorized during the term of such Members which have not yet been issued at the close of Congress on the 4th of March.

Mr. BARNHART. A retiring Member can take out every document to the extent of his $1,800, but he must get them out of the folding room before his term expires.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is true; but it takes probably six months or a year to print some of these reports after they are authorized, and they may not be available during a Member's term——

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no; not that long.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There are many documents in which a retiring Member may be especially interested which would not be available until the 1st of July or the 1st of September after his term has expired.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It does not require six months or a year to get out an ordinary document. They get them out very much sooner than that.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Very often a retiring Member expects to get into the race for Congress again, and it seems to me it would be unfair to cut him off on the 4th of March from receiving documents authorized to be printed during his term.

Mr. BARNHART. It does not. Each Member of Congress will have his full allotment of documents, but he must take them out before the expiration of his term. Then he has the franking privilege until the opening of the next regular session of Congress in December.

Mr. REILLY. Is it not a fact that under the law, if a special session of Congress is called, the retiring Member of Congress loses the right to all books that are in the folding room as soon as the new Member takes his oath of office?

Mr. BARNHART. He may lose all his right then, but as a rule he sees to it that his documents are all out, especially if he is ambitious for the future, and he will send them home or elsewhere for his future use. As I understand it, public documents are not the personal property of the Congressman; they belong to the district which he represents, to all the people in the district, and not to the Member of Congress.

Mr. REILLY. The point I want to make is that under the gentleman's bill the outgoing Congressman would be in the same position that he is to-day if a special session of Congress is called and the new Member sworn in before the following December.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; except that he can not impose upon the incoming Member by taking out all the documents credited to his district, as he does now, and transfer them to somebody else or use them for his own purposes. I recall that once in my experience I had a large number of documents transferred to me by an outgoing Member who did not like his successor; and, in order to play the game square, I transferred to the incoming Member what had been transferred to me by his predecessor; and the new Member thought ever afterwards that I was the finest Member of Congress with whom he was acquainted, notwithstanding the fact that he was under no obligations at all to me, because the documents belonged to his district and not to him individually nor to his predecessor.

Mr. FOCHT. I understand that the franking privilege now begins on the first Monday in December for a new Member?

Mr. BARNHART. No; on the 4th of March.

Mr. FOCHT. He is elected in November, and he can not frank documents until December.

Mr. MANN. No; I misunderstood; the franking privilege of the new Member begins right after his election, before his term commences.

Mr. FOCHT. And the franking privilege of an outgoing Member continues until the following December; is that it?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. As I understand it, this bill relieves a great injustice, with respect to publications that come out after a man is defeated. As I understand, a Member will have his full privilege, up to his $1,800 limit, for publications that come out during the existence of his franking privilege.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that is all simplified. Under the limitation of $1,800 he has anything that is available up to the time he goes out.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER. What is the cost of the yearbooks and the book on the diseases of cattle and horses?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, they differ, according to the number of copies and the number of pages printed.

Mr. WHEELER. What did they cost this year?

Mr. BARNHART. I have not inquired for 1915, but in 1914 I think it was about 78½ cents.

Mr. MANN. About 90 cents.

Mr. BARNHART. They probably sell for that at the document room. It depends, of course, on the number published, very largely. We are now publishing a new horse book, and there is a great deal of new copy going into it. After the type has once been set up and electrotyped the Government can run off extra volumes very much cheaper than the original print cost.

Mr. WHEELER. Suppose there is a large demand for horse books.

Mr. BARNHART. Well, suppose there is demand enough to take all your allotment in horse books and no requests for anything else. You are getting what you want for your district, and under the present plan you do not get what your people want, but you have a lot of junk on hand that you would like to trade for what you need.

Mr. KREIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. KREIDER. Will a Member be furnished with the value of each book, so that he may have some idea how fast he is drawing on his allotment?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, yes; they will publish a catalogue with the prices of all the books, and you can select from that any Government publication you choose.

Mr. KREIDER. I think the gentleman is making a very desirable change. I know in my case I have, I suppose, a ton of stuff down there that I would be glad to send out, but I am afraid to send it out, for fear the people receiving it would consider it an insult.

Mr. BARNHART. I think some might take it at least as a joke.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Does the $1,800 allowed each Member include publications that are authorized by special resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. It provides for everything that now goes to the folding room, and, in addition, the farmers' bulletins.

Mr. BLACK. For instance, the report of the Industrial Commission. These reports are authorized by resolution of the House. Would they be included?

Mr. BARNHART. They would. They would be printed and catalogued and priced, and each Member could have as many as he wished. This goes into the allotment, which totals from $1,600 to $1,650 under the present plan.

Mr. BLACK. Is a Member allowed these different documents under the present law; is it fixed by act of Congress?

Mr. BARNHART. The allotment is fixed by the bill when it passes.

Mr. BLACK. I mean under the present law?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; they are all provided as authorized by law.

Mr. BLACK. What is the status of the resolution passed by the House in regard to the report of the Industrial Relations Committee?

Mr. BARNHART. It has just passed the Senate, and the bill is now on my desk in the hope that I may call it up to-morrow and have it finally passed.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. Taking into consideration the value of the documents that are now allotted under the bill proposed by the gentleman's committee, will there be a decrease or increase in the allotment of documents?

Mr. BARNHART. An increase in allotment. The cost of the allotment now is about $1,650, and this bill adds to that the Farmers' Bulletins, which is, I think, $100 more, or a little less, depending on the number of pages in the bulletin. We have made that a part of the distribution plan so that you may have it all in bulletins if you wish, and then we have added $50 more so that there will be a little leeway, and thereby you can have it all in documents or bulletins.

Mr. HOWARD. The intrinsic value of the documents is $1,800, and under the present law it is $1,650.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but $100 of that $1,800 is Farmers' Bulletins. That is, as included in the present plan.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. With pleasure.

Mr. REILLY. Is the gentleman not mistaken as to the cost of the 12,000 Farmers' Bulletins?

Mr. BARNHART. No; I think not; but I am not sure.

Mr. REILLY. You buy them of the Public Printer and they cost 5 cents apiece.

Mr. BARNHART. The average cost per year of the Farmers' Bulletins, I think, is about $100.

Mr. REILLY. And that is for the 12,000?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Government prints occasionally special volumes, like the Colonial Debates and Messages of the Presidents and other special publications. Could a part of this allotment be used for any publications of that sort?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; the provisions of the law cover every publication that the House or the Senate authorizes as a public document.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Or has authorized.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; if they are ordered. In reference to these special publications to which the gentleman refers, they are included in the basis of the committee's estimate. We have taken the cost of all of the congressional publications for the past 14 years for the 392 Members, and it averages about $1,600.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. With pleasure.

Mr. TILSON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the Farmers' Bulletins can be bought hereafter at the rate of $8 a thousand?

Mr. BARNHART. I did not say that.

Mr. TILSON. You figure 12,500 bulletins to cost $100, and we are to pay only the cost; that is about what it figures out.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but I may be mistaken about the cost. It might be $200, but my recollection is that it is $100 for the 12,500. It is either $100 or $200.

Mr. TILSON. At any rate, the gentleman understands that we will be permitted to purchase under our allotment these Farmers' Bulletins at cost rates?

Mr. BARNHART. I would not say that. I understand that the joint committee or the Public Printer fixes the value of documents that are for sale to the public, and if you purchase as the public you will not get it for the same price as that at which they are allotted to Members of Congress for free distribution, because that is at actual cost, whereas in the sale of public documents to the public the price is fixed so as to cover costs of sale, storage, and other items incident to retailing publications.

Mr. TILSON. If a Congressman wished to go in now and get 5,000 extra Farmers' Bulletins, does the gentleman understand that he could get them at something like the rate he indicates?

Mr. BARNHART. If he would have to buy them through the Superintendent of Documents—I could not say as to that; but if the Agricultural Department wanted to order them at actual cost, that is what they would cost the Congressman, and that is the average price they have been costing, taking an average of several years.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I suppose, this being a public document, if a Member wanted farmers' bulletins he could go and get them. They are stereotyped.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. He could go and get them at cost and have them folded for nothing.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; I think so.

Mr. CANNON. So that he would buy 10 per cent cheaper than the public would?

Mr. BARNHART. I presume so, although the bill does not carry anything of that kind, because this provision for the sale of these documents is made by the Joint Committee on Printing and is not in this bill.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. BARNHART. We could not do that, because there is a variation in the cost of paper, and so forth. A permanent price could not be fixed here. Costs of production vary too much. The price of paper and ink is now higher than it was a year ago. Indeed, there are many things entering into variation of cost that we could not safely fix a standard price.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking now touching speeches that we all send out. I get an estimate of the cost. The envelopes cost me nothing, the frank is printed. The speech is stereotyped and I can order any amount that I choose to order and pay for them.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. At cost?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. So that I apprehend the farmers' bulletins could be obtained in the same way?

Mr. BARNHART. I think so, or approximately so.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. In the bill as it passed the House a year ago there was a provision, section 50, paragraph 3, for the printing of daily reports of hearings of committees of Congress. I understand that the Senate eliminated that section?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but I will explain to the gentleman that, while the Senate has eliminated that section, if the House will stand by the committee we will put it in the bill again and make another effort to keep it in.

Mr. ROGERS. May I ask if it is the gentleman's plan to offer that as an amendment?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; we have the copy of it already prepared.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. As I understood the gentleman's answer to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], this bill fixes the value of documents which each Member may draw at substantially the value of the documents now allotted to each Member?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; practically that.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to suggest this: Every year we find an increase in population in the country, and every year there is an increased demand for a great many publications—for instance, the Horse Book, the Cattle Book, and the Yearbook, and the five or six or seven hundred Farmers' Bulletins. Does the gentleman believe that with this increase of demand, which is a healthy demand and a proper demand, the House should bind itself to conditions in the past? Ought we not rather to keep abreast of the conditions of the present and increase the amount?

Mr. BARNHART. The committee decided that the thing to do in a matter of that kind would be for Congress to cross the bridge when it comes to it.

Mr. RUCKER. But we have already got to the bridge.

Mr. BARNHART. I think it is a safe proposition that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] does not use one-fourth of the documents that are allotted to him.

Mr. RUCKER. This is true. I have run my face down here at the Agricultural Department I believe right now for 20,000 more Farmers' Bulletins than I was entitled to, and I have not a single one to waste. I have an almost unlimited demand from farmers and all the schools in my district. They are very greatly in demand and my opinion about it is that if you send forth to the country the word that a Member can get up to $1,800 worth of Farmers' Bulletins there will be a demand on him for substantially that amount, and, therefore, we will not be able to supply demands for other things. That is the fear I have.

Mr. CANNON. May I make a suggestion to the gentleman along that line?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. I would be very glad to hear from the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. Somebody prompts demands from school children by round robins.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Frequently I get from one high school a request for as many as 200, plus, and I find that each boy and girl wants a copy of some particular document—100 or 200 of them.

Mr. RUCKER. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in the time of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. If, as a matter of fact, there be 25 or 50 boys or girls or both in a school who are studying agricultural conditions, is it not well to furnish them with bulletins?

Mr. CANNON. But they do not know what they ask for. Somebody has prompted them to do it, because it is just like a round robin. Each boy and each girl asks for identically the same bulletin.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will permit, I will explain how I get through with difficulties of that sort. In my State of Indiana we do not have free textbooks, but the school boards furnish a great many charts and things of that sort which conduce to the general education of the pupils. When I have these requests from schools I, in substance, say to the teachers who make the requests, or the pupils, that the Government of the United States does not print enough bulletins to furnish to all schools in my district, but the school board can purchase them at about the cost of the actual printing by sending to the superintendent of documents at Washington, D. C., and I have never had any difficulty in getting out of my trouble in that way. I believe if these Farmers' Bulletins are used as textbooks, that the school boards in the several States ought to make provision to furnish them as they make provision for other documents which they use.

Mr. RUCKER. It looks to me, if the gentleman will pardon me, like reasoning in a circle. After all, the people pay the expense.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that is true.

Mr. RUCKER. It is immaterial, so far as the Government is concerned, whether it is paid through State or National channels—the people pay for it. Now, if there be a demand, such as I think exists, I believe we ought to supply it, because the Government can supply it more cheaply than the various States can supply, and especially, after all, as the people pay for it. My suggestion is this, in brief: I believe that along this line we can not be accused of prodigality or wanton waste. I believe the amount, instead of being $1,800, ought to be at least $2,500, for the reason that no gentleman will ask for publications that he does not want, and in this way we avoid the publication of thousands of documents which are expensive and which serve no useful purpose apart, probably, from the use of a few scientific men.

Mr. BARNHART. Has the gentleman ever heard of a professional document distributer in Congress?

Mr. RUCKER. A professional what? I do not know what the gentleman means. Who is it?

Mr. BARNHART. I am just asking. If the gentleman does not know, I will not say anything about it.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman means to indicate that he is now talking to a professional document distributer I want to say frankly I have been at the service of the humblest citizen in my district to furnish any document furnished by Congress if it is available and I can get it, and I am not embarrassed in my pursuit of those documents, and get them if I can.

Mr. BARNHART. Just a word in reply to that. I certainly meant no reference to the gentleman from Missouri, but I knew of several instances which have come to my attention since I have been chairman of the Committee on Printing, and one is that a certain Member of Congress sent a full carload of documents, most of which were obsolete, into his district for distribution. I know that because I have a relative in the Railway Mail Service who told me that an entire carload of documents went into that district at one shipment. I merely called the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to that fact because I heard of this instance and have heard of other instances wherein a demand for public documents is created by writing all over the district and inquiring if they did not want this, that, or the other, and if the public understand they can get anything free they may be expected to ask for them, whether they use them or not. A legitimate demand for a public document certainly means when a man really needs it and writes for it in order to get some benefit out of it; but if they are sent all sorts of stuff in which they are not interested it is thrown into the waste basket, just as I used to do before I became a Member of Congress and as my friend from Pennsylvania and others here know newspaper men do, and the public does the same.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will pardon me for a moment, I will say I fully agree with the gentleman, but so far as the people getting something for nothing I get rather tired of that, and I am not criticizing the gentleman there, but a man can not get something for nothing if he pays for it, and the taxpayer in this instance pays for it. Now, I do not understand that a farmer in a district is going to ask for a horse book if he does not want it, or for a Yearbook if he does not want it, and I am trying to protect him from a whole lot of charts, figures, and a whole lot of stuff being put off on him which nobody wants, but it is a kind of imposition on a Member of Congress. He has got to do something to justify the people in sending him here, and as he can not do anything else he, unfortunately, sometimes makes mistakes and sends out a lot of stuff which sometimes justifies severe criticism, and what he wants to do is to get an adequate quantity of good stuff, that which the people really want and will use and will derive benefit from.

Mr. BARNHART. Now, the purpose of this bill—I think we can reach an understanding readily—the purpose of this bill is to do the very thing that the gentleman from Missouri has been suggesting and all the other Members have been suggesting, and that is to give to the people, for instance, of your district that which they actually want and not give you a whole lot of stuff for distribution in your district that nobody in your district will use, and thereby I say the amount we have now allotted to each Member, if he will use it, will be of vastly more benefit to his people.

Mr. RUCKER. I think the gentleman is absolutely right. I can see now that when your bill becomes a law—and I intend to vote for it—I can see now staring me in the face a demand in my district for so many Agricultural Year Books that I have got to say to them I can not furnish them, because Congress will not appropriate the money in some way.

Mr. BARNHART. I think Congress will take care of the wants of the people in the way of increased appropriation if they find it necessary. If you want to increase this allotment from $1,800 to $2,500 and have the majority, it can be done whenever occasion requires; but we are starting out on this basis because we believe it would furnish not only more documents than each Member is now getting, but it is taking these useless documents that are now being allotted to you and turning them into real live stuff for distribution.

Mr. RUCKER. I fully agree with the gentleman, and I think your bill is an admirable one, and I am for it; but I wish you would increase it by putting it $2,500.

Mr. BRITTEN. Has the gentleman's committee ever considered an exchange of publications for seed where the seed is not desired; in city districts, for instance? Has your committee ever considered making an exchange of agricultural bulletins for seed?

Mr. BARNHART. The law could hardly do that, but the Members can do what trading they desire to do, so far as the committee is concerned. You could, I presume, take the seeds allotted to you and trade them to Members from the rural districts who might want seeds rather than documents, and you could thus have documents, and both of you serve your constituents better thereby.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course I understand that.

Mr. BARNHART. But the law, I think, ought not to undertake to authorize any transfers of that sort.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. There seem to be many admirable features in your bill. I thought I would inquire of the gentleman if it provides for the stoppage of a leakage in reference to the public documents provided for Members of the House? Now, I will preface my question by these premises: When I was here four years ago I ran out of horse books, and cattle books, and farmers' agricultural books, and the necessity arose for buying some. I was informed that around on a certain street we could buy all we wanted at certain prices. I remember to have sent off a sack of these books to a certain postmaster, writing the name of the constituents on the books, but the sack did not reach the post office. I began to feel that there was a "nigger in the woodpile." The late Junior Brown and myself employed a man to look into the situation, and we discovered about 170 sacks of the books, but we did not know whether ours were among them or not, down here in a certain barn, and I could not find anybody who had directed the books to that barn. I do not know how they came there unless they were taken by some person. Now, what I want to know is, Does your bill provide for the stoppage of that leakage?

Mr. BARNHART. It provides for the fine of a Member of Congress who will indulge in it, and, further than that, the committee did not provide any detective service to apprehend violators, but it does provide what the present law does not, namely, a heavy fine for a Member of Congress, or any employee of Congress, or any employee of the Government Printing Office for selling these public documents or disposing of them in any other way except as provided by this law. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. It is very gratifying to hear that much. Now, how about the people not in the Government service and who are not Members of Congress having these public documents for sale? What provision do you make to ascertain where they get them from?

Mr. BARNHART. I would not know of any other way except that you file a complaint of some sort and bring them before the court and compel them to answer.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I want to say to the chairman, and to the House as well, that I have had that experience and I have no doubt if the truth was known other Members of the House have had the same experience, and we do not know how many of our own books we have been buying heretofore.

Mr. BARNHART. And we do not know how many of the documents we have sent out that may have been sold to other Members and sent out by them.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. They would hardly be sent back here and put in a barn.

Mr. BARNHART. I admit that.

I want a few minutes more, and I think it would be better to take these matters up when we come to the sections carrying these provisions or precautions. I have 20 minutes more and the time is approaching when I shall have to yield the floor, and I want to make a few more statements.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I will not detain you but a few moments. If your bill does not provide taking care of that matter, would you object to an amendment along that line?

Mr. BARNHART. Not at all. I think it is covered sufficiently so that the gentleman from West Virginia will be entirely satisfied with it. We have it so strong that there may be some objection to it on the floor of the House because it may possibly seem to be a reflection on Members. On the other hand, the thing is happening continuously that the gentleman refers to, and the committee is fully aware of it. It seems to me there should be some protection against abuses like that and that people should be given the documents to which they are entitled.

Another feature of this bill is the regulation of the franking privilege. The bill does not seek to curtail the possibility of any Member of the House using the franking privilege to the largest extent consistent with efficient service. But it does seek to curtail the privilege of some outside interest sending a speech to some Member of the House or the Senate asking him to get time to deliver it on the floor in the interest of some special propaganda or some special interest, and then providing the money to have these speeches printed with the understanding—and under the present condition it is perfectly legitimate—that the printed speech shall be inclosed in an envelope furnished by the Government and carrying the frank of the Member who delivered the speech, so that the special interests or the individual who is interested in the propaganda may broadcast it all over the United States.

By reference to the report of this committee you will find that in some instances the privilege has been abused. Within my own knowledge it was abused in the case of one Member of Congress having delivered a speech and having 2,000,000 copies of it printed; and the interests that were back of this propaganda employed some 30 or 40 women here in Washington, rented rooms, and imposed on the Government of the United States to the extent of using free mails and free envelopes to broadcast that speech throughout the United States—a speech in which, if I understood the matter aright, the Member himself or his State was not greatly interested.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not want the gentleman to give the name, if he thinks he should not; but it does seem to me, in fairness to this House, that he ought to give the name of the Member who did that.

Mr. BARNHART. I will say to the gentleman from Washington that if the committee were to start in and give the names of Members who have indulged in questionable practices of that kind it would be surprising. But I think it was not intentionally done. It is generally supposed that this is all right. The Member does not know exactly what he is entitled to, and the Member might say: "This is a matter of special interest to the world and to the United States." But I have in mind not only that one, but very, very many others. I gave that one as a particular instance. I recall this—and it was so reported to me by the Government Printing Office—that at one time a million copies of a Member's speech on prohibition were circulated to the people of the United States through misused franking privilege, and at another time a speech on high-protective tariff was sent here for delivery, and then there were printed and sent to an agency in a city not very far from Washington 750,000 copies of that speech, and those copies were distributed by this organization through misused franking privilege as a propaganda. Now, I am not saying that the same thing might not be done by an antiprohibition propaganda if the liquor interests of the country wanted a speech printed and distributed by a Member. Under the practice they would have the same privilege as the other propaganda enjoyed. But the bill seeks to stop all outside use and abuse of the franking privilege.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is it not a fact that an entire book or publication by Henry George was printed in the RECORD on one occasion and circulated through the mails free?

Mr. BARNHART. I have no personal knowledge of that, but I have heard a rumor that that was done. But it is not uncommon that these things are done, and I do not think that, as a rule, there has been any evil intention on the part of the Members who do it, because they feel that other Members have been doing it and that it has been a custom. We have all been engaged in it more or less, because we do not know what is the absolute dividing line of consistency with respect to the distribution of public documents.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As a matter of fact, it is not illegal under the laws as they stand. A Member is not violating the law.

Mr. BARNHART. That is true. It is a free pitch in.

Mr. TRIBBLE. May I interrupt the gentleman with a question there?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. There was one feature of the bill that was objected to in the previous Congress, and I trust that feature is not in the bill at the present time. It is on the question of envelopes. As a rule, when I send out a speech I take a leaf of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and print the speech on that. If you fold it and put it in these small envelopes, they go to the district and your constituents can conveniently put them in their pockets and read them. Now, the bill provides that speeches shall be sent out in great big envelopes. I think the Members of the House should be advised of that fact, that this bill provided last year that no small envelopes should be provided for speeches. Is that feature still in the bill?

Mr. BARNHART. It is still there.

Mr. TRIBBLE. You have got in this bill the provision for the large envelopes?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Can you explain why I should not be allowed to send out a small envelope, take a leaf of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and fold it four times, or take a small speech of two pages and fold it three times? Now, to put that in a great big envelope would absolutely look ridiculous. Will not the gentleman agree to allow small envelopes to be used, of the same material as the big envelope? You have four times as much material in the large envelopes as in the small ones. Why not give us the small envelope?

Mr. BARNHART. That is an easy question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. It is not easy for me.

Mr. BARNHART. I will try to answer it. The provision was placed in the bill after long observation, both by the Government Printing Office and by the members of the Joint Committee on Printing, of the fact that the envelope privilege was being the most grossly abused, probably, of any privilege in the House. If I were to tell the gentleman of all the instances that I know of such abuse he would be surprised. I have in mind one specific instance of a Member of Congress, not now a Member—he has gone to his reward—and, as I recall it, he claimed he was proceeding all right. He gave an order at one time for 60,000 No. 6¼ white envelopes with his frank on it, and at the same time he gave an order for 60,000 white envelopes, No. 6, and in his misconception of the law he explained to the man to whom he gave the order that he was going to take the No. 6¼ envelope and put a Farmers' Bulletin in it and a letter and inclose a No. 6 envelope addressed to himself for reply; and while he did not know it, he was violating the law in inviting every voter in his district to violate the law in sending back to him a franked reply.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I was not inquiring about the good envelopes. I am speaking of the same material out of which you make your big envelopes.

Mr. BARNHART. I want to answer the gentleman's question, but I would like to be permitted to go ahead with my statement. It is so badly disconnected now by interruptions that I do not think I can get it cleared up. I will answer that there was a further motive in that, and that is that some Members of Congress draw their $125 stationery allowance in money, and then evidently go to the Government Printing Office and secure free the good white No. 6 and No. 6¼ document envelopes and use them in their private correspondence.

Mr. TRIBBLE. The gentleman is talking about good envelopes, and I am talking about manila envelopes.

Mr. BARNHART. I see that there could not be that objection in that case, but I was explaining what the committee had in mind. The man who did that in the case I have in mind did not do it, I take it, with any intention to violate the law. That was done just as other things are done under the present loose conditions. It was a free pitch in. But, as a matter of fact, it is an imposition upon the Public Treasury. Some Members of Congress do not do these things, and therefore they are discriminated against by Members who do indulge in these grab-bag methods. I do not say that as a reflection on Members, because it has been so common, and the law is so lax or indistinct in this matter of public documents and as to the franking privilege, that nobody, I presume, has specifically and intentionally violated the law; but the law has been violated by wholesale, and the committee has been fully advised of it. So that they have attempted to stop it in such a way as will prevent the accusation that is frequently made, that Members of Congress are engaged in franking graft and document graft at the expense of the people for which charges there may be at times some foundation, although not intentionally done.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FESS. A Member has the privilege of taking the money which is allowed him for stationery in lieu of the stationery?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Why should that custom exist? Why should not that be corrected?

Mr. BARNHART. For this reason: Some Members of Congress desire to buy their stationery at home. I know some Members who spend their stationery allowance in their home districts, with their home printers. They prefer to do it in that way.

Mr. FESS. Surely it would not be cheaper to do it that way than to buy their stationery here, which is printed at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BARNHART. I can not say as to that.

Mr. FESS. There is an allowance in money to each Member for stationery?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; an allowance of $125 a year.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will yield for just one more question, and then I have agreed to yield a part of my time. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. We were to have had two hours for the general debate.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have another hour, or such time as he desires.

Mr. BARNHART. We have not been at work on this bill two hours. We have occupied only one hour.

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. I have an hour.

Mr. BARNHART. The committee as a whole have two hours for general debate under the rule, and I certainly want to yield a part of that time.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman has used all of his time except four minutes, I ask unanimous consent that his time may be extended for an hour, or such part of it as he desires to use.

Mr. BARNHART. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his courtesy, but I do not want to use that much time. I want to get to the reading of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Then 30 minutes.

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. I will yield out of my time such time as the gentleman desires.

Mr. BARNHART. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not want to take up any time, but I wish to say to my friend from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that I am one of the Members who draw the $125 instead of drawing stationery from the House stationery room, and I would like to state why I prefer to do it. I do not want to take it out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. BARNHART. That is perfectly legitimate.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do it because I have had trouble about my account on two or three occasions. I do not like to carry any account. I like to pay for things as I go along.

Mr. BARNHART. Many Members feel the same way about it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not like to run accounts.

Mr. BARNHART. It is an allowance in money, just the same as a Member's clerk hire.

Mr. TILSON. As a matter of fact, it costs a Member fully that, or more, for his stationery during the year.

Mr. FESS. It costs me more than that.

Mr. COLEMAN. Has the gentleman from Indiana any objection to our using a small envelope, if made of the same material as the large one?

Mr. BARNHART. I apprehend there can be no serious objection to that. When we get to that section of the bill we can discuss that fully.

Mr. COLEMAN. I think it is an imposition upon the mail carriers of the District to make them carry thousands of these large envelopes when they can easily carry the smaller ones.

Mr. DILL. The gentleman suggested that the franking privilege was to be limited in regard to the sending out of speeches made by some one else and for certain purposes. Does this bill limit the number of a man's own speeches which he may send out?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no. It limits the privilege to the man himself or to one of the national campaign committees.

Mr. DILL. But if he sees fit to hire some one outside of his office, and let somebody outside of his office address them, does this bill prohibit that?

Mr. BARNHART. No; it puts him on his honor and under a penalty not to give this privilege to somebody to exploit a private propaganda at Government expense.

Mr. DILL. If it is the Member's propaganda, then what?

Mr. BARNHART. That is perfectly proper. That is his own privilege.

Mr. BENNET. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BENNET. I call the gentleman's attention to an instance of what has been done. A man not a Member of Congress sent down to the Government Printing Office and ordered 25,000 or 30,000 copies of a speech made by a man not now in Congress, and directed the Public Printer to put on the envelopes the frank of a Member of Congress who was not consulted, and by simply sending to the Public Printer the money to pay for the printing of those speeches had them shipped to him for distribution in the district. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether that is to be permitted?

Mr. BARNHART. I think the committee are unanimous in the belief that that would open the door very widely for abuse, and the fact is that any Member could secure those speeches through his national committee. We provide a means for taking care of that. In such a case it will all be charged up to the committee under the new bill, which will not permit individuals here, there, and everywhere to pay for the printing of speeches and then avail themselves of the franking privilege, which is a privilege that belongs exclusively to Members of Congress.

Mr. BENNET. I do not think the gentleman did me the honor to give very close attention to my question. I said that was done in 1915. My question was whether it would be possible to do it under this bill.

Mr. BARNHART. It would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER], and I ask unanimous consent that Mr. MILLER may speak on a subject not related to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MILLER] may speak on a subject not related to the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make some observations on the question of requiring claimants who ask to be compensated for property taken or destroyed by authority of the United States Government during the Civil War to prove the loyalty of the owner of such property at the time it was taken or destroyed. The observations, however, are only a prelude to reciting an incident which had its inception in the South during the progress of the war and its culmination in the North after the close of the war, in which a chivalrous and gallant citizen of Atlanta, Ga., was an active participant. I believe such incidents should be preserved, as they tend to unite more firmly the bonds of fraternity and loyalty of our common country.

Some days ago, in the discussion of a bill reported by the Committee on Claims, a motion was brought before the House to dispense with the proof by the claimant of the loyalty of the owner of goods taken or destroyed during the Civil War at the time such goods were taken. During the discussion the tragedy of the war was recalled, and, as I then and and now believe, some uncharitable and unnecessary remarks were made concerning the attitude of the people of the South at the time the war was in progress.

A few days later a Member on the side of the House to the Speaker's right made some equally unnecessary, mistaken, and uncharitable remarks about the attitude of the people residing at Gainsville, Tex., in 1862, in the thirteenth congressional district, now represented by a gentleman, Mr. STEPHENS, whom I am glad and proud to call my friend.

Prior to these occurrences I had formed and oftimes expressed the hope that the day for raking over the embers of the Civil War had passed. I confess that in the late sixties and early seventies, when engaged in the heat of a political campaign, I sometimes waved the ensanguined emblem; but I trust that time and age have softened the asperities of youth, and I can truthfully repeat the words of the sainted and immortal Lincoln, "With malice toward none and charity for all," and take by the hand my friends who represent the thirteenth district in Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], the fifth of Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], the ninth of North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], and the third of Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN] with the same feelings of friendship that I do my friend from the second of Illinois [Mr. MANN], of the second of New Hampshire [Mr. WASON], and of the eighth [Mr. WATSON], twenty-fourth [Mr. TEMPLE], twenty-ninth [Mr. PORTER], and thirty-second [Mr. BARCHFELD] of my own beloved Pennsylvania, and wish them each and all a fair journey through life and at the end a "crossing of the bar" in joy and peace.

But, as I said at the outset, I did not take the floor so much to say the foregoing as to relate an incident that should arouse the sensibilities of our better natures. On the same day on which the discussion first above referred to occurred I had occasion to repair to the House restaurant and took a seat at the same table with the courteous gentleman who so ably represents the fifth Georgia district [Mr. HOWARD]. We talked about the discussion just had in the House. We agreed that the North and South were now equally loyal to the Government and equally loved the common flag of our country. I remarked that the people of the South had the same justification in remembering, honoring, and revering the memories of the men who marched with Lee, and Jackson, and Pickett, and Longstreet, and other Confederate generals to victory and final defeat that the people of the North had to remember, honor, and revere the men who marched with Grant, and Sherman, and Thomas, and Sheridan, and Meade, and other Union generals to final victory. [Applause.]

My Georgia friend remarked that if any man could have a supposed grievance against the North he thought he could, but added, "I want you to believe that I have not." He then continued: "My father was a man of considerable means when the war broke out. In addition to his home in Atlanta, he was largely interested in manufacturing, and just outside the city he had a large farm stocked with horses, cattle, and other farm animals to the number of several hundred.

"When Atlanta was occupied by the Union Army, Gen. Sherman made my father's dwelling his headquarters, and during the time it was so occupied Gen. McPherson had been killed in battle and his body was brought to Gen. Sherman's headquarters and laid out for burial in my father's house on a davenport in one of the rooms, and was taken thence to his home for burial.

"After Gen. Sherman moved on south and his protection withdrawn the buildings of my father in town and country and his factories in the city were burned and the personal property on the farm seized and taken for the use of the Union Army. My father was left homeless and practically penniless.

"Some household furniture was saved from the fire, and among it the davenport, which was an heirloom and highly prized by the family."

Years passed by, the Society of Ohio, an organization formed interalia to perpetuate the glory and memory of the soldiers from Ohio who had died in the Southland, heard of the incident of the davenport. They secured the address of the Atlanta gentleman who owned it. They wrote a letter of inquiry and learned that he still owned and possessed the relic. They then wrote a second letter, stating that they were collating mementos of Gen. McPherson and asked him if he would sell the davenport; and if so, to price it to them. He wrote back that the davenport was an heirloom; that as such he highly prized it; that he would not sell it, but that if the society would accept it as a gift he would make a present of it to them. With his own hands he crated it, delivered it to the railroad depot, paid the freight on it to its destination, and shipped it to the society, where, with other relics of the brave and gallant McPherson, it to-day graces the hall of the society. [Applause.]

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the opportunity to vote for a bill to reimburse the descendants of this gallant and chivalrous southern gentleman for some of the loss their ancestor sustained and dispense with proof as to his loyalty to the United States Government at the time of the loss. Perhaps such a bill would be inopportune, but we can all rejoice with his loved ones that they have inherited from this father a legacy richer than lands or gold or rubies, the memory of one who could so soon so far forget his own misfortunes as to aid in perpetuating the honor of the commander of those who had so lately despoiled him.

I hope that some day I may visit Atlanta and as a token of respect for gallantry and chivalry—may I not say to loyalty as he then saw it—plant a flower in the sod beneath which all that was once mortal now rests. Requiesct in pace! [Applause.]

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may speak on a subject not related to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. OLIVER). The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri may speak on a subject not related to the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, what is the present condition of affairs in Mexico? It was on or about October 9 last that Carranza was recognized by the United States as the head of the Mexican Government. With the moral force which this gave him he has been recognized by the other powers and has been enabled to resume diplomatic relations with the world. This carries with it the power of controlling the national forces and the pledging of the national credit as well as disposing of the national property, and it should carry with it the responsibility to maintain a reasonable degree of public order. The question which Americans are asking themselves to-day is, "Is there a responsible government in Mexico to whom foreigners can look for protection, or is there simply a de facto government with diplomatic rights but with no national responsibility?"

It may be said that the present government is a de facto one only, and that Carranza is not President or even provisional President, but only the first chief of a revolution. How long should a de facto government continue, and why? This one claims to have continued for more than three years, and was formally recognized by us more than six months ago. What duties and responsibilities, if any, to foreign residents and friendly powers does a de facto government escape by remaining in that nebulous condition?

The first chief of the revolution, since he was recognized as the head of the Government, has not even been directing his government from the City of Mexico, the national capital. On the other hand, it is averred that he has assumed the power of taxation, and possibly also of confiscation of property, and that he has bargained away concessions and franchises; that he deals with the national credit; that he enjoys a diplomatic standing which enables him to protest against the invasion of the national right or injury to the national dignity or the unauthorized use of the national railroads or other property. It does seem that the ruler who objects to the exercise of police power by neighboring States who have shown the most helpful and friendly spirit toward him should further show that he is not only willing but able to police the country himself. We have a right to expect that accompanying these protests of national dignity shall be a vigorous and sincere exercise of the national power for the protection of the rights of friendly nations and their citizens. Can it be possible that a government exists that is all rights and no duties, which has the power to protest but not to police, which can criticize but not cooperate?

For my own part I believe that American citizens have a right to be in Mexico and even to own property and to carry on industrial enterprises there. [Applause.] While there may be some large American interests in Mexico, there must be a very much larger number of interests which are of very moderate size, and an overwhelming majority of small interests and individual properties; but, big or little, American enterprise has a right to go abroad. [Applause.] American citizens and their business and property must be protected and respected in other lands. If we are to burst the shackles of provincialism and build up a foreign commerce our citizens and their business enterprises must be encouraged to seek foreign fields. While Americans who choose to locate abroad and to make investments in other countries must obey the law of the country where they are domiciled, must refrain from fomenting political discord, and, to some extent, must even bear with patience local troubles and vicissitudes, yet having done so they have the right to demand the protection of a stable and responsible government ready, able, and willing to respond to its national and international obligations. The existence of such a government ready to demonstrate its willingness and power to cooperate with this Government is the only permanent basis of peace in Mexico. [Applause.]

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech of the Hon. John J. Sullivan, on William McKinley.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the speech referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KIESS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, before commencing to read the bill I want to state very briefly that the committee has an understanding with several gentlemen who can not be here today that section 14, relating to wages in the Government Printing Office; section 15, relative to leave of absence; and section 20, relating to the printing of Government envelopes, be passed, and that we may consider those sections at a future time when the bill is under consideration. I ask unanimous consent that those three sections be passed over when we come to them and that we may return to them some time in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. OGLESBY. Reserving the right to object. Do any of these sections cover the size of the Government envelope?

Mr. BARNHART. No; it relates to the stamped envelopes that the Government prints and sells.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that sections 14, 15, and 20 be passed for the present, and that they may be returned to in the future. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be a Joint Committee on Printing, consisting of three members of the Committee on Printing of the Senate and three members of the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, to be designated by the Committee on Printing of the Senate and by the Committee on Printing of the House of Representatives, respectively.

SEC. 1. Par. 2. The members of the Joint Committee on Printing who are reelected to the succeeding Congress shall continue as members of said committee until their successors are designated as provided for in this section: Provided, That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall, on the last day of a Congress, appoint members of their respective Houses who have been elected to the succeeding Congress to fill the vacancies then about to occur on said committee, and such appointments shall continue until their successors are designated as provided for herein. The Joint Committee on Printing as constituted by this section shall exercise all the powers and duties devolving upon said committee under the law, and it may authorize one or more of its members to exercise such of its functions as necessity shall require when Congress is not in session.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "session," insert: "said committee shall elect from the members thereof a chairman and vice chairman, who shall not be Members of the same House.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Par. 1. The Joint Committee on Printing shall have power to adopt and employ such measures as, in its discretion, may be deemed necessary to remedy any neglect, delay, duplication, or waste in the execution of the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications, and shall exercise general supervision over printing and binding for Congress as provided for in this act.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman what is the object of the peculiar structure of the bill—making separate sections and labeling them part paragraphs and part sections? For instance, here is section 2, paragraph 1, and section 2, paragraph 2, and later on there are a number of paragraphs all constructed in the same way.

Mr. BARNHART. The purpose was, and it is the practice in many legislative bills, to group the special items together, so that they may be under a common head, for the purpose of indexing them and convenience in reference.

Mr. TILSON. Is there any particular object in maintaining the section numbers? Why should not section 2, paragraph 2, be section 3?

Mr. BARNHART. It is a matter of convenience in indexing; for instance, to bring the Government employees under one head, so that it is an easy matter to refer to them. While they could all be put in one paragraph the bill was prepared in this way in order to classify them and make it clearer and easier as reference.

Mr. TILSON. The committee tried to cover all matter relating to one subject under one section, designating different subheads as paragraphs.

Mr. BARNHART. That is so that they can be readily referred to by paragraph. That would be especially true in the law when printed.

Mr. TILSON. It is rather an unusual construction and that was the reason that I called attention to it.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The Joint Committee on Printing shall appoint a clerk, an inspector, and a stenographer, at $3,000, $2,000, and $1,000 per annum, respectively, to be appropriated for and paid one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. The clerk and the inspector shall give bonds for the faithful performance of their respective duties in the sum of $5,000 each, to be approved by the Joint Committee on Printing. The clerk of said committee shall perform such duties as shall be required of him by said committee and shall, unless otherwise provided for, edit and compile all memorial volumes and other documents printed under its direction. The inspector for said committee shall be a member of the boards of inspection and condemnation at the Government Printing Office, as provided for in this act, and shall perform such other duties as shall be required of him by said committee: Provided, That the Joint Committee on Printing may designate an employee of the Government Printing Office to act for said inspector for a period of not to exceed 30 days in any one fiscal year, without additional compensation therefor.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "appoint" and insert in lieu thereof the word "elect."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, just one word before the Clerk reads. I move to strike out the last word. I do not know much about the law as it now is or as it is proposed to be amended. This section provides, as amended, for the election of a clerk, an inspector, and a stenographer, at $3,000, $2,000, and $1,000, respectively, per annum. I see that the joint committee is to consist of three Members of each body—the Senate and the House. I suppose these clerks are to be divided up?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, that is the purpose in changing this word "appoint" to the word "elect." Heretofore the matter has been fairly divided; but the membership of the committee has always considered that the chairmanship of the Joint Committee on Printing belonged to the Senate, and when these clerks were appointed they were appointed by the chairman of the committee. The change in this language will give the entire membership of the committee the privilege of electing these officials, and that will make an equal distribution between the House and the Senate. That was the purpose in changing the word.

Mr. CANNON. How are they going to distribute three clerks evenly?

Mr. BARNHART. There are some others. There are several others to be appointed; for instance, the compiler of the Congressional Directory and the indexer of the RECORD. There is an equal number, and they have usually been divided satisfactorily. This change was suggested merely to facilitate the matter, that they may be elected rather than appointed.

Mr. CANNON. We will get the additional employees further on in the bill?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. There shall be appointed by the Public Printer a chief clerk, who shall act also as appointment clerk, at a salary of $2,500 per annum; an accountant, at $2,500 per annum; a superintendent of buildings and equipment, who shall possess a practical knowledge of mechanical, civil, and electrical engineering, at $3,000 per annum; a medical and sanitary officer, at $3,000 per annum; an assistant superintendent of work, who shall act also as foreman of printing and shall be a practical printer, at $2,750 per annum; a second assistant superintendent of work whenever required to supervise night work, who shall be a practical printer, at $2,500 per annum for the time so employed; a foreman of binding, who shall be a practical bookbinder, at $2,500 per annum; a foreman of presswork, who shall be a practical pressman, at $2,500 per annum; and a storekeeper, at $2,500 per annum; all of whom shall, under the direction of the Public Printer, perform the duties ordinarily attached to their respective positions and such other duties as this act or the Public Printer may require of them.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 14, after the word "annum" insert "and the additional amount paid for night work."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire what that means?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I will briefly explain. The assistant superintendent of night work is now paid $3,600 a year. The assistant superintendent who has charge of day work, and who has much larger responsibilities, is paid $2,500 a year. The rule at the Printing Office is that for night work they pay an additional allowance of 20 per cent; and it is the judgment of the committee, and it was the intention, that the night man should have a less allowance than the day man, except that he should have his 20 per cent extra for the night work. The day superintendent will now receive under the provisions of this bill $2,750, while the night superintendent will receive $2,500 plus the 20 per cent allowed for night work.

Mr. CANNON. Are these the same salaries they are getting now?

Mr. BARNHART. No; the man to which this refers now receives $3,600, and it is a reduction of $600 in his salary; but I think the gentleman from Illinois will agree with me that the man who is in charge of day work, including all of the job printing and everything of that sort, who has been receiving $2,500 a year, while his assistant, who has charge of night work, receives $3,600 a year, ought to have his salary increased, and that the present basis of pay is hardly fair. We therefore decided to increase the pay of the assistant day superintendent to $2,750 and reduce the night superintendent to $2,500 plus the 20 per cent, a total of $3,000.

Mr. CANNON. Otherwise, are these salaries increased or decreased generally along through the bill?

Mr. BARNHART. There is a change in the salary of the Deputy Public Printer from $4,500, now paid, to $4,000. I apprehend that the gentleman from Illinois will recall that at one time, when there was considerable disturbance in the Public Printing Office, when we had four different Public Printers in one year, the importance of having a competent man there was so clearly manifest that the salary of the Deputy Public Printer was increased so as to secure the services of such a man, and that Capt. Brian was at that time secured. He has proved an invaluable man, but after they got leveled down and started right again his wages were permitted to stand. The purpose is to increase the salary of the Public Printer, the responsible head, from $5,500 to $6,000, and, in order to be consistent with other departments of the Government and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, reduce the Deputy Public Printer to $4,000.

Mr. CANNON. What is he getting now?

Mr. BARNHART. Four thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. CANNON. And Capt. Brian is still the occupant of that position?

Mr. BARNHART. He is still there.

Mr. CANNON. He is still the Deputy Public Printer?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not believe that his salary ought to be reduced, at least as long as Capt. Brian remains there. I do not know where he comes from. He is certainly not a constituent of mine, but I do know about his competency. We may, it is true, increase the salary of the Public Printer, but the salary of as valuable an official as Capt. Brian I do not believe should be decreased.

Mr. BARNHART. I will say to the gentleman that it is not based upon any man, but it is based on the general average of employees in other departments and of other subordinate employees in the printing office. For instance, the superintendent of work, the most important man in the whole institution, is paid $3,600 a year. Now, the committee thought it was hardly fair to leave the salary of the Deputy Public Printer, whose duties, when the Public Printer is in charge, are not more important than the superintendent of work, at $4,500, while we leave the superintendent of work, necessarily a competent man, at $3,600; so in the adjustment we tried to get everything in the bound of reason and in harmony with the salaries paid in the other departments of the Government.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman said that Capt. Brian was brought in there when there was confusion and there was necessity for him.

Mr. BARNHART. Since then there have been several branches of foremanship established, such as chief clerk, and so forth, the duties of which Capt. Brian formerly performed and which he is not performing now. For instance, superintendence of the building was formerly under his charge, and other duties he once discharged have been distributed to others, because of the increase in duties and the responsibility that necessarily followed.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I shall not offer an amendment. Capt. Brian is a most competent man. I recollect during the time I served on the Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction over the appropriations for this service, and without speaking less for any other man, I thought that he was one of the most competent men who ever appeared before that committee.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but we are making law for the future. However, if the Appropriations Committee should propose to give Capt. Brian an additional thousand dollars, or five hundred dollars, per year, it could have my vote to that end, because he has been since his connection with the Government Printing Office a very dependable, a very worthy, and a very efficient official. There was no disposition to cut the salary of Capt. Brian because he was Capt. Brian, but at the same time, as a legislative proposition, the committee went all over this and really felt this was what ought to be done; that this is what the law ought to be, without considering Capt. Brian or any other man in the position.

Mr. CANNON. This is the House bill.

Mr. BARNHART. This is the House bill. The Senate committee has reported the Senate bill, which is practically the same; the salaries in this instance are identical.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I am not inclined to offer an amendment.

Mr. CONRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will yield, but I have no time to yield. The gentleman can move to strike out the last word in his own right.

Mr. CANNON. And then the gentleman can yield.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana what the salary has been heretofore of the practical printer who is now receiving $2,750 per annum—the day man?

Mr. BARNHART. Two thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. CONRY. And the gentleman's committee has increased the pay $250?

Mr. BARNHART. Why, we have just been all over that. Was the gentleman present?

Mr. CONRY. I was not present.

Mr. BARNHART. We have already passed that.

Mr. CONRY. For my satisfaction I should like to ask again.

Mr. BARNHART. I am willing to take the time to answer the gentleman.

Mr. CONRY. What was the reason for the increase?

Mr. BARNHART. For the reason we want to get it in harmony with other salaries, so there might not be a feeling prevail that some are getting too much and some too little. We tried, in a conscientious way, to equalize with the salaries paid in other departments of the Government.

Mr. CONRY. This increase is predicated upon the feeling that exists there, a feeling of dissatisfaction over the disproportion of salaries?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; this is why the salary of foreman of printing was fixed as it was, and he is now designated as assistant superintendent of work. If the superintendent of work should not be able to be present, his duty devolves upon the assistant, and the committee decided that it was only fair to increase him to $2,750 a year. Furthermore, it seemed to the committee that as the other assistant superintendent is in charge at night and receives $2,500 under the bill, an amendment was passed giving him the additional 20 per cent that is given all employees who work at night, making his salary $3,000 a year.

Mr. CONRY. Heretofore his salary has been $3,600.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONRY. Has the gentleman looked into the question to compare the salary received with the responsibilities that rest upon his shoulders?

Mr. BARNHART. We have.

Mr. CONRY. With salaries received by gentlemen occupying similar positions in the large printing establishments throughout the country?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; we have gone very largely on recommendations from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. CONRY. Is it not true that the salaries of those people occupying similar positions in large business establishments throughout the country average $80 a week?

Mr. BARNHART. I have no information to that effect.

Mr. CONRY. Did you investigate that view of the situation?

Mr. BARNHART. We have had hearings on this bill from time to time for six years.

Mr. CONRY. Did the gentleman who occupies this position have an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. BARNHART. I can say to the gentleman from New York that his wages, at $3,600, are in excess of any other amount that the committee heard of as being paid to any man holding a like position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CONRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONRY. Is it not true that the responsibilities he is compelled to assume justify this Government in paying him $3,600 a year?

Mr. BARNHART. We do not think so. If we did we would have left it in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. Par. 1. There shall be a superintendent of public documents in the Government Printing Office, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall give a bond in the sum of $25,000 for the proper accounting of all moneys received by him and the faithful performance of his duties. The superintendent of public documents shall receive a compensation of $3,500 per annum. He shall, under the direction of the Public Printer, have charge of the public documents office in the Government Printing Office and shall exercise general supervision over the distribution of all Government publications committed to his custody.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey rise?

Mr. HAMILL. To strike out the last word, and under cover of that fiction to ask a few questions. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee who it is that appoints the superintendent of documents at the present time?

Mr. BARNHART. The Public Printer appoints him.

Mr. HAMILL. And the purpose of this section is, then, to take from the Public Printer the power of appointment and to put it in other hands, is that so?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that is the purpose.

Mr. HAMILL. Well, gentlemen of the committee, I think that this a very unwise thing to do, and if I had been here when section 5 was being read I would have offered an amendment to that section which would have provided that the Deputy Public Printer be appointed by the Public Printer. I shall do so later. I think there is nothing so calculated to create discord in the running of a big shop like the Public Printing Office as taking out of the hands of the Public Printer the right to appoint his subordinates. Take, for instance, the case we are discussing, section 12, the superintendent of documents is appointed from an outside source. You do not have the harmony that you would have if the Public Printer appointed him. And there is another thing to be considered, and that is that you are taking this office out of the civil service. Now, none of us are against the civil service. At least, I never have found a gentleman yet, whatever his private intention, who had the temerity to stand in public and say he was a foe to the civil service, and when you are taking this important office, where a qualified man is needed, out of this system, you are dealing the system a blow which is very regrettable, indeed.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the committee in making these two changes was to relieve the Public Printer as much as possible from some of the rocks that proved so disastrous to other Public Printers in the past. It was done for that reason, and for the other, that the heads in other departments of the Government, the responsible heads, are appointed by the President. For instance, if this Deputy Public Printer and the superintendent of documents are appointed by the Public Printer, the Public Printer is the "whole works," and with our present Public Printer and with the one who preceded him, and whom I knew very well, I would not have any objection to such a condition prevailing. But nobody knows what the future may bring forth, and therefore the committee thought it would be safe that the President might have a representative in the Government Printing Office, here and there, that he could call on for information from time to time that might be helpful to the well-being of public service.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield.

Mr. FESS. To whom will the superintendent of public documents be responsible?

Mr. BARNHART. Indirectly the superintendent of public documents is responsible to the Congress of the United States, and he is also to the Public Printer. But directly he would be responsible to the President of the United States. Heretofore, when these disturbances occurred in the Government Printing Office which precipitated a whole lot of trouble and more or less scandal, it was openly charged by Members on the floor of the House and the Senate, and by newspapers, that there was a one-man combination in the Government Printing Office which there was no means of breaking through; that everybody was subservient to the Public Printer himself, and therefore there was no means of having any other representation in the Government Printing Office as they have in other departments of the Government. And as I say, one scandal after another followed, some of them no doubt unjust and unfounded, I take it, but the fact that the organization was so one manned, and thereby different from other departments of the Government, caused much of the trouble.

Both the Committees on Printing of the House and of the Senate felt that such a danger might confront us in the future, and in order to conserve against such a possibility this plan was adopted of having a Deputy Public Printer, who would be the Public Printer during the disability or absence of the Public Printer, and responsible to the President of the United States. And this superintendent of documents, who handles very large sums of money, and so forth, we felt ought also to be selected by the President.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman think the same efficiency will be subserved in this particular department?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; larger efficiency, because of direct responsibility. And I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] to this condition: In the State Department the Assistant Secretary and the Counselor are appointed by the President. In the Treasury Department the Assistant Secretaries, the Treasurer, and Assistant Treasurer, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the Comptroller of the Treasury, the Assistant Comptroller, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Superintendent of the Public Health Service, the Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, the Register of the Treasury, the Director of the Mint, and other heads of bureaus, are all appointed by the President. It is done for the purpose, I understand, of breaking up the possibility that there might be too much power in one of these departments with such large responsibilties and expenditures to be intrusted to one man's hands. I do not know what else, but what is true of the Treasury Department is true also of many others. I have here two full sheets of these instances of presidential appointments in departments.

Mr. FESS. Then this would not be setting a new precedent?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no. It is following other precedents that have doubtless proven very satisfactory, as they have not been abolished.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a pro forma amendment to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. What is the tenure of office? Does he hold one year or two years or four years?

Mr. BARNHART. It is in the discretion of the President, the same as other appointive officials.

Mr. CANNON. It is not under the civil service?

Mr. BARNHART. No; these two positions are not under the civil service.

Mr. CANNON. I know it is by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, but it is quite in the power of Congress to legislate that the appointment should be made by the President without the consent of the Senate. Yet the practice has grown up that it is by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. I have thought sometimes that this "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate," when unduly extended, running into thousand-dollar postmasters, for that matter, and a great many other places, tended to magnify the Senate when you came to distribute patronage and to minimize the House. I take it for granted that——

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just there? In these two particular instances these men are virtually the servants of the Congress, and if there is any place where there should be the approval of the Congress of appointees, it seems to me it is in the places held by these appointees who are to specially serve the Congress.

Mr. CANNON. But this has the approval of the Senate. However, there is much of printing done by the departments. I suppose that most of the printing that is done in the Government Printing Office is for the departments. I take it that is so.

Mr. BARNHART. The majority of it, I can assure the gentleman from Illinois, is for Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I am not informed as to that; and if the gentleman has investigated touching that, I would take his word for it a good deal quicker than I would any knowledge that I have. But I recollect on one occasion—and I will not mention names—where we had an Architect of the Capitol—always called "Architect of the Capitol"—and there was some jealousy amongst the architects outside, and they made a strong move to have him removed. He was a very competent man, an all-around man. For the work he has to do he is one of the most competent officials I have ever met. Yet the President appoints, and he was about to be removed and somebody else brought in. Now, if there is any official under the Government that the House and Senate are interested in, it is in the Architect of the Capitol. Finally a compromise was reached on an intimation that if this gentleman or employee for the convenience of the House and Senate was to be at the mercy of the President without confirmation by the Senate maybe he would not get any salary. A compromise was finally made by which the word "Architect" was discarded and he was designated as "Superintendent of the Capitol." He is still a good architect. I do not know, but I suppose these superintendents and these officials, except Capt. Brian, have been in there a long time?

Mr. BARNHART. I think they are old-timers, most of them.

Mr. CANNON. They do not change when the administration changes?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, probably a shift is made of some man up and another down.

Mr. CANNON. I mean, out of the office entirely?

Mr. BARNHART. No; they could not do that. They are under civil service.

Mr. CANNON. The superintendent of public documents and the Public Printer are not under the civil service, I take it.

Mr. BARNHART. No; and it is not so provided here.

Mr. CANNON. Nor are any of these high-salaried people under the civil service, as I take it, especially those who are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. BARNHART. Everybody in the Government Printing Office now, as I understand it, except the Public Printer and the old "claybank horse" that they use down there, is under the civil service.

Mr. CANNON. They, then, can not be under the civil service because it is an appointment made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. BARNHART. That is just what I have been trying to explain. This does take him out of the civil service. We have passed the Deputy Public Printer provision.

Mr. CANNON. He is not under the civil service.

Mr. BARNHART. No; and the purchasing agent.

Mr. CANNON. He is not under the civil service.

Mr. BARNHART. No; he was not, but he is now.

Mr. CANNON. Is he not appointed by the President?

Mr. BARNHART. No. This provision provides that he and the superintendent of documents and the Deputy Public Printer shall hereafter be appointed by the President.

Mr. TILSON. In other words, the effect of this bill will be to take those men out of the civil service.

Mr. CANNON. That may not be the intention, but that will be the effect of it.

Mr. BARNHART. The President will probably never go outside of the civil service for them, because he will probably find men in the Government Printing Office who are better fitted than anybody else for those positions. All the other departments of the Government have found by long experience that, the heads of departments being responsible to the President rather than to the Cabinet officer the system has worked advantageously. The Government Printing Office has had more or less trouble along this line, and all the committees that have had this printing bill up for some years have made this provision in it. It was first called the Smoot bill. It is the same thing carried on down. Mr. Landis, of Indiana, I think, had charge of the bill when it was originally drafted; at least he had charge of the investigations that resulted in the suggestion at that time of most of the changes that are contained in this bill. Other features have been added, but most of the bill came as the result of the investigation of the conditions of the Printing Office, and Mr. Landis, of Indiana, was chairman of the committee that made that investigation. They found mistakes in management, they corrected them, and the correction of those abuses created a large saving; and that prompted this bill. It ought to have been passed at once, but it was not done. While it passed the House once and the Senate once, it never got through the House and the Senate in the same Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. All time has expired on this paragraph.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CANNON. It can not expire. Evidently the Chair is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph has been closed.

Mr. TILSON. I move to amend the paragraph by striking out the last word.

Mr. HULBERT. I move to strike out the first word. I want to have the last word. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. I offer a pro forma amendment, which I think is in order.

Mr. BENNET. Why not move to strike out the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired on the paragraph.

Mr. TILSON. But it is subject to amendment, and I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HULBERT. Does the Chair entertain my motion?

Mr. TILSON. I think I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. Debate has not been closed.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent all the pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] is recognized.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this pro forma amendment for the purpose of trying to have the effect of this provision clearly defined. Is it not true that at the present time the deputy printer and the superintendent of documents are under the civil service, and protected thereby?

Mr. BARNHART. They are appointed by the Public Printer.

Mr. TILSON. Regardless of whom the President might appoint after this bill becomes a law, whether he should appoint these men or take men from outside, as soon as he made this appointment under the new law would not the effect of this bill be that the President, if he saw fit, might immediately remove these men and appoint others in their places?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. In other words, the protection of the civil service would be taken from them? That is correct, is it not, and that is the purpose of it?

Mr. BARNHART. No; that is not the purpose of it. As I stated before, the purpose of it is to get the Government Printing Office on the same basis as all of the other departments of the Government are organized and operated, and that is that the head of the department shall not have sole charge of everything that is going on, but in order that we may have some other means of finding out what is going on, by having some independent appointees. We are only asking for these three, and they are very important. One is a purchasing agent, who, the committee feel, ought to be responsible to somebody else than the Public Printer. That is no reflection on the present Public Printer nor on any past Public Printer, as far as I know; but it is always better to play safe, and these other departments have found that it has proven entirely satisfactory that the President should have some one responsible to him in these large departments besides the one man at the head.

Mr. HULBERT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I shall be glad to yield when I have finished answering the gentleman from Connecticut. I can not answer two questions at the same time.

Mr. TILSON. As I understand, I have the floor, and I am yielding to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BARNHART. That is correct.

Mr. TILSON. I will yield later to the gentleman from New York, if I have any time.

Mr. BARNHART. I have no time of my own to yield, and I can not answer two men at the same time.

Mr. TILSON. What I wish to bring out is what effect this provision will have. What the gentleman says may be true as to the effect of the bill and what is being done here may be for the best interests of the service. but what I want to have understood is what the effect will be as far as the civil service is concerned.

Mr. BARNHART. The Government Printing Office is maintained very largely for the benefit of Congress. I did not answer his question before, but my information is that something over 60 per cent of the printing done in the Government Printing Office is done for Congress. Now, it seems to all of the committees that have had anything to do with this bill—and that has been in about five Congresses, as I remember it—that it is important that we have some executive control over a few of these subordinate places—for instance, the superintendent of documents. We ought to have a man in there whom we can approve or disapprove. As he is now appointed, nobody approves him. The Public Printer appoints him, and we have thought it best for the good of the service, for the hereafter, considering what has happened in the past, that this change be made, in harmony with all the other departments of the Government. It is not an attack on the civil service at all.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HAMILL: Section 12, page 9, strike out all of line 5, beginning with the word "President," and the first five words in line 6, and insert the words "Public Printer."

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, this puts before us the proposition we have been debating and gives us a chance to express an opinion on it. I think it has been fully debated, and I will not discuss it any further.

Mr. BARNHART. Let us have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 10 for the purpose of offering an amendment. I was not here when that section was reached, and I want to offer an amendment to it if I can get unanimous consent to do so.

Mr. BARNHART. Is it an amendment correcting the phraseology of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of New York. No; it is not. It has to do with the salary of one of the men.

Mr. BARNHART. It has been taken up twice and decided twice. After we passed it once, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONRY] called it up, and we took 10 minutes on it.

Mr. CONRY. I knew nothing about the situation. I understand my colleague Mr. SMITH is familiar with it. I think it is a matter of simple justice to consider it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of New York. I move to amend, on page 8, line 14, by striking out the figures "$2,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 14, strike out the figures "$2,500" and insert "$3,000."

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to retain for the superintendent of work at night the salary he is now receiving. This salary placed in the bill is a reduction from $3,000 to $2,500, and I can see no reason for making that discrimination against a man who is performing a very important work. The superintendent of work at night is the foreman of printing, and he has charge of the other divisions; he has about 650 men at work under him, and on account of the character of his work and the necessity for knowledge of every phase of the Government Printing Office work it requires a man of special knowledge and special intelligence. In view of that fact, I believe the reduction should not be made.

Mr. CONRY. The gentleman from New York is a printer?

Mr. SMITH of New York. I understand the printing business.

Mr. CONRY. The gentleman knows that the salary of men occupying a similar position in the large printing establishments is much larger than that prescribed by law?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Yes; I have an official statement of the secretary of the New York Typographical Union, in which he says that in the New York Journal office, where 330 men are employed, the salary of the foreman of printing is $80 a week. In the New York Globe, where they have 85 men, the foreman's salary is $75 a week. In the New York Times the salary is $80; New York Tribune the salary is $80. So that a man in charge of 650 men in the Government Printing Office will receive a less salary than that received by the foreman of printing on a New York newspaper.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of New York. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Do they get 30 days leave of absence with pay, and do they get sick leave with pay?

Mr. SMITH of New York. I believe in many cases they do.

Mr. BARNHART. And half a day off all summer?

Mr. SMITH of New York. I believe the New York printing offices give as good treatment to their employees as that given by the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, as some Members may have come in since this matter was gone over before, I will say that it was carefully investigated by the committee, and they increased the salary of the assistant superintendent, who has charge of the office in the daytime, from $2,500 to $2,750 a year. The salary of the assistant superintendent, who has charge at night—such work as getting out the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—is allowed under the provisions of this bill $2,500, with an additional 20 per cent for night work, and that makes a total of $3,000. He is now being paid the same amount that the superintendent of work, the man in charge of the whole office, is paid—$3,600. The other assistant superintendent, who has charge of the Government Office in the daytime, certainly has larger responsibilities than the man in charge of the office at night, because of the great variety of work and because of the fact that at night there are 500 or 600 employees while in the daytime there are some 3,500.

In the readjustment of these salaries the committee thought it was only fair to increase the salary of the day assistant superintendent $250 and to give the night superintendent what they thought was a fair amount—$2,500, plus the 20 per cent, which makes $3,000, while the day assistant superintendent gets but $2,750.

Mr. FESS. And some part of the year the night superintendent is not continued when Congress is not in session.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but his regular salary will continue right along, although a part of the time he will not have to work at night, but will get $2,500 anyhow.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Does the gentleman from Indiana overlook the fact that in the daytime there is the superintendent of work, at $3,600, and the assistant superintendent, at $2,750, while the man at night is alone and absolutely responsible for every department; and, in addition to that, he is in charge of the printing force, with no assistant foreman?

Mr. BARNHART. The Public Printer is on duty in the daytime, and also the Deputy Public Printer. They are not supposed to work at night, but they are supposed to be on duty all the time and subject to call at any time the plant may need their services.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONRY) there were 7 ayes and 20 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read section 13 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Earlier in the day by unanimous consent sections 14, 15, and 20 were passed to be taken up at a later hour. So the Clerk will read section 16.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include in that section 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 5 has been already read and passed.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 5 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that. We have been over it fully, and I am certainly impelled to make the objection. We must make some progress. If these matters are to be considered and Members have a real interest in the bill they should be present when the bill is read. We have been over the matter, and I object.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will not do that. We have been making good progress in the bill, and it is a good bill, and we ought to bear and forbear. Possibly an arrangement could be made by which section 5 could be taken up in connection with section 15, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] be taken up in connection with the sections that have been passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York and the gentleman from New Jersey ask unanimous consent that section 5 be returned to and passed over with the other sections that were passed by unanimous consent, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to make this remark: That that is probably the most important section in this bill, and it has been passed by a very small number of Members here, and if the request of the gentleman from New York is acceded to it will give us a chance and perhaps a larger House to take up this very vital matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his request, because this request for unanimous consent can come later. We have been over this, and if we turn back and reconsider each time a Member comes in who has not happened to be on the floor when a particular section was passed who does not like what has been done by the committee, we will not make very much progress.

Mr. BENNET. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that we have read 13 or 14 sections this afternoon, which is more than were read of the agricultural bill in three days. If he accedes to this request, and we all proceed in a brotherly way, I think he will make a good deal of progress.

Mr. BARNHART. So far as the point of order is concerned, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BENNET. There is no point of order.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I suggest an easy way out of it—that the gentleman from New Jersey let his request go over until the bill is read, and then we might recur to the section for the purpose of offering his amendment.

Mr. BARNHART. I am willing to enter into that sort of an agreement.

Mr. HAMILL. That is all I want.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York agree to the suggestion of the gentleman from South Carolina that section 5 be taken up at the end of the bill for the purpose of offering the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. BENNET. That is my understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request of the gentleman from South Carolina that section 5 go over until the completion of the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule, at which time section 5 shall be taken up for the purpose of an amendment by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that he offer his amendment now.

Mr. HAMILL. I have not got it written out at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that it would require unanimous consent to do that.

Mr. GARRETT. Let us hear what the amendment is. I object.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I will present the amendment after we read two or three more sections.

Mr. GARRETT. Then the gentleman will renew his request after that?

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum, and will make the request for unanimous consent to return to section 5 at a later period.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Par. 2. The Joint Committee on Printing shall fix upon standards of paper of every description which, in its judgment, will be required by the Government Printing Office for all the purposes of the public printing and binding for Congress, the Executive Office, the judiciary, and the several executive departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government. The Public Printer shall, under the direction of the said committee, advertise in two newspapers or trade journals published in each of the cities of Boston, New York, Washington, Atlanta, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco, and Seattle for sealed proposals to furnish the Government with paper as specified in the schedule prescribed by the Joint Committee on Printing. The advertisement shall specify the minimum quantity of each kind of paper estimated to be required for either three months, six months, or one year, as the Joint Committee on Printing may determine; but when the minimum so specified exceeds, in any case, 1,000 reams, it shall state that proposals will be received for 1,000 reams or more. The Public Printer shall furnish a schedule and samples of the standards of papers to applicants who may desire to bid.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 13, after the word "Government," insert:
"Provided, That the standard of paper for the printing of postal cards shall be fixed upon by the Postmaster General."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I ask why these particular cities were selected from which to receive bids? In other words, why not Detroit or Denver?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, it was the purpose of the Joint Committee on Printing in rearranging this schedule to distribute it over as wide an area as possible, and yet not put it in all of the newspapers of the United States for the reason that bidders are supplied generally by clipping bureaus and trade papers, and this was merely a form of establishing more of an assurance than anything else that we have advertised for bids. There were originally many more cities included in this list, but the advertisement is just a little short notice each year of the time of the letting, and it amounts to practically nothing. As a matter of convenience in giving it as broad a distribution as possible these cities were selected.

Mr. FESS. A change was made reducing the number?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; from what it formerly was.

Mr. SMITH of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the first word. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if putting the proviso where he did in the middle of the section it will not look as though all of the rest of the paragraph were under that proviso?

Mr. BARNHART. There is a period at the end of the proviso, which makes it all right.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment. The advertisement is to specify the minimum quantity of each kind of paper estimated to be required for either three months, six months, or one year, as the Joint Committee on Printing may determine. What is the maximum?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, the Public Printer's estimate is considered the minimum, and if an emergency arises under which he should want a larger quantity it is specified in the contract and in the bid that the successful bidder will furnish this amount, more or less, at the same price, without another letting.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. It seems to me that it ought to be for all that is required. Oh, we have seen paper go up and down——

Mr. BARNHART. It is doing that now, especially up.

Mr. CANNON. I saw a revolution almost in this House under the cry of free print paper and in the country, and, for that matter, we got free print paper, and I am told it has gone up, so that revolution was a useless one if it was a revolution.

Now, if this paper doubles in price, is the gentleman sure that all the paper required would be received at the bid?

Mr. BARNHART. The Joint Committee on Printing has that interrogatory in the hands of the Attorney General, and have not yet received a reply. In the recent letting of print-paper contracts, which I think was on the 20th of January, bids were made for a great quantity—the year's supply of paper. Since that time the price of paper has gone up by leaps and bounds, said to be due to the fact of the inability to get certain paper-making ingredients imported into this country. The price in some instances has gone up 50 per cent, and in some few instances 150 per cent.

Mr. CANNON. Not this kind of paper?

Mr. BARNHART. Some of these contractors who made these bids gave a bond of $5,000, filed their bonds at the time they made the bids, that they would make good the contract, yet a great many of them have notified the Joint Committee on Printing and the Public Printer that they are not prepared to make these contracts because they can not get the paper, and so they have been notified that they will have to forfeit the bonds given. It is the only way that the Joint Committee on Printing can possibly proceed. Now, with reference to the quantity of paper, it will be in pounds and not in value. If the Government Printer needs so many pounds of paper to print our valuable and more or less necessary speeches and he needs so much to print the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, he specifies the quantity in pounds, because they have to have that many pounds of paper, and if the price goes up or the price goes down it is the fortune or the misfortune of the contractor, as the case may be, as we let the contract for the full year.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but there is no maximum here; there is a minimum.

Mr. BARNHART. No; we could either fix a maximum or a minimum by striking out the word "annually," because the contracts carry the words "more or less." It is utterly impossible for the Government Printer to estimate to the pound how much paper he is going to use, so he specifies what he considers to be the minimum, and the bids are taken and bidders agree to furnish so many pounds of paper, more or less, and then if it comes along toward the end of the year and the paper is not holding out and the Public Printer finds he is going to require more pounds of paper than contemplated in the contract, the contractor is required to furnish the excess amount of paper the Government Printer will need during the balance of the year.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman understand that if the price of paper goes down the Government is bound?

Mr. BARNHART. It is bound under its full-year contracts. These bids are for a fiscal year. They agree to furnish so many pounds of paper within the fiscal year, and at the end of that fiscal year the contract is off.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. BARNHART. That is the way all Government material is bought, as we are informed.

Mr. CANNON. Print paper has a lifetime, I am told, of about 25 years. That is, print paper such as is used for a thousand speeches or ten thousand speeches.

Mr. BARNHART. Commonly called "news print."

Mr. CANNON. I suppose that is the case. Then, I understand, the paper used in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is better.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; that used for the permanent RECORD is.

Mr. CANNON. For the permanent RECORD, but the paper used for the daily RECORD I suppose is print paper?

Mr. BARNHART. It is the same kind that is used in general job work of printing speeches, and so forth.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. I will.

Mr. COX. As a matter of curiosity, I would like to ask the chairman one question, and that is, How much is annually expended by the Government in the purchase of paper?

Mr. BARNHART. One million two hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. COX. At the same rate per pound?

Mr. BARNHART. No; because some of the paper costs 2 cents a pound and some of it 25 cents a pound.

Mr. COX. And it all costs $1,200,000?

Mr. BARNHART. About that.

Mr. COX. Is this paper for use of all the Government establishments?

Mr. BARNHART. It is what the Government Printing Office uses.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee why we advertise in two papers, in, for instance, Boston and Atlanta, and leave out such cities as Indianapolis and Detroit?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, it was not any reflection on the cities that they are dropped out, but it was due to the fact that the committee felt that really it was just a waste of money to broadcast this matter and let a lot of papers in the same locality publish the same thing.

Mr. BEAKES. Why did the committee put two in each locality which they picked out ?

Mr. BARNHART. That has been the custom always heretofore, just as in many of the States; the public advertising is done in that way. I know it is in my State, and I think in the State of Michigan also. It is the law in our State that two of the leading newspapers of each county shall carry the public advertising. That is for the purpose of not giving any one newspaper a monopoly on public advertising.

But I think this was done, as it had been done for many years, because it is the custom to do it that way. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BEAKES] that the expense of it is merely nominal. The advertisements are about 5 inches long—a little notice of the letting of the Government paper contract that goes in these papers once a year. The fact of the matter is the cost of it is hardly worth as much as the time we have spent this afternoon in discussing the question of this newspaper advertising. It is nominal. It is distributed all over the United States and amounts, I am informed, to about $500 a year. The big newspapers do not care anything about it as a matter of business.

Mr. BEAKES. Mr. Chairman, I move that on page 16, after line 17, after the word "Chicago," the word "Detroit" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, in line 17, by adding, after the word "Chicago," the word "Detroit."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Par. 3. The sealed proposals to furnish paper shall be opened in the presence of the Joint Committee on Printing not later than the first Monday in February of each year, as determined by the Joint Committee on Printing, and the contracts shall be awarded by it, in its discretion, to the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government: Provided, That every proposal shall be accompanied by a bond in such sum as shall be fixed upon by the Joint Committee on Printing, with a corporate surety, which must be duly qualified as provided by law, as a guaranty that the bidder, if his proposal is accepted, will enter into a contract with the United States of America, by the Public Printer, to furnish the paper proposed for and will execute a bond for the faithful performance of such contract; and by satisfactory evidence that the bidder is a manufacturer of, or a dealer in, the description of paper which he proposes to furnish and is capable of complying with his proposal: Provided, That if no award is made for any lot of paper on the first or any subsequent opening of proposals therefor, the Joint Committee on Printing may direct the Public Printer to readvertise for new proposals on such lots in the manner it shall prescribe, or said committee may authorize the Public Printer to purchase such paper in the open market as required from time to time at the lowest and best market price therefor.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 18, line 4, after the word "therefor," insert:

"Provided further, That paper furnished under contracts awarded as provided herein shall be manufactured in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the act approved June 19, 1912, entitled 'An act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. Who prepares the specifications that are sent out for bids on paper?

Mr. BARNHART. They are prepared by a special committee of experts on paper.

Mr. REILLY. Have you ever had any complaint from paper manufacturers that the specifications so prepared interfered with the Government receiving lower prices for paper?

Mr. BARNHART. I do not recall in my experience of having had any such difficulty. At the lettings I have seen as high as 60 bidders present, indicating there was ample competition.

Mr. REILLY. I will say that what made me ask the question was that one of the largest paper manufacturers in my section of the State complained about the specifications, and he said the specifications as presented and sent out by the committee interfered materially with the Government getting paper as cheap as it could get it under more liberal specifications, and better paper also.

Mr. BARNHART. And I may further say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that that might be true, and I can give an instance. They make what is called "loft-dried" paper. The process of loft drying is slow, being dried by air. Then they have what is called "machine-dried" paper—dried by artificial heat—and that process is very much more rapid, and the "machine-dried" paper can be made cheaper than the "loft-dried" paper, and some commercial firms use it. But the Bureau of Standards and the experts that the Government has have decided there is no substitute for "loft-dried" paper that will endure as long as the genuine. What is true in that respect I have no doubt may be true in a good many others.

I have had some experience myself in purchasing paper, and I know that there is a quality that some mills can not make—do not have the machinery to make—while other mills have it. I admit there is a good deal of whimsicality about these things. It would be like my friend if he were to go out and buy a dress for his wife—if he had a wife—and he might select one piece of goods for his wife and I would select another piece for mine, costing different or the same prices, and in the outcome we would probably both have what we wanted. And what is true of things of that sort is true of the purchase of supplies of all kinds. There is a wide difference of opinion. But the Government found it necessary to fix a standard, and if the gentleman was present at the letting of these contracts he would find that a great many of the bids are qualified by saying they are willing to furnish it without being specific as to the tint of the paper or as to the texture of it or as to the thickness of it. In that way the first thing the Government would know it would have a great conglomeration of all sorts of paper. The committee established a fixed standard which they believed was liberal enough to invite large and wide competition, and we are trying religiously to follow it.

Mr. REILLY. Has the chairman had the experience of ordering one kind of paper from the purchasing department of this Government one month, and the next month ordering the same kind of paper and getting an entirely different kind of paper—inferior in quality?

Mr. BARNHART. If a carload ever comes in and does not fill the specifications and the sample that is submitted at the time they made the bid, the paper is rejected.

Mr. REILLY. If you order it from the stationery room in the House Office Building, you never get the same kind twice.

Mr. BARNHART. Well, the Joint Committee on Printing has not anything to do with that.

Mr. REILLY. They ought to have an expert to look it up.

Mr. BARNHART. They have no more to do with that than the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. Does not that come under your jurisdiction?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no.

Mr. REILLY. The joint committee ought to take jurisdiction and see that we get the same quality of paper each time.

Mr. BARNHART. That is exactly what is provided in this bill; but at present we do not get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I make the formal amendment to strike out the last word. This amendment reads:

Provided, That paper furnished under contracts awarded as provided herein shall be manufactured in accordance with the provisions of section 1 of the act approved June 19, 1912, entitled "An act limiting the hours of service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States."

I have sent for the act. I do not know what it is exactly. I want to get a copy of that act. Has the gentleman the act?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; we have it.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman the language of the act?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; in full.

Mr. CANNON. This is an act entitled "An act limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States or for any Territory or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes."

Now, that is work done for the United States. This is proposed legislation for work done by the man who made the paper which he proposes under contract to deliver to the United States, as I understand it. So far as I know, no legislation of that kind has been enacted heretofore. In other words, has the gentleman knowledge as to how many paper mills employ hands that work more than eight hours a day?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; in a general way. Quite a number of the principal paper mills of the country are going voluntarily to the eight-hour basis. I have a list of them here.

Mr. CANNON. How many paper mills are there in the country?

Mr. BARNHART. I can not say as to that.

Mr. CANNON. And in round numbers, how many are operating under the eight-hour law?

Mr. BARNHART. The majority of the mills that bid on these contracts are working under the eight-hour law.

Mr. CANNON. But how can the gentleman tell how many will bid?

Mr. BARNHART. We have nothing except the experience of how many have bid from year to year. All of those who did bid, or a great majority of them, are on an eight-hour basis, and in the recent past—on March 21, 1916—at Kalamazoo the hours were reduced to eight hours; on March 21, 1916, at Holyoke, Mass., and at Dayton, Ohio; and again, on February 29, another mill at Holyoke, Mass., went on the eight-hour basis. One after the other they are doing this.

Mr. CANNON. That is six of seven mills.

Mr. BARNHART. These are of recent occurrence. They include all paper manufacturers in these particular places.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; in six or seven places. I do not know how many mills there are, but print paper is now on the free list. Now, would that prevent a man who made paper in Canada or in Norway from bidding, or a man who bought the paper that was made in Canada or Norway? Could that paper be used under this amendment?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, I apprehend the paper could be made anywhere. I do not know of any provision of law that would prohibit the United States from buying paper as it does other supplies.

Mr. CANNON. I know; but would it prohibit the man who makes the contract availing himself of the free paper that came from all over the world?

Mr. BARNHART. He could not do it unless it was made in an eight-hour mill, because the amendment provides that it shall be done in accordance with a certain enactment, which provides for an eight-hour day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a little further time. I want to understand this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for how long?

Mr. CANNON. Five minutes or ten. I just want to inquire what this amendment does.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Now, print paper is made from wood pulp. That is ground up. Is this language broad enough to cover the man who cuts down the pine trees and the man that hauls the pine trees to the mill?

Mr. BARNHART. It says the paper shall be manufactured. I think that limits it to the actual work of the manufacture of the paper. It seems to me that is as clear as language can make it. It would take a great stretch of imagination to hold that a man who goes out and cuts down the trees would be manufacturing the paper or that the man who hauls the wood to the market could be considered as manufacturing the paper. It seems to me it would be far-fetched to take that view of it.

Mr. CANNON. Well, why should it not?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, if anybody wants to put a construction of that kind upon it, they can.

Mr. CANNON. Well, the man that builds the truck that hauls the paper to deliver it, the transportation carrier that transports the paper, the man that sows the wheat and harvests it, upon which all these people subsist, or the man who produces the meat that they eat—why should it not apply equally to them? Why should paper makers be the only ones subject to this amendment?

Now, mind you, to get a cheap article paper was put on the free list. Anybody can import it. The Government is a tolerably small consumer of paper that is used. It seems to me that to do equal justice in God's chancery you ought to extend it all along the line. I think the gentleman had better, by unanimous consent, pass this section by and let us have a full committee present.

Mr. BARNHART. We have already passed the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no.

Mr. BARNHART. All this talk is permitted purely out of courtesy.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. I do not so understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has been adopted.

Mr. BARNHART. I appreciated that, and all this discussion is subject to a point of order; but it was going on by courtesy.

Mr. CANNON. I made the pro forma amendment, and I was recognized.

Mr. BARNHART. The amendment was adopted before the gentleman from Illinois spoke.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this may be passed over, so that we can let a full committee take the responsibility of passing upon it. I ask unanimous consent to return.

Mr. CULLOP. If the gentleman wants it set aside, perhaps he could make that motion.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Illinois can reserve the right to have a separate vote in the House on this amendment. It has already gone into the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, I would rather the committee would pass upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, for the information of the members of the committee who were not present at the time that the amendment was adopted, that several gentlemen made some pro forma amendments, and quite a discussion was had on the matter before the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was recognized. What is the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CANNON. If the amendment has been disagreed to, I ask that that action may be vacated.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I ask that, by unanimous consent, that action may be vacated, and that it may be passed over until we have a larger attendance in the committee.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to object to that, because the same thing has been done here before; but hereafter when we have passed a section, unless there is some extraordinary reason why the matter should not have been settled when the section was under consideration, I shall object to returning to it. I do not object in this instance.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks unanimous consent that the vote by which this amendment was agreed to be vacated, and that the section be passed—until what time?

Mr. CANNON. I do not care—until next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. BENNET. Why not simply pass it over and take it up at a more convenient time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendment be passed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Par. 8. In case of the default of any contractor to furnish paper as provided in this section, he and his sureties shall be responsible for any increase of cost to the Government in procuring a supply of such paper which may be consequent upon such default. The Public Printer shall report every such default, with a full statement of all the facts in the case, to the Attorney General, who shall prosecute the defaulting contractor and his sureties upon their bond in the district court of the United States in the district in which such defaulting contractors reside or such suretyship is undertaken.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. This paragraph seems to put a limitation on the liability of the bond, that it shall only be the difference in price. Now, is not the bond to cover any other default that may be made in the contract except that one?

Mr. BARNHART. This makes the Government whole, and the committee thought that was all that was necessary. It did not intend to inflict any profit-making penalty on the surety.

Mr. CULLOP. But there may be other defaults, such as in quality or failure to deliver on time, and other things of that kind. Now, is this intended to fix a limitation so that it will apply only to the difference in price? It would appear that way from the language of it.

Mr. BARNHART. This is the custom of other departments, and the committee felt that all that the Government can consistently ask in matters of this kind is to be made safe from losses.

Mr. CULLOP. But this does not provide for making the Government whole except in one instance.

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, I call attention of my colleague to the language—

For any increase of cost to the Government in procuring a supply of such paper which may be consequent upon such default.

That covers the cost, whatever it may be.

Mr. CULLOP. It fixes the liability as the difference in cost. Now, suppose the quality is not up to the standard, or suppose the time of delivery is not complied with; would not the bond cover a loss of that kind?

Mr. BARNHART. It certainly does. It says—

For any increase of cost to the Government in procuring a supply of such paper.

Mr. CULLOP. But the difference in price is what is fixed as the limitation.

Mr. BARNHART. I think my colleague misunderstands that. This provision here is simply to protect the Government from any loss.

Mr. CULLOP. For any increase of cost——

Mr. BARNHART. Loss to the Government in securing the supplies. The purpose of the bond is to cover cases of the kind which I cited a while ago. First a man gives a bond that he will make the contract, and then when he makes the contract he gives a bond for the faithful performance of it, and his bond must be fixed in a sufficient amount to cover any extra cost to which the Government may be put in having the contract fulfilled.

Mr. CULLOP. Suppose a contractor did not furnish the quality stipulated in the contract?

Mr. BARNHART. His paper would be rejected. He would be notified of the rejection, and if he refused to fill the contract, the Government would go into the open market under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing and purchase such supplies, and proceed against his surety.

Mr. CULLOP. If there was an increase in the cost?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. The Government would not be a loser on anything else except the increase in cost.

Mr. CULLOP. Does the gentleman think that provision would enable the Government to recover for any other loss connected with the contract?

Mr. BARNHART. I think so, for any increase of cost. You might say, "for the increase of any cost," or "for any increase of cost." It seems to me either of them would cover it, and that the language is sufficient to cover any increase of cost.

Mr. CULLOP. Would it not be better if it said "for any loss or damage sustained" instead of "for any increase of cost," so that it would then cover any loss, and remove it from all doubt whatever?

Mr. BARNHART. These matters were submitted to the counselor for the Public Printer, who is detailed from the Attorney General's office. He went over these provisions in reference to the bonding, and this is the substance of his recommendation.

Mr. CULLOP. If the committee thinks it is sufficient, why, all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 18. Par. 9. The Public Printer may, when authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, purchase paper not provided for by annual contract, in the open market at the lowest market price for the quality required, after due advertising; and, whenever they may deem the quantity required so small or the want so immediate as not to justify advertisement, the Public Printer may purchase the paper so required at the lowest and best market price after at least three competitive proposals have been requested.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Public Printer may, when authorized by the Joint Committee on Printing, purchase in the open market paper not provided for by annual contract, at the lowest market price for the quality required, after due advertising, and so on. This says "in the open market," although the paper may be made in Norway or Canada, or purchased in the United States. Does the gentleman mean to provide here that that paper purchased in the open market must necessarily have been made in a paper mill where the hours of labor were eight or less?

Mr. BARNHART. This paper is not purchased on an annual contract.

Mr. CANNON. Let that be as it may. Paper is paper, whether it is purchased in the open market or under an annual contract.

Mr. BARNHART. This provision is intended to cover emergencies, matters that might not be thought of at the beginning of the year, such as odds and ends. It has occurred frequently that a mill having the contract has burned down or flooded, and it was utterly impossible to procure the paper until they could rebuild. Under those circumstances the Public Printer would notify the Joint Committee on Printing, and they would authorize him to go into the open market for his emergent needs.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, although it might have been made by 12-hour labor.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; but it could not amount to much during the entire year.

Mr. CANNON. In other words, it is just a little baby. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask if orders might not be withheld and this provision might not be taken advantage of.

Mr. BARNHART. That would be up to the Public Printer to ascertain whether any such trick were being pulled off on the Government. The contract is so clear and specific that he shall furnish this paper in such quantities and at such time as the Public Printer may require, that there would be no loophole of that kind. He could not withhold unless he could show to the satisfaction of the Government Printer and the joint committee that there was something unusual in the way of furnishing the paper which might be needed at the moment.

Mr. FARR. It might be an adult, rather than a little baby, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests.

Mr. CLINE. The Committee on Printing takes a bond; they purchase the regular supplies from a company, and if there is any delinquency on the part of the party contracting he would be liable on his bond for any loss sustained.

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly; but on the other hand, if something should occur so that a certain quality of paper could not be furnished, then this would tide them over. I remember when they issued the emergency currency that the demand for that sort of paper was so unexpected that the firm furnishing it was not prepared to make it as fast as needed, and it had to go to some other mill. Sometimes the need for paper arises for which no contract has been made, and that has to be purchased in the open market.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I think you had a case not long ago where it was impossible to get the paper under contract because the mill with which you had the contract had been flooded.

Mr. BARNHART. That occurs occasionally.

Mr. FESS. That occurred in the Ohio valley, and the parties came over here to see about it.

Mr. BARNHART. This provision merely protects the Public Printer and the Government and enables it to tide around emergencies that are unavoidable and to meet emergencies that could not be anticipated at the time of contract letting.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. Par. 1. The Public Printer shall prepare a schedule of the estimated quantity of all materials and supplies other than paper required by the Government Printing Office for the ensuing fiscal year, showing the description and quality of each article, and, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, shall advertise for proposals for furnishing the same and enter into written contracts therefor with the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government: Provided, That should the Public Printer fail to receive any acceptable proposal after due advertising he may proceed to purchase such materials and supplies in the open market at the lowest and best market price after at least three competitive proposals have been requested, but such purchases shall not in any year exceed the sum of $500 for any particular article without the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing. The Public Printer shall report without delay to the Joint Committee on Printing the number of bidders, the amount of each bid, and the award in every instance.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, line 25, after the word "instance," insert:

"Provided further, That the Public Printer may, in his discretion, purchase any such supplies, or any articles enumerated in section 31 of this act, under contract included in the annual schedule of supplies prepared by the General Supply Committee when the interests of the service and economy would be thereby promoted; and nothing in this act shall be held to deprive any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government of its rights and privileges under the act of June 17, 1910, to purchase supplies other than printing, binding, and blank-book work in accordance with said act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that that is a pretty long and important amendment to be taken up for consideration at this particular hour and time. It is not a part of the printed bill. Could not that be printed in the RECORD, and be permitted to go over?

Mr. BARNHART. I will say that this amendment is the result of the conflict of opinion between some heads of the departments and the general supply committee, and if the gentleman will notice the wording of the amendment, it simply provides that this shall be done wherever economy can be conserved. It does not take away from the departments any right to specify what they want, but if two or three departments are handling the same kind and quality of supplies, together with the Government Printer, it is believed by the joint committee that by bunching these into one lot we will get better prices and effect a saving for the Government, rather than to let each one buy in small quantities.

Mr. BENNET. What is the act of June 17, 1910?

Mr. BARNHART. It created the supply committee of the Government.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment again reported?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, let me see if I understand the amendment. There is a central committee of supplies created by the act cited. It is proposed to give the Public Printer the right to purchase a list of supplies if he desires other than those enumerated, covered by the sections of the bill, through the central committee of supplies, whenever, in his judgment, it will result in economy to the Government?

Mr. BARNHART. Hardly that. On the other hand, the purpose of the amendment, as the committee understands it, is to provide that these several departments of the Government shall submit to the Government Printer, who buys the paper in larger quantities than anybody, their schedule of needs for the year, and if it is found by this supply committee that the Government Printer can purchase these supplies by buying them in bulk, in common, at a saving to the Government, he is then by this amendment authorized to elect such purchase.

Mr. BENNET. I am frank to say that as I have heard the amendment read I do not think it effects what the gentleman from Indiana has just said. At any rate, it does not effect it clearly, and that is an additional reason, it seems to me, in view of its importance, why we ought to have some opportunity to see it in print. I understand the gentleman to say that it is the result of some conflict of opinion.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman from New York were to stop at the semicolon after the word "promoted," his idea is in harmony with it, but taking that with what follows—and nothing in this act shall be held to deprive any executive department—

And so forth, it clarifies the situation so that the purpose of the amendment is made clear that it is in the interest of economy, and whenever it is found to be in the interest of economy this plan shall be adopted, and otherwise not.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, that language after the point indicated by the gentleman does not add anything to what might be called the probative force of the amendment at all. It says that nothing theretofore contained shall take away from any of the departments any of the rights secured under the act mentioned.

Mr. BARNHART. It simply gives the Public Printer this privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no misunderstanding in the committee as to what this means.

Mr. BENNET. It does not do what the gentleman thinks it does.

Mr. BARNHART. First it does this: It preserves the rights of all of the departments to select the sort of material that they want.

Mr. BENNET. They have that now.

Mr. BARNHART. Without this amendment the bill would deprive them of that privilege. Taking the amendment with the section just read, the gentleman will see that it means this, that if a Government department has a bid for paper and the Public Printer finds he can do better under that bid than he himself can do, he has the privilege of taking advantage of it, so the whole proposition is in favor of economy.

Mr. BENNET. The section reads:

SEC. 19. Par. 1. The Public Printer shall prepare a schedule of the estimated quantity of all materials and supplies, other than paper, required by the Government Printing Office for the ensuing fiscal year, showing the description and quality of each article, and, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, shall advertise for proposals for furnishing the same and enter into written contracts therefor with the lowest and best bidder for the interest of the Government.

And now comes the proviso:

Provided, That should the Public Printer fail to receive any acceptable proposal after due advertising, he may proceed to purchase such materials and supplies in the open market at the lowest and best market price after at least three competitive proposals have been requested, but such purchases shall not in any year exceed the sum of $500 for any particular article, without the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing. The Public Printer shall report without delay to the Joint Committee on Printing the number of bidders, the amount of each bid, and the award in every instance.

That relates to the Government Printing Office. This amendment, which possibly is not germane, though nobody wants to raise any points of order, does something in relation to the other departments of the Government. As I caught it from the reading, what it does is to permit the Public Printer to utilize this central supply board, I will call it, for the purpose of purchasing supplies if in that way he can get them at an advantage to the Government.

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman says it means something else—that it allows the department to use the Public Printer for the purpose of purchasing supplies.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman got such an impression from what I said, I surely did not mean to give it. What I tried to say was that with the grouping of these things, if the Public Printer could get the advantage of a better market thereby, this amendment authorizes him to do it through the General Supply Committee.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Has this amendment been submitted to the supply committee?

Mr. BARNHART. The departments objected to the section which has just been read because they thought it took from them some of their rights, and they thought it might possibly curtail their ability to buy to the best advantage. This amendment preserves all of their rights and gives the Public Printer the opportunity of taking advantage of any extra price that may be made through the General Supply Committee.

Mr. COX. Have the departments passed on the amendment that is now under discussion?

Mr. BARNHART. All except what is excepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. The reason I make the inquiry is this: About three months ago I met Mr. Wilmarth down here in the lobby, the chief clerk of the Treasury Department. If I remember correctly, he is the chairman of the supply committee. I had a whole lot to do with that supply committee three or four years ago. He called my attention to the fact that the bill as it was then prepared would interfere with their supply committee, and I advised him to go with the supply committee to the heads of the departments down there and prepare an amendment. I told him I felt sure that they would readily agree to it. He said the only thing he cared anything about was that the bill did not interfere with the supply committee. As I gathered from the reading of the amendment, I thought the gentleman preserved the integrity of the supply committee.

Mr. BARNHART. This section does. The latter part of this uses the language, "other than printing and binding and blank-book work," because that is Government Printing Office work. Otherwise it is their own language.

Mr. COX. The gentleman says the last part of the amendment was prepared by the supply committee?

Mr. BARNHART. It was approved by them.

Mr. COX. I do not think there is any danger at all.

Mr. CULLOP. If this amendment were not adopted, might not the construction be put upon this section that it repeals the act of 1910 creating the supply committee, and therefore this amendment is construing by statute this section of the bill, and that is why it is both pertinent and necessary, in order that there might not be any misconstruction of it?

Mr. BARNHART. That is the purpose, and there is no conflict of opinion.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I have submitted the amendment to three or four gentlemen on this side, and, without making any reflection upon either the collective intelligence of all of us or the individual intelligence of any of us, I am frank to say that we can not understand it. Now, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment may be passed over. We have not been obstructive on this bill, and we are entitled to fair treatment and consideration.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the gentleman from New York, the committee took it upon themselves two months ago to write a letter to every Member of this House and to send a report on this bill and to send the bill and include therein copies of its findings in the matter of wages and paper. That was issued about the first of January, as I remember, probably the 10th or 12th; and further than that, as a matter of fact, we have had this matter up with the departments and this amendment is now satisfactory. They have objected to it before, but it is now satisfactory, except we did not propose to have this supply committee purchase or supply to the Government Printer printing and binding, because that would be inconsistent with the whole scheme of the Government Printing Office.

Mr. BENNET. I will ask the gentleman if this particular amendment was contained in the letter which the gentleman so kindly sent to us?

Mr. BARNHART. No; I said the whole matter——

Mr. BENNET. Oh, no.

Mr. BARNHART. The whole matter as it was carried in the bill originally. I think this amendment simply clarifies the situation to the satisfaction of the departments.

Mr. BENNET. All I ask is unanimous consent that this particular amendment lie over to be printed in the RECORD, so that all the Members may see it. It is rather evident that we can not have a vote on this bill before next Wednesday afternoon, and I think the gentleman is really making some progress.

Mr. BARNHART. Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a lengthy bill. The House in the past has considered this bill twice. It was amended and passed the last Congress after a consideration of some 15 or 20 days. Every detail of it was gone over, and the department objected to the particular wording of this language, and as a result this amendment was arranged. If we have to turn back to every other page of the bill we will not get anywhere.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman has made considerable progress. We are now on the twentieth page, and we have not been considering the bill for three hours.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from New York unfortunately no doubt was not in Congress when the bill passed in its present form.

Mr. BENNET. I regret that as much as the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARNHART. If he had he would have had from 15 to 20 hot days of service, for I know he would have been in the midst of it, when we went over and thrashed these things out to the fullest satisfaction of everybody. We have only two Calendar Wednesdays in which to consider this bill.

Mr. BENNET. I would vote to give the gentleman a third Wednesday.

Mr. BARNHART. I believe this bill is of so much importance to the general well-being of the membership of the House and their constituents, with the saving of almost a million dollars, that I think we ought to speed up if we can the consideration of the bill. This committee is not insisting on being obstinate or anything of that sort, but we would like to make progress.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman has made excellent progress. Now, let me call attention to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen understand that all this is being done by unanimous consent. Unless there is some further discussion or amendment offered——

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "Section 21" from the amendment. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the chairman of the committee just to indicate the difficulties of his amendment. In the first place he proposes to attach to section 19 an amendment which refers to something which is going to be defined later by section 21, which in itself is a rather unusual procedure, and then the gentleman provides that the Public Printer may in his discretion purchase, without any limit, such supplies of any of the articles enumerated in section 21 under this act—which section we have not read and which follows section 20, which the committee has not yet gone over and which of course will be subject to amendment when reached—"any such supplies," and none of us know officially what supplies are in section 21. Of course, we can find out when we reach it, but which apply to manifold blanks, books, and forms, required in duplicating processes; complete binding devices for filing uniform official papers, loose-leaf books of every description.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. Section 21 is existing law and has worked satisfactorily for all these years.

Mr. BENNET. Nobody is denying that.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from New York was insisting that we did not know what section 21 was, but we do, because it is existing law.

Mr. BENNET. I said that "officially" we did not. Of course, it may be amended. And you are asking this committee, with not the most extreme limit of attendance and without any prior opportunity to consider it, to take off all the limit under which the Public Printer can buy any of these patented things.

Now, the gentleman talks about scandals under the old régime. I know very well they can so draw specifications in any of these departments in connection with these patented articles, as has been provided for in section 21, so that only one person can bid. What the gentleman's amendment does is this, namely, it puts in the power of the Public Printer—and, so far as the amendment is concerned—without any supervision on the part of the Joint Committee on Public Printing——

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BENNET. I am not. I hold the amendment in my hand.

Mr. BARNHART. These purchases are all under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. BENNET. All the others are, but this eliminates the Joint Committee on Public Printing. It says:

Provided further, That the Public Printer may, in his discretion.

There is no Joint Committee on Public Printing there.

Mr. BARNHART. If the gentleman will be fair and read on, he will see that he may purchase these through the General Supply Committee, which is under the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I went up to the head of one of the departments one time and I laid before him specifications of his particular division, which read all right on their face, except they specified in one place a yellow card. I asked him if he knew what that was, and he said it was a specification for such-and-such an article. I said, "Yes; it is; but as that provision is drawn, requiring that yellow card, there is only one concern in the United States that can bid." I went another time to another department and went over its specifications in relation to paint, and I explained to the head of that department what the specifications meant, and that only two concerns could bid. The gentleman from Indiana is one of the best men in the House, and I know in advance that he will absolve me from saying anything personal in reference to himself or his committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this amendment go over and be printed in the RECORD and considered with some care.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this amendment may go over.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I yield.

Mr. BARNHART. I do not know sure that the gentleman from New York is aware of it, but for the benefit of the committee and that it may go into the RECORD, I think the gentleman is aware of what the opposition to this amendment means. It means a fight of the loose-leaf binderies of the country and manufacturers of patented articles against the Government Supply Committee. These manufacturers of patented articles want the privilege of selling direct to the department without any supervision from anybody. I do not want to make any charges, but they might have friends in these departments, and certain institutions having these protected articles could see to it that they get their products into that department. It is a fight against standardization. That is what it is. The committee is aware whence it comes. These manufacturers do not want standardization; they do not care about economy. These manufacturers that are fighting this are fighting it because they want to maintain their own prices for these articles and do not want the Government Supply Committee to have any regulation of them. In other words, they want to control. Instead of permitting the Government to say what it will buy, they want to tell the Government what it must buy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] asks unanimous consent that this amendment be passed over. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TRIBBLE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 4701. An act to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll, designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll," and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Edward

B. Craig, as collector of internal revenue for the collection district of Tennessee, in the sum of $2,034.89, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue documentary stamps which were taken from the office of said collector by an act of burglary;

H. R. 7502. An act for the relief of Ellis P. Garton, administrator of the estate of H. B. Garton, deceased;

H. R. 5835. An act for the relief of James Stanton;

H. R. 9803. An act to emancipate from certain disabilities children who have judgments of conviction for crime of record against them in the juvenile court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 7862. An act for the relief of New England Coal & Coke Co., owner of the American barges Emilie and Cassie, and Bruusgaard Kiosterud Dampskibsa-Ktieselskab, owner of the Norwegian steamship Hesperos; and

H. R. 7248. An act for the relief of the United States Drainage & Irrigation Co.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend paragraphs 177 and 178 of an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, relating to the duty on sugar, molasses, and other articles.

REVISION OF PRINTING LAWS.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. Par. 2. The Public Printer may purchase materials and supplies, other than paper, not included in his annual schedule or otherwise provided for, in the open market at the lowest market price for the quality required, after due advertising, but such purchases shall not in any year exceed the sum of $500 without the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing; and, whenever they may deem it would not promote the public interests to advertise for proposals, the Public Printer may purchase the materials and supplies so required at the lowest and best market price after at least three competitive proposals have been requested, but such purchases shall not in any year exceed the sum of $300 for any particular article: Provided, That the Public Printer may purchase printing inks, rollers, and glue, or material for the manufacture thereof, and tapes, press blankets, and lubricating oils in the open market, without previous advertising, at the lowest market price for the quality required, but whenever directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, he shall advertise for bids for such materials and supplies: Provided further, That the Public Printer is hereby authorized to manufacture printing inks and rollers for the use of the Government Printing Office whenever, in his opinion, it would be to the best interest of the Government to do so.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BENNET. I do this simply for the purpose of saying this: The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] has a perfect right to say, because he has a very thorough knowledge of the subject—the most thorough knowledge of any man in the House—that the opposition to his amendment comes from manufacturers of loose-leaf systems.

Mr. BARNHART. And other patented articles.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman imputed to me knowledge that I do not possess. I did not know, until my attention was called to it by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], that the gentleman's amendment referred to section 21, and I did not know what was in section 21 until I read it.

I am simply opposed to that blind style of blanket amendments coming in here without previous consideration, and I think it due really to the bulk of the House to have as important an amendment as that printed in the RECORD. And, without any apology at all, I shall at any time, whether I come under the censure of the gentleman or not, exercise my right as a Member of the House, even though it should inure to the benefit of the manufacturers of a patented article, to have the House know what it is doing when it does it.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws his pro forma amendment, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CLINE. This provision provides that "the Public Printer may purchase printing inks, rollers, and glue, or material for the manufacture thereof, and tapes, press blankets, and lubricating oils in the open market, without previous advertising, at the lowest market price for the quality required." That does not require any advertising. Is any limit put on the amount that the Public Printer may purchase without advertising, unless directed to advertise by the Committee on Printing?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, of course the Government Printer, under his bond, could not purchase unnecessary supplies of that kind and waste them; and he is given this privilege in this instance for the reason that this class of supplies is perishable, and the price fluctuates, so long-time contracts are not economical. Any printer on the floor—and there are several of them—will understand that of all the unstable markets we have the worst is that for ink, and so on. This plan has prevailed for several years without detriment.

Mr. CLINE. He would not purchase a great supply of these things under this provision?

Mr. BARNHART. No; he would not, because if he did some of it would spoil. It is mostly perishable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] withdraws his pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 26. The Deputy Public Printer, the assistant superintendent of work, and the inspector for the Joint Committee on Printing shall constitute a board of condemnation, which, by direction of the Public Printer, shall ascertain the condition of presses and other machinery, equipment, material, and supplies in the Government Printing Office, when there is reason to believe that the same is no longer serviceable to the Government, and report its findings in writing to the Public Printer, who may proceed to condemn the same in accordance with such report: Provided, That whenever the superintendent of public documents shall report to the Public Printer an accumulation of Government publications in his possession for which there is no demand, the Public Printer may direct said board to examine such publications and submit a written report thereon, and, upon the recommendation of such board and the approval of the Joint Committee on Printing, he may proceed to condemn and dispose of said publications to the highest and best bidder as waste paper or make such other disposition of the same as the said committee shall direct.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BENNET. I happen to be one of the two members on the part of the House of the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and therefore I am familiar with the fact that before any paper in an executive department can be destroyed the Congressional Library must be consulted and must certify that such paper has no historical value.

Now, I notice in this section 26 this board can direct the destruction of any papers regardless of whether they have historical value or not. What differentiates them from papers in the executive departments?

Mr. BARNHART. I think the gentleman from New York is referring to his committee work, which pertains to records, while this section refers only to ordinary printed matter.

Mr. BENNET. Only blanks?

Mr. BARNHART. To public documents.

Mr. BENNET. Such matter as could have no historical value?

Mr. BARNHART. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 35. Par. 2. Every communication submitted to Congress, or either House thereof, by the Executive Office, the judiciary, or any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government shall have written thereon, or attached to the letter of transmittal, an estimate of the probable cost of printing the usual number thereof as a document, together with a recommendation as to whether the same should be printed, and, if accompanied by illustrations, the letter of transmittal shall so state: Provided, That if the estimated cost of printing a communication so transmitted is less than $100, it may be ordered printed by either House without reference to its Committee on Printing as herein provided; but, whenever a recommendation is submitted that a communication be not printed, it shall not be made a document by either House until reported upon by the committee to which it may be referred, and then only as provided for in this section: Provided further, That nothing in this section relating to estimates or reference to the Committee on Printing shall apply to printing the usual number of reports of committees of Congress; to addresses or messages of the President to Congress, when not accompanied by other papers; to communications submitted to Congress by any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, the printing of which is provided for by law; to communications from the Court of Claims; to estimates of appropriations; or to matter printed for the use of either House in executive or secret session: Provided further, That all reports on examinations and surveys of rivers and harbors authorized by law which may be prepared during a recess of Congress shall, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be printed by the Public Printer as documents of the following session of Congress.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question? What is the meaning of the expression "independent office"?

Mr. BARNHART. Where is that?

Mr. LONDON. It occurs twice in this section. For example, you have on line 15 the words "independent office." What is the meaning of it?

Mr. BARNHART. The Interstate Commerce Commission and the Civil Service Commission are classed as independent offices.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 37. Par. 5. Of the Senate reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 150 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 200 copies. Of the House reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Senate document room, not to exceed 100 copies; and to the House document room, not to exceed 500 copies. Of both Senate and House reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, to the Executive Office, 2 copies; to the Secretary of the Senate, not to exceed 10 copies; to the Clerk of the House, not to exceed 20 copies; to the Government Printing Office, for official use, 5 copies; to the Superintendent of Public Documents, 2 copies; to the Library of Congress, 2 copies: Provided, That reports on bills for the survey of rivers and harbors shall take the distribution of private reports.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Printing what is meant by the provision in section 37, paragraph 5, lines 9 and 10?—

And to the House document room, not to exceed 200 copies.

That refers to copies of reports of the Senate on bills. That would not make one copy for each Member. There are 435 Members of the House——

Mr. MANN. This relates to private bills.

Mr. BARNHART. These are merely reports on private bills, and on simple and concurrent resolutions, and the fact is that 200 copies are seldom or never used. That is the widest possible range that the document room estimates that might ever be needed. We might print enough for every Member of the House, but most of them would lie in the document rom. It is very rarely that there is a call for a report on a private bill.

Mr. BOOHER. Then the gentleman thinks 200 copies are amply sufficient to cover all demands?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; and this means quite a saving.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes on a matter not connected with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes on a mater not connected with the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to grant that, but the committee has been very anxious to get at least half of this bill read to-day, and I fear that if I agree to the gentleman's request to make a speech not germane to the bill now, somebody else will ask the privilege, and our time may all be taken. Would the gentleman object to waiting until we have read half the bill?

Mr. BENNET. I would have been nearly through by this time.

Mr. BARNHART. All right; go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, when I came to Congress on the 1st of December there were placed in my hands the papers relating to a man named Solomon Schwartz. Inasmuch as I have been trying to get action through the State Department during the intervening months, but without any success, I feel it my duty to lay the facts in relation to this American citizen before this House.

Solomon Schwartz, an Austrian born, was naturalized in 1901. When the war broke out in Europe he was in Great Britain, where he had been for some time on business. Because of his Austrian birth he was arrested as an unregistered alien enemy. He gave money to the officials of the British Government to send to this country to obtain the proofs of his instantly asserted American citizenship. They took the money, but made no attempt to obtain the proofs, and convicted him of being an unregistered alien enemy and sentenced him to six months' imprisonment under their act. While he was serving that sentence they were given the proofs that he was an American citizen.

That sentence expired in March, 1915, and it will doubtless surprise the Members of this House, as it has surprised me, to find that during that intervening year Solomon Schwartz, an American citizen, has lain in that foreign jail without a charge against him and without any effort on the part of our Government to obtain his release. I have seen the Secretary of State, who agrees with me that such a thing ought not to be; but nothing is done. I have been to the counselor, Mr. Polk, and he agrees with me that that man ought not to be permitted to remain there; but there he is. In pursuance of my duty as a Representative I desire to call the attention of this House to the following provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

SEC. 1999. Whereas the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people, indispensible to the enjoyment of the rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and whereas in the recognition of this principle this Government has freely received emigrants from all nations and invested them with the rights of citizenship; and whereas it is claimed that such American citizens, with their descendants, are subjects of foreign States, owing allegiance to the Governments thereof; and whereas it is necessary to the maintenance of public peace that this claim of foreign allegiance should be promptly and finally disavowed: Therefore any declaration, instruction, opinion, order, or decision of any officer of the United States which denies, restricts, impairs, or questions the right of expatriation, is declared inconsistent with the fundamental principles of the Republic.

SEC. 2000. All naturalized citizens of the United States, while in foreign countries, are entitled to and shall receive from this Government the same protection of persons and property which is accorded to native-born citizens.

SEC. 2001. Whenever it is made known to the President that any citizen of the United States has been unjustly deprived of his liberty by or under the authority of any foreign Government, it shall be the duty of the President forthwith to demand of that Government the reasons of such imprisonment; and if it appears to be wrongful and in violation of the rights of American citizenship, the President shall forthwith demand the release of such citizen, and if the release so demanded is unreasonably delayed or refused, the President shall use such means, not amounting to acts of war, as he may think necessary and proper to obtain or effectuate the release, and all the facts and proceedings relative thereto shall as soon as practicable be communicated by the President to Congress.

With those provisions on the statute books of the United States this American citizen has been permitted to remain in that foreign jail for a year, and I know of no remaining way open to me as a Representative of the district in which this man's people live except to lay these facts before the American Congress. I shall take such action as I may deem best to effectuate the purpose of securing his release, but before doing that it seemed to me only just and proper to lay before my fair-minded colleagues, equally insistent with me, I am sure, in protecting the rights of American citizens everywhere, the fact that this one lone American citizen, without friends, without influence, it is true, foreign born, it is true, without means, it is true, has been allowed to languish that length of time in that jail.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. What reason do they give for not acting?

Mr. BENNET. The Secretary of State said he ought to be out.

Mr. BOOHER. What do they say as to why they take no action?

Mr. BENNET. Nothing; one man up there says this man is of immoral character. I told the Secretary of State, and he said, "Have any accusations been made against the man?" I said, "No." He said, "Under the common law every man is presumed to be innocent until proved guilty."

Mr. BOOHER. One question more. Does not the gentleman think he should introduce a resolution and have it reported to ascertain why they do not take action?

Mr. BENNET. I think that is the course I shall have to pursue. In my search of the records I am unable to find any precedent where an American citizen has lain for a year in a foreign jail where the matter has been called to the attention of the department for six months and nothing been done.

Mr. BOOHER. The man certainly ought to have a trial.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 44. Any committee or commission of Congress, or either House thereof, authorized to hold hearings or to conduct investigations, shall have printed for its use not to exceed 1,000 copies, in all, of any hearing before such committee or commission upon pending legislation; but no committee or commission shall have printed more than 500 copies, in all, of any other matter germane to its official business, and such matter shall not exceed 100 printed pages in any one instance, except as may be authorized by resolution of either House as provided in section 35 of this act: Provided, That if any of the hearings or other matter printed for the use of said committees or commissions are designated as "confidential," no additional copies shall be printed for such distribution as is otherwise provided for in this act; but if any committee or commission shall direct that the distribution of its hearings or publications be withheld until such time as it authorizes them to be made public, the Public Printer shall print and hold in confidence such additional copies as may be required until authorized to distribute them: Provided further, That hearings and other publications of committees or commissions of Congress shall be numbered consecutively throughout a Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

SEC. 44. Par. 2. The Joint Committee on Printing is authorized and directed to publish, during the sessions of Congress, a daily bulletin of public hearings to be held by all committees and subcommittees of Congress, or congressional commissions, in such form and under such regulations as said joint committee shall prescribe. In addition to information concerning said hearings, the bulletin shall contain such other announcements relating to Congress, or either House thereof, or to the committees or commissions thereof, as the Joint Committee on Printing shall deem appropriate to publish therein. All committees, subcommittees, and officers of Congress, and all congressional commissions are directed to assist in the preparation of said bulletin by furnishing promptly to the Joint Committee on Printing such information as it shall require relating to public hearings held or to be held by said committees, subcommittees, or commissions, or to announcements which said joint committee shall deem appropriate to publish in such bulletin. Said bulletin shall be printed and distributed by the Public Printer to the number and in such manner as shall be determined by the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman if that is the crazy proposition of last year for the publication of a journal? I think you had better let that go over.

Mr. BARNHART. No; it is not to publish a journal but a daily bulletin, perhaps in the back of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, regarding the proceedings of committees, and so forth, on succeeding days.

Mr. MANN. I hope that the gentleman will let it go over so that we can see it.

Mr. BARNHART. I am willing to let it go over.

Mr. CANNON. Does this mean that the hearings are to be published?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, no; it is a daily program published on the last page of the RECORD, or in some other way, that we may turn to it and ascertain what is going on before the committees, and so forth, on that day. It is a sort of a daily announcement. It is a difficult matter to keep in touch with the many committees, and several Members have introduced bills urging the importance of something of this kind being done.

Mr. MANN. It means that the newspaper boys, and they are a bright lot, want us to "let George do the work"—furnish them information so they can write letters in their office without coming up to the Capitol at all—something that they do now once in a while, instead of sending a boy around to the committee rooms to see if there is going to be a committee meeting.

Mr. BARNHART. I would like to read up to page 56 before I move that the committee rise.

Mr. MANN. The committee will rise in about 15 minutes.

Mr. BARNHART. I hope that we can read to the bottom of page 56.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will yield, there are many hearings before committees, and it is supposed that the House is in possession of the hearings. But, lo and behold, when the bills come up for consideration the House has no knowledge of what the hearings contain. These hearings are printed. Are they public documents after they are printed?

Mr. BARNHART. No; they are printed under the authorization given to committees to have such printing and binding done as may be deemed necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Are they frankable?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. After all, if it be about important current business, it seems to me that the House ought to have possession of the hearings, so that they can be informed as to what is going on. Does your bill treat of that in any way?

Mr. BARNHART. Not directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the amendment just reported be passed over. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 48. Par. 1. The Public Printer shall furnish, without charge, to the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, manila envepoles, not smaller than 6¼ by 10½ inches in size, ready for mailing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, or any part thereof, and other Government publications. Envelopes so furnished shall be printed in black ink only and contain in the upper left-hand corner thereof the following words: "United States Senate," or "House of Representatives, U. S.," "Part of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD," or "Government publication," "Free"; in the upper right-hand corner, the facsimile signature or the name of the Vice President, Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner ordering the same, and the letters "V. P.," "U. S. S.," or "M. C."; in the lower right-hand corner the name of the State of Territory; and in upper left-hand corner may also be printed, in case of an extract from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the name of the Member, the date, the topic or subject matter, and a quotation from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of not to exceed 30 words. No other words shall be printed thereon, except the title of a Government publication which may be mailed in such envelopes.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 14, strike out the word "free" and insert in lieu thereof the words "postage free."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I also offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 54, line 25, after the word "envelopes" insert:

"Provided, That any Member of Congress desiring white envelopes instead of manila envelopes as provided herein, may order the same by prepaying the cost thereof in excess of the amount that such manila envelopes would cost the Government."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out line 7, page 54, and the words "in size," in line 8, being the words "not smaller than 6¼ by 10½ inches in size."

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I think the membership of this House ought to understand what is being done in this paragraph, and I therefore make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw the point of order of no quorum and let the amendment go over.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am willing to do that, and I will make that request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the amendment just offered may go over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some agreement about when it will be taken up—until the next time this bill is taken up, to be taken up then the first thing.

Mr. GARRETT. Will not the gentleman tell us now what it is?

Mr. BARNHART. Oh, there have been some other paragraphs that have been passed over, and I would not want to agree to take up the gentleman's amendment the first thing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman himself will have to pass it over, because if he makes the point of no quorum it will be passed over.

Mr. TRIBBLE. That is true, but it would be the first thing to take up on next Wednesday.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. GARRETT. It might and might not. Several other things have been passed over.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I am willing that it should take its place after the other matters which have been passed over have been disposed of.

Mr. BARNHART. That is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 48. Par. 2. The Public Printer shall also furnish, without charge, to the Vice President, Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners blank franks printed on sheets and perforated, or singly, for mailing Government publications. Franks so furnished shall be printed in black ink only and contain in the upper left-hand corner thereof the following words, to wit: "Government Publication. Free," "United States Senate," or "House of Representatives, U. S.," and in the upper right-hand corner the facsimile signature or the name of the Vice President, Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner ordering the same, and the letters "V. P.," "U. S. S.," or "M. C.," and in the lower right-hand corner the name of the State or Territory: Provided, That the Public Printer shall furnish to the Department of Agriculture such franks as the Secretary of Agriculture may require for sending out seeds on congressional orders, which franks shall be printed as provided herein and shall also bear the words "United States Department of Agriculture, Congressional Seed Distribution," or such other printed matter as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, and be of such size and style as may be prescribed by him; the expense of printing the said franks shall be charged to the allotment of appropriation for printing and binding for Congress.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 8, after the word "publication" insert the word "postage."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if, under this section, it would be permissible to print the name of the city as well as the State or Territory? For instance, there are many Members from the large cities, like New York, Chicago, or Philadelphia, whose entire districts are within the city. They might wish to have not only the name of the State but the name of the city printed on their envelopes, and I would inquire whether that would be permitted under this provision, which states that the name of the State or the Territory may be printed?

Mr. BARNHART. It does not provide for the printing of post-office addresses on the envelope, and I doubt if it would be well to have that done, because it would necessitate so many changes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. TILSON. This is the law now——

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any change from existing law in this.

Mr. BARNHART. No.

Mr. TILSON. But it says, "the name of the State or Territory."

Mr. MANN. That the name of the State or Territory shall be printed on it. As a matter of fact, they put "Chicago" on for me because it is a great convenience and no cost. They do it under existing law, and undoubtedly they will do it under this.

Mr. BARNHART. I think there will be no question about that.

Mr. TILSON. I just noted it and wished to be assured.

Mr. BARNHART. If we put the provision in for all cities, with Representatives from districts that have a large number of post offices it might cost an enormous amount of money.

Mr. TILSON. I did not mean that.

Mr. BARNHART. We had better leave it as it is, and if we change it the other way we might leave the bars down to a very large amount of work.

Mr. TILSON. I happen to know a number of Members whose districts are entirely within one large city who have the name of the city printed on the envelopes they now use, and I did not wish to see this convenience taken away from them.

Mr. BARNHART. I think there will be no question about that.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 49. It shall be unlawful for any person entitled to franked envelopes or franked slips under the provisions of this act to furnish the same, either directly or indirectly, to any individual, committee, organization, or association for the use or benefit of such individual, committee, organization, or association: Provided, That the foregoing provision shall not apply to any committee or commission composed of Members of Congress: Provided further, That it shall be unlawful for anyone except the Public Printer to print franked envelopes or franked slips for the mailing of Government publications, and all such franked envelopes or franked slips shall bear the imprint of the Government Printing Office: Provided further, That the Public Printer shall include in his annual report to Congress a statement showing, by name, the number and cost of franked envelopes and franked slips furnished each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Resident Commissioner, or officer or committee of Congress, or either House thereof, during the preceding fiscal year, indicating separately those printed for the mailing of speeches and Government publications: Provided further, That any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SISSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 8664, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HEATON was granted leave of absence for one week on account of illness in his family.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. TALBOTT, from the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, submitted a report (No. 582) that the files and papers described in the report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury in House Document No. 905, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, dated March 15, 1916, were not needed in the transaction of the current business of such department and have no permanent value or historical interest, which report was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 683. An act prohibiting the use of the name of any Member of either House of Congress or of any officer of the Government by any person, firm, or corporation practicing before any department of the Government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on that part of the Agricultural bill relating to naval stores.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on that part of the Agricultural bill relating to naval stores. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from a National Guard officer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of H. R. 13477, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, whereas it should have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANN. What is it?

Mr. HELVERING. It is a bill for the construction of a bridge at Fort Riley, Kans., on the military reservation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to build a bridge at Government expense on a military reservation on a stream that is not navigable.

Mr. HELVERING. Yes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that our committee deals with anything but navigable streams.

The SPEAKER. Evidently it ought not to go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; if the Speaker will only give me those to which I am entitled, I will be satisfied.

The SPEAKER. The trouble with the gentleman is he claims too many. Without objection, the change of reference is ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMSON. The Speaker will do me justice to say that I have bowed with sublime acquiescence to his ruling, and I acknowledge he has taken a great many away from me to which I thought I was entitled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair agrees to that.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Friday, April 21, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 21, 1916.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1916.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

GOOD ROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator from California yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that the Senator from South Dakota has risen to suggest the absence of a quorum. I wish to give notice that when the roll has been called I shall ask unanimous consent, when we get a quorum, to fix an hour sometime this afternoon when we can vote on this bill.

Mr. STERLING. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Myers	Smoot

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] are engaged in an important hearing before the Judiciary Committee.

I wish to announce for the day that my colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. He is absent on official business. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Alabama presents a proposed unanimous-consent agreement, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock on the calendar day April 21, 1916, the Senate will proceed to vote upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill H. R. 7617, the good-roads bill, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I will have to object to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania object?

Mr. OLIVER. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I did not understand the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. It was simply an objection, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The speech entire is as follows:

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the pending bill. I appreciate the fact that it is an unpopular thing to do, as it is avowedly legislation in the interest of the States and particularly of the farmers of the several States. But the bill is so clearly vicious as a matter of policy and to my mind it is so clearly against the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution, that I feel it incumbent upon me to discuss the bill at some length.

I have had occasion to say heretofore that the present tendency of legislation in Congress is to wipe out almost completely the dividing line between the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the States and the Federal Government, and that this has been brought about largely by the desire of the States to secure appropriations of money from the National Government. To my mind it has become a serious situation. Some other Senators do not seem to regard it so.

But, sir, in order to show what the present tendency is in that direction, I am going to call the attention of the Senate to a list of the bills that have been introduced in this body and the House of Representatives with a view to securing appropriations by the Congress of the United States for the benefit of the individual States.

This bill appeals more strongly perhaps to Congress than any of the others, because every State represented by every Member of this body and of the other House of Congress is to have a part of the loot. But that, to my mind, only makes the situation worse.

The list to which I am about to call the attention of the Senate should not only attract the attention of this body but of the whole country as showing what is proposed to be done in the way of securing money out of the National Treasury.

I first call attention to bills introduced in the Senate, with a statement of what their purposes are.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says to me that that bill did not pass. Very few of these bills have passed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I will say also that the bill shows that it was introduced by request.

Mr. WORKS. Very few of these bills have passed, Mr. President. I am not submitting this list for the purpose of showing that they have passed. I am simply showing the tendency of the present legislation in the direction I have stated.

S. 459 (Mr. WILLIAMS). S. 3329 (Mr. POINDEXTER). To purchase water rights in West Okanogan Valley irrigation district in State of Washington for Indian lands 105,000

Mr. President, those are the Senate bills. They are not all of them. They have not been brought down to the present date.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. Has the Senator a list of bills for public buildings that have been introduced? Are there not a vast number of those?

Mr. WORKS. Yes. Those are not included in the list I have. They come in every session of Congress. My purpose now is to show the way we are tending in legislation respecting the rights of the Federal Government and the States.

I have here a similar list of bills introduced in the House that I will ask to include in my remarks without reading. Some of them are duplicates; that is, they are the same bills that have been introduced in the Senate, but a good many of them are not.

The list referred to is as follows:

FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

H. R. 742 (Mr. CLARK of Florida). To extend the franking privilege to literature published by boards of health of States and Territories in United States.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McLEAN. Has the Senator the total amount of the appropriations called for by the bills that have been introduced?

Mr. WORKS. I have not footed up the total. For that reason I do not know what they amount to.

Mr. President, it is an age of extravagance in legislation. Both the political parties in their platforms declare against extravagance in the management of the affairs of the Government. The Democratic Party did so very properly in its platform of the last campaign. But I want to say, Mr. President, that I have never in my experience seen or heard of a more extravagant management of public affairs and a greater tendency toward extravagance in legislation than we have had under the present administration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will ask the Senator if both political parties have not emphatically indorsed in the two conventions the legislation contained in this bill?

Mr. WORKS. That may be, Mr. President. I think the political parties have exhibited exactly the same tendency that is being exhibited in legislation, but that does not help the matter; in fact, it only makes it worse.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an article that appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle of April 13 last showing the conditions and the tendencies in my own State. It is headed "Public indebtedness."

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, Apr. 13, 1916.]

PUBLIC INDEBTEDNESS—IT IS INCREASING AT AN ALARMING RATE IN THE MUNICIPALITIES OF CALIFORNIA.

In an address before a meeting of bankers recently held, State Controller John S. Chambers, after giving some figures of the increase of taxation in this State at a rate of 33⅓ per cent faster than our increase of taxable property, and of the resulting abnormal increase of State, and especially municipal, debt in this State, made the following statements, which we assemble from a number of separated paragraphs, with an occasional change or omission of words to fit them to their new connection:

"The totals of our receipts and expenditures are huge and the percentages of increase alarming. As our population grows and our governmental problems multiply the legitimate cost of government will go up. But we should put the brakes on. Even legitimate expenditures can be held down or postponed. How long can we stand the present state of affairs? Should the present rate of increase continue, the burden will soon become unbearable. We vote away millions of dollars with scarcely a thought to the future. The bonds will run anywhere from fifteen to forty years or longer, with the bulk of the principal and interest to be paid by our children and children's children. But I protest not only in the name of posterity but in the name of the taxpayers of the present day. The burden is already too heavy. It is time to stop and think."

That is the end of the quotation from the controller, and the editorial proceeds:

Scattered through the address and in connection with figures presented there is much more of the same kind. In separating the expressions from their contexts, too long to quote, we have not in any case done violence to Controller Chambers's presentation or argument. It is a solemn warning from the State's highest fiscal official.

Controller Chambers gives many figures upon which to base his warning. They may be summed up by saying that during the last five years the bonded debt of the State has increased by 457 per cent, of the counties by 308 per cent, and of the cities 96.8 per cent, with large amounts of bonds authorized but not yet sold. Computed at 4 per cent, which is below the rate paid by the political subdivisions of the State, the interest on the total debt of the State and its subdivisions was last year $10,113,500, which was about the total cost of running the State government five years ago when we started on our orgy of debt and taxation.

As only the people can authorize public debt, they are, as Controller Chambers says, directly responsible. But the people do not initiate. They follow leadership and suggestion, and the misfortune of the people has been in too readily yielding to leadership which was unduly emotional and was possessed with the idea of doing everything at once.

It may be thought, Mr. President, that the State of California is an exception. To a certain extent it is. It has been growing with great rapidity; public improvements have been made largely on that account; it has expended a large amount of money upon the improvement of its roads; but what I am saying about the State of California extends to other States as well and to legislation in Congress.

Let me read this editorial from the Washington Post of only a few days ago, entitled "Where will it end?"

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 19, 1916.]

WHERE WILL IT END?

The State governments of Massachusetts and New York are devoting all their energy to the solution of the problem of raising sufficient revenue to take care of the steadily increasing expense of administration. In Massachusetts the legislature has been trying to work out a more equitable form of income tax, while New York has been trying to evolve other methods of making the inadequate revenues square with the excessive appropriations. Meanwhile the Ways and Means Committee of Congress is casting about for new means of raising revenue. It is proposed to double the income tax, so that $100,000,000, in addition to the present revenue, may be raised each year from this source. It is proposed likewise to levy a tax on inheritances and munitions of war and to increase the taxes on beer and whisky.

Yet even $100,000,000 additional revenue will not solve the financial problem of the Government. Even since the estimates were made as to what sum would be needed, the Senate has passed the Government armor-plate bill, calling for an appropriation of $11,000,000, and has approved of a Government nitrate factory, calling for an expenditure of $15,000,000. These two items alone would add $26,000,000 to the appropriations of the present Congress.

The Government is steadily encroaching upon the functions of the States, and if the present tendency continues the people are not likely to be willing to support expensive State governments. Both the States and the Federal Government are going into the same field of taxation, and the burden of the people soon will be too heavy for toleration.

Where will it end? How long will it be before the people protest against paying taxes to the State and the Nation for precisely the same service? There is no doubt the States and the Nation are overlapping and duplicating public service. Isn't it time for some effort to be made toward ending the waste? Instead of the annual conference of governors, wouldn't it be better to call the chief executives of the various States to Washington and give them an opportunity to discuss the problem of taxation and expenditures with the national leaders?

Mr. President, the bill that is under consideration is one of the worst of its kind. It does not profess to legislate in the interests of the National Government or to carry out any governmental policy or function. Its title shows that quite clearly. The title is—

To provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

The title to the act is significant.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield further to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WORKS. In just one moment. The actual purposes of the bill are stated in the first instance, and then follows the statement that these roads may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, and so forth. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that he has read what was the title of the bill as it came from the House. If he will look at the last page of the bill, he will find that the committee changed the title of the bill. I should like to have him read the present title of the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I have no objection to doing that. I have examined the Senate committee bill with a good deal of care, and the title of the House bill is quite accurate as showing the purposes of the bill, as I shall attempt to point out. But if the Senator desires me to read the title that is at the end——

Mr. BANKHEAD. On the last page of the bill.

Mr. WORKS (reading)—

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes."

That is a better title in that it does not disclose the real purposes of the bill.

Mr. President, I am going to take up the time of the Senate to analyze this bill and see just what it does provide for. I have numbered the different provisions of the bill, I think, in such a way as to disclose just what it provides for and the real object of the proposed legislation. It provides:

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to cooperate with the States in the construction of rural post roads.

Right in the beginning I contend that the Government of the United States has no right to enter into any contract with a State to improve the rural roads as a governmental act. If the road is one over which the Government has jurisdiction and has the right to construct, that obligation rests upon the Government and not upon the States. The laws of the United States respecting it are supreme. The State has no right to control it by legislation or otherwise if it is a governmental procedure. Yet the very first step in this bill is to provide for practically a partnership between the States and the Government for the construction of rural post roads. The bill is confined undoubtedly to rural post roads upon the theory that the Government has jurisdiction only to deal with that kind of road, and, if it has, then, in my judgment, it must deal with it alone.

The next provision is:

2. No money apportioned under the act can be expended until the legislature of the State gives its consent.

Another very peculiar provision. The Government of the United States feels it incumbent upon it to expend money for the purpose of improving its rural roads, but it is prohibited from using that money unless the State in which the improvement is proposed to be made consents to it through its legislature.

3. Rural post road is defined as—any public road over which the United States mails are or might be transported, except in cities having a population of 2,500 or more.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from California a question. I had intended to ask it of the chairman of the committee, but I should like to have the view of the Senator from California regarding it. The bill provides:

That for the purpose of this act the term "rural post roads" shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails are or might be transported.

I do not understand the meaning of the phrase there "or might be transported," for I suppose the mails "might be transported" over almost any conceivable road.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the evident intention of the bill was to cover everything in sight and yet keep within the Constitution, if that were possible. That is perfectly evident from the terms of the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. It will be remembered that when this bill was under consideration yesterday I called attention to that phraseology in the bill, faulty as I think it is, and suggested that I should offer an amendment to it, which I propose to do at the proper time.

Mr. BORAH. Excuse me; but does the Senator from New Hampshire state that he is going to offer an amendment to this particular phrase to which I have referred?

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

Mr. WORKS. Would the Senator from New Hampshire mind suggesting what his amendment is to be and the object of it?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not know that I have the amendment properly formulated at this moment, but it occurred to me that the language, "any public road over which the United States mails are or might be transported," was as broad as the Senator from California has suggested; that it "covered everything in sight." The bill can be improved by changing the phraseology, I think, in several ways. It could be improved there if it should say "over which the United States mails now are or are likely to be transported," so that the Secretary of Agriculture or some other authority could ascertain whether the rural roads were likely to be extended in certain directions. Still, that is not satisfactory to me, and I am going to try to frame better phraseology.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from California has just called attention to the fact that the States must consent to the provisions of this act. Suppose a State does not consent to its provisions, can the State relieve itself from taxation to pay for the projects for building roads in other States?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all, Mr. President. That is one of the things upon which I am going to comment a little later; but while this bill is intended to benefit all of the States alike, under the rule established in the bill itself, if some State is unable or unwilling to pay for the other half that is provided in order to do the work, then it must still pay the taxes necessary to improve the roads in the other States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to suggest to the Senator from California that the Senator from Kansas has prepared an amendment, which I think is a very proper one, covering that very point. I wish he was here to read it.

Mr. WORKS. It needs to be covered, Mr. President; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There are a great many things that need to be covered.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I want to call attention to the peculiar provision in No. 3, to which I was referring at the time I was interrupted. It will be seen that this legislation enters into the cities of the different States provided they have not above a certain population. It is not only proposed to include rural routes outside of a city, but it is proposed to enter the cities themselves, and to improve their streets.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. WORKS. No. 4. The State highway departments are described as any organization having control of the highways of the State.

5. The term "construction" is defined to include reconstruction and improvement.

They are not willing to stop at the original construction of roads and streets, but it is extended to reconstruction and improvements.

6. "Properly maintained" is defined to mean in practically as good condition as when it was first built.

That provision relates to the duty and obligation of the States to keep the roads in proper condition or to properly maintain them, and it obligates the States to keep the roads in as good condition as when they were first built.

7. There is appropriated for the purposes of the act, $75,000,000; $5,000,000 June 30, 1917; $10,000,000 for the next year; $15,000,000 for the next year; $20,000,000 for the next year; and $25,000,000 for the last year, 1921, making a total of $75,000,000.

8. Five per cent of the appropriation for any fiscal year may be applied to administering the provisions of the act and deducted for that purpose.

9. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to apportion the remainder of the appropriation for each fiscal year among the several States according to area, population, and ratio of rural-delivery routes.

There has been objection made heretofore to this basis of apportionment. That is a matter to which I have given no attention.

10. The Secretary of Agriculture is required to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury and each State highway department and to the governor of each State having no highway department the amount deducted for administration and the sum apportioned to each State for the fiscal year.

11. The Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department of each State may jointly determine at what time and in what amounts payments may be made as the work progresses.

To that I want to call the attention of the Senate. The State can not act freely under this bill in determining what roads shall be constructed. It can only do it upon agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture. Neither can the Secretary of Agriculture determine for the United States what roads shall be improved under the bill, but it can only be done by agreement between the State and the Federal authorities, which is a limitation upon the powers of both of them. It is a limitation upon the power of the State to improve its own roads, and at the same time it is a limitation upon the power of the Government—if it has that power, which I think it has not—to construct a rural-route road. There can be no partnership as between the Government and the State, it seems to me, in determining the question as to what roads shall be improved and how they shall be improved.

12. Any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of the act must submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein.

13. The Secretary of Agriculture must approve the project recommended.

Now, just think about it, Mr. President! The temptation on the part of the States will be to make only such improvements as are provided for in this act, because by acting under it they get one-half of the amount of the expenses paid by the Federal Government; but when they come to determine what roads shall be improved, they must submit their project to the Secretary of Agriculture, and they can not move until he approves it and the plans and specifications that are required to be presented to him for approval. So the temptation of the State is not to act at all unless it can act under this bill, and when it attempts to act under it its discretion as to what roads it shall improve may be controlled by the Secretary of Agriculture.

14. When the project is approved the State highway department must furnish the Secretary of Agriculture with such surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates therefor as he may require.

Showing that before any step can be taken at all in the matter the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture must be had at each step.

15. If the Secretary of Agriculture approve the plans, specifications, and estimates, he must certify the fact to the Secretary of the Treasury.

16. The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under the act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

17. No payment on any money apportioned shall be made on any project until the statement of the project and the plans, specifications, and estimates are approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

18. Nor until the State shall make available for expenditure by or on behalf of the State money, labor, and material in such amounts, at such prices, and such terms as may be agreed on between the Secretary of Agriculture and the State highway department, not less in the aggregate than the amount to be received from the United States.

That provision allows the State to contribute in money, labor, or materials; but those contributions must be passed upon by the Secretary of Agriculture. He determines what the value of the labor is, and what is the value of the materials that go into the roads. That is proper enough for the protection of the United States; but it is still tying the hands of the State in carrying on public works and internal improvements within the State, and it is objectionable to me for that reason.

19. Nor until an agreement shall have been made with the Secretary of Agriculture to his satisfaction that the rural post road or roads to be constructed will be properly maintained by the State or any subdivision thereof.

This is a portion of the bill to which I call especial attention. Provision is made that the States shall keep these roads in repair or shall maintain them, and the bill provides what shall constitute "maintenance"; that is, to keep the roads in as good condition as when they were first constructed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should submit a question to him at this point?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator from California a question as to the effect of this bill relative to that portion of the country which the Senator from California and I in part represent. This bill provides that the National Government shall appropriate and supply a certain fund, and that each State shall provide an equal fund, as I understand; and that constitutes the entire fund out of which the building of these roads in the particular State is to go forward and to be made?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It is not so much so in the State of California, for the State of California has a vast amount of her State under cultivation, which is tax-paying property; but take a State like mine, for instance, where 80 per cent of it is not subject to taxation at all, but is withdrawn from taxation and withdrawn practically from entry. In the first instance, it is most difficult for that State to raise the amount which it is expected to raise. It must raise the entire amount on about 20 per cent of the property of the State. Twenty per cent of the property of the State must pay the entire amount of $900,000, or whatever it is, we will say, that the State of Idaho would be entitled to. Not only would it be difficult to raise the amount, but the burden would be put upon the State of maintaining those roads after they were built, and that burden also would rest upon 20 per cent of the property of the State. So far as the States are concerned, whose lands are withdrawn from public entry, are in reservations, and under the control of the National Government, this proposed law would be a tremendous hardship; it would be practically inapplicable.

Mr. WORKS. And, Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho has not stated all of the hardships that might result from it. It should be borne in mind, in that very connection, that the Secretary of Agriculture has the right to dictate where these roads shall be built.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. WORKS. And they may be built in the portion of the State where the National Government is particularly interested and where the State is less interested, and thus help to improve the public lands; and the State would be helpless against it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from California if he understands that, without the consent of the highway commission of a State, the Secretary of Agriculture may designate and determine absolutely where a road shall be constructed?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all. The Secretary of Agriculture, though, has the power to determine where it shall not be constructed; unless the State authorities are content to build the road where the Secretary of Agriculture wants it built, it can not be built at all. Of course, the Secretary of Agriculture can not compel the construction of the road at any one place.

Mr. BORAH. The practical effect is the same——

Mr. WORKS. The practical effect is the same.

Mr. BORAH. Because if the Secretary of Agriculture says, "I do not want it in this place," the State must come to his terms.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I myself concede that the effect is just what the Senator from Idaho has said; yet does the Senator think that that part of the bill is objectionable which requires an agreement between the State authorities and the Secretary of Agriculture as to where a road shall be built?

Mr. WORKS. I regard it as exceedingly objectionable.

Mr. NORRIS. Would the Senator permit the State authorities to designate the road and then require the Secretary of Agriculture to pay the Government's share, without regard to where he thought the road ought to be located?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, what would the Senator propose?

Mr. WORKS. I have stated as clearly as I could that I thought the whole system of going into partnership between the States and the Government was vicious in itself, and that it tied the hands of both parties, the States as well as the Government.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator objects to that; and I can see there is some ground for the objection, because I can easily appreciate, I think, that it might have the effect which the Senator has stated; but, assuming—of course the Senator is opposed to the bill—that we are going to devise some plan by which Federal aid shall be given, if the proposed plan is not a proper one, what would the Senator suggest in its place?

Mr. WORKS. I have no suggestion to make about it, Mr. President, because I think it is utterly impossible to draft a bill undertaking to carry out a system of this kind that would be legitimate or fair as between the States and the Government. I think it is impossible, because the whole thing is wrong in principle and can not be carried out by any kind of legislation, in my judgment. The remedy, as suggested in an aside by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], is that the States build their own roads; and that is precisely what the States ought to do. My own State of California ought to be ashamed to take any of this money if it is offered by the National Government. The people of my State ought to have the independence to build their own roads and not ask a donation from the Federal Government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator make an exception with reference to those roads which are in every sense great interstate highways?

Mr. WORKS. I was expecting to mention that matter a little later on, but I may just as well do so now. I have always believed that the National Government might properly contribute to the construction of what might be called "a national highway" connecting the different States, because that would be interstate in its character, just the same as it may contribute to the construction of a railroad which passes through different States. I think that exception can fairly be made, but I myself have never been willing to go further than that.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not asking these questions in any critical sense.

Mr. WORKS. I am glad to be interrupted.

Mr. NORRIS. If we can get a bill, I should like to get one that is practical; but the suggestion the Senator has just made to the Senator from Idaho rather appeals to me as being a reasonable one. I want to ask the Senator if he does not believe that those who are behind the bill—I may be mistaken as to this; I am not one of those who drafted the measure—have not in view the very thing which the Senator has suggested—that this should be rather an interstate proposition, and that the agreement required between the Secretary of Agriculture and the State authorities would have the effect, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, of confining its assistance or making its donations to interstate highways? Of course the highways built under this bill, if it is passed, will only be a very small item compared with the highways that will be needed by all the States; and, as I understand, those who are behind this bill do not contemplate assisting any road except those which might become portions of an interstate network.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment until I answer the Senator from Nebraska, I will then yield to him.

I wish I might be able to believe from the terms of this bill that the intention of its framers and its friends is such as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] suggests, but any such idea as that, it seems to me, is excluded by the very terms of the bill itself. It can not by any possibility be construed in that way or as intending anything of the sort.

I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, before we leave this point, to make a further suggestion, I wish to say that the very fact that the consent of an official of the Government, namely, the Secretary of Agriculture, is required, and by virtue of such requirement he can compel the State to build roads in particular localities, would seem to me an indication that what I have stated was the intention of the framers of the bill.

Mr. WORKS. I ask the Senator if that is the real intention of the bill, would it not have been a fair and honest thing to have said so in terms?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so myself; I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. WORKS. I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, whatever difficulties there are in the way of passing this piece of legislation will not, it seems to me, be made less by the suggestion that the appropriation should be made to aid in the construction of interstate highways. The little State of New Hampshire is sandwiched in between Vermont and Massachusetts. The highways extending from New Hampshire into Massachusetts doubtless run into the hundreds, and there are nearly as many into Vermont. If we are simply going to make appropriations to improve those particular roads which run from one State into another, I apprehend that we will have more difficulty than the author of this bill contemplates under its present terms.

Mr. WORKS. I do not mean to be understood as favoring that kind of legislation. I was speaking with reference to the power of the Government to deal with the matter.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator if the language in the first paragraph of the bill does not really itself refute the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska, where it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with the States "in the construction of rural post roads"?

Mr. WORKS. Every provision of the bill refutes it from beginning to end.

20. Nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of bridges, or more than 20 feet clear span.

I wonder if there are not a good many roads in the State of Idaho, for example, that can not be constructed for $10,000 a mile, which would be excluded by the provisions of this bill? There will be a good many in the State of California, I know.

21. The construction work and labor in each State shall be done in accordance with its laws and under the direct supervision of the State highway department—now, mark the language—subject to the inspection and approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and in accordance with the rules and regulations made pursuant to the act.

How can the State regulate and control the construction of the roads if they are to be constructed in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Agricultural Department and in accordance with the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture? It takes away the right of the States to control the matter of the construction of their own roads.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask, if the State consents to the arrangement and accepts half of the cost of the improvement of the road from the Federal Government, is there any objection, and can there be any objection, to an inspection by the Federal Government of that road into which the Federal money goes?

Mr. WORKS. There is no objection from the point of view of the Federal Government. Of course, there is no reason why the Government should consent to put its money into any proposition unless it has some control over the investment; but that is not the vicious feature of it at all. It takes away from the States the right to control the construction of their own roads and forms a partnership between the National Government and the State that is entirely inconsistent with the functions of the two.

Mr. STERLING. I will just say, with reference to that, that it all comes back to the question of the consent of the States; if the State consents to it, it is not taking away the right of the State.

Mr. WORKS. The States are very likely to consent when they can get money out of the National Treasury, and that is the temptation that is presented here—for the State to do what it would not otherwise do in order to get money out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It seems to me the States would get results and the United States would get results from cooperation in this matter between the States and the Government. Let me ask, Is the Senator in favor of Federal aid at all?

Mr. WORKS. Not of Federal aid to the States; no.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. For the construction of roads or highways?

Mr. WORKS. Not at all.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Well, therein we widely differ.

Mr. WORKS. Then I presume the Senator will hardly regard it as worth while to argue the question with me.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I realize the Senator's position, but I believe it is infinitely wise for the well-being of the country at large that the States and the United States Government should cooperate in the construction of highways and roads in our country.

Mr. WORKS. I understand the Senator feels that way about it, as do a great many other good people.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I can not see where any wrong would be done by the United States contributing a sum of money for the improvement of the highways in California any more than in appropriating money for a post office in Los Angeles.

Mr. WORKS. The post office, Mr. President, is a Government building, while the work that is proposed to be done under this bill is to be done upon roads which are not Government roads in any sense.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. But the fact is that the erection of the Government building accrues to the benefit of private property around the city of Los Angeles.

Mr. WORKS. Suppose the Government should propose to construct a post office in Los Angeles under an agreement with the State authorities that the State authorities and the Government must agree on the building, as to when and how it should be constructed and the cost of it, would the Senator think that would be right?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not think that condition would ever prevail, or that there is any similarity between the two cases. One is a fixed building at a definite place, while highways serve entirely different purposes, having in view the general transit and travel of the people to and fro, facilitating trade and commerce and promoting the general welfare of the whole people. I look upon them as being widely different.

Mr. WORKS. Yes; they are different for an entirely different reason than the one stated by the Senator. One of them is a strictly Government function. A post-office building is constructed for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Government, and therefore is exclusively within the jurisdiction and power of the Government. There is certainly no comparison between that and aiding the States to build their roads.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think there is a degree of similarity in some respects.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, No. 22 provides:

22. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to withhold apportionments of funds to any State which has failed to maintain roads previously constructed.

If the Secretary of Agriculture should determine that the roads already constructed had not been kept up to the condition that they were when they were completed, then the State is denied any participation in this fund. No. 23 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves No. 22, may I ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. If a State fails to keep a road in repair, does not the Senator think that any further Federal aid ought to cease?

Mr. WORKS. Yes; I think it ought to cease in the beginning.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator holds that view.

Mr. WORKS. If the Senator is looking at it from the point of view of the Government, he and I do not disagree about that. I do not think the Government ought to put money in these roads without protecting itself; but that is not the trouble that I have suggested. The trouble is the combination between the two; that is the difficulty.

Mr. NORRIS. I know the Senator takes that view of it, and I am not criticizing him; he has the right to that view, of course; but assume now that we pass a bill extending Federal aid, ought there not to be a provision in it compelling the care of these roads after they are built? How else could the Government bring about that condition unless it was authorized to cease giving any more funds if the State did not keep the roads in repair?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. How would it be possible, for instance, situated as we are in the State of Idaho and as some of the other States are situated, to keep up the roads when only 20 per cent of the property can be taxed?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Idaho presents what to me is a very serious objection, and one which I think will have to be met in some way by some proper amendment as affecting his State and States similarly situated. I presume, if there were no change made, it would present a difficulty that would probably prevent Idaho from getting any part of the money under this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Although it would be compelled to pay for roads in other States.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator from Nebraska is correct when he draws the conclusion that it would probably inhibit us from participating in this matter at all.

Mr. NORRIS. It might do that; yes.

Mr. BORAH. Because, in the first place, we could not afford, upon 20 per cent of the property in our State, to raise the fund, perhaps; but we certainly could not afford to keep up the road.

Mr. NORRIS. I was asking my question now on the assumption——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was asking my question on the assumption that we passed the bill now, doing away with the objection that has been made both by the Senator from Idaho and by the Senator from California. If we do decide that Federal aid shall be given, then ought there not to be a provision in the bill that these roads must be maintained by somebody or, as a penalty, the further payment of money will cease?

If the Senator will permit just this sentence, it seems to me that in any good-roads proposition, whether of State or National scope, the care of the road after it is constructed is just as important as the construction of the road. So far as I am concerned, that would be a sufficient objection to cause me to oppose any bill if proper provision were not made for the maintenance of the road after it was constructed.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WORKS. I do.

Mr. BORAH. What is the provision of the bill with reference to keeping up and maintaining roads in case a State does not do so?

Mr. NORRIS. They get no further funds, as I understand this bill.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; but what becomes of the road? Has the National Government no interest in the road, to keep it up if the State does not?

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, the bill makes no provision on that subject excepting that the State is penalized, if it does not keep up the road, by not getting any further contribution.

Mr. WORKS. There is no provision in the bill to protect the Government against allowing the road to become out of repair except the one that has just been mentioned.

Mr. BORAH. Certainly if the National Government is going to put $75,0000,000 into building roads—and, of course, that is just the beginning—if it is going to put this vast amount of money into it, the Government would have sufficient interest in the proposition, as an interstate matter, to keep up the road if the State did not. I am astonished to hear that there is no provision that in case the State does not act the National Government will act.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Nebraska has asked me a question that I think deserves an answer. I think the Senator is perfectly right in maintaining that the Government, in order to protect itself, should have some such control as this over the roads; but I suggest to the Senator that that is the vicious feature of the whole thing. The Government must step in and interfere with the affairs of the State in order to protect itself, and therefore the State authorities and Federal authorities necessarily come in conflict.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not know how it may be in other parts of the country, and I presume this is a mere regulation of the Post Office Department; but in my State, unless the existing roads over which the star-route mail and the rural-delivery mail is carried are kept in good condition, they are under a threat from the department that the service will be discontinued. As a result, our roads are kept in pretty good repair, even though they are not macadamized as a good many hundred of miles of roads in New Hampshire are.

Mr. WORKS. 23. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to temporarily decline to issue warrants upon failure of the State to comply with the provisions of the act, or upon breach of agreements made with him pursuant to the act, and shall finally decline if within three months the failure is not corrected or the breach remedied to his satisfaction.

24. The Secretary of Agriculture must certify the reasons for withholding the apportionment to the Secretary of the Treasury and to the State highway department.

25. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to employ assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to rent buildings in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to purchase supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expenses as he may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of the act.

That brings the matter of the conduct of this business into Washington, to be controlled by the Secretary of Agriculture, and permits him to rent buildings, and gather together employees, and do all of the things necessary to conduct the business in Washington.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure the Senator wants to be perfectly accurate. The provision of the bill which authorizes the rental of buildings was stricken out yesterday.

Mr. WORKS. I was not aware of that. I am glad it has been improved to that extent.

Mr. President, I have tried to analyze the provisions of the bill so that they ought to be fairly well understood, and I have endeavored to do so in an impartial and fair way. Now I want to call attention to the provisions of the report of the committee, and analyze that just a little.

I do not know who prepared this report; but, whoever he was, he is a genius. He has tried in every way possible to convince Congress and the country that it is an awfully good thing to do, and to dispel the idea that it can by any possibility be in opposition to the Constitution of the United States. This I shall attempt to refute before I get through.

Referring to the question as to whether it is intended for the benefit of the Government or for the benefit of the States or for the benefit of the individual residents of the States, let me call attention to the first statement of the committee report as giving the reasons why this legislaion is alleged to be necessary. The Senate will notice that it is not because of the inability of the Government to transmit the mails or to perform any governmental function. There is no intention to legislate for any such reason as that.

Under the heading "Why Federal aid is needed—Present deplorable condition of public roads," it is said that the reason Federal aid is needed is that for three-quarters of a century the Federal Government has discontinued making appropriations for road construction, and that the States have failed to construct and maintain proper roads, although it is stated:

> This failure to accomplish results has not been due to lack of outlay in money and energy. for it is estimated that in 1904, $80,000,000 in money and labor was expended on the public roads, and that in 1914 the expenditure had grown to about $260,000,000.

The reason for making the appropriation is fairly well stated in that first clause of the report; and the reason why the Government is called upon to expend its money in that way is simply because the States have failed to do so. In other words, because the States have failed to perform their functions the Federal Government is called in to help them to carry out those functions by expending the money that belongs, not to any individual State, but to the whole country.

Under the head "Phenomenal traffic growth," which is equally significant, it is said the enormous increase in traffic on the public highways is set forth, indicating that it is not governmental purposes or the use of rural roads for carrying the mails that is the incentive for making this enormous appropriation.

Under the head "States and counties unable alone to meet new conditions," it is said that half of our population is living in cities, but they must be fed by the products from the country, and thus the cities are directly concerned with the conditions of the rural roads. The products of the cities are being sent out many miles into the country by huge delivery trucks, and this again gives to the city a direct pecuniary interest in the condition of the public roads.

Again it is said, under this head:

> It has become apparent, however, that the task of providing adequate public roads throughout the United States is a great enough task to demand participation by the Federal Government to the end that every unit, from the township to the Federal Government, shall carry out a well-ordered part in the great undertaking.

Now, what are we proposing to do? What are we proposing to initiate by this kind of legislation? It is clearly shown by that statement in the report that we are going to provide for a complete system of road construction throughout the whole United States; and the appropriation of this comparatively small sum of $75,000,000 must be only a beginning, because to carry out this vast scheme would cost billions of dollars instead of millions. The reason for it all is not that it is necessary in the interest of the Government as a government, but because the States are not able to carry on these improvements within their own borders; and therefore the Government of the United States is expected to go into the States and do for them what they are not able to do for themselves. I say it is utterly unjustifiable from any point of view as a matter of policy or as a matter of law, as I shall attempt to point out later on.

Under the heading "Direct bearing of roads upon national welfare," it is said:

> The building of an adequate system of public roads should not be regarded as merely a provision for the handling of a vast traffic, but it should also be considered as an essential to the balanced development of our great domain and of the furtherance of our welfare, physically and morally, as a people.

Then, under the head of "Propriety of Federal participation," it is said:

> Few critics of Federal aid now advance the objection that such aid is unconstitutional.

Mr. President, I am afraid I am one of the exceptions, for I shall attempt to show before I have done that the present effort to appropriate the moneys of the Government is in violation at least of the spirit of the Constitution, if not of its letter. The report proceeds:

> The provision in Article I, section 8, of the Constitution authorizing Congress to establish post offices and post roads, is most specific, even if sufficient authority could not be gleaned from the "general-welfare" clause in the preamble, and again in Article I, section 8, and from the clause authorizing the regulation of commerce among the several States.

I call the attention of the Senate to that clause, for there it is attempted to specify the provisions in the Constitution, some of which or all of which, it is claimed or assumed, will justify this expenditure of money within the States, and that I shall come to later.

The only authority noted upon this sort of internal improvement to the extent provided by the bill is the short extracts from distinguished statesmen of earlier days as follows:

> Thomas Jefferson, in a letter written in 1786, had a vision of a great internal development of the country, for he said:
> "I experience great satisfaction at seeing my country proceed to facilitate the intercommunication of its several parts by opening rivers, canals, and roads."

Evidently Mr. Jefferson had reference to the opening of canals to be used in interstate commerce, not the construction of local roads within a State.

Alexander Hamilton said in 1801:

"The improvement of the communications between the different parts of our country is an object well worthy of the national purse. * * * To provide roads and bridges is within the direct purview of the Constitution."

Mark the language there, Mr. President—"the improvement of the communications between the different parts of our country." It does not include local roads.

President Madison, in a message to Congress, said:

"I particularly invite again the attention of Congress to the expediency of exercising their existing powers and, where necessary, of resorting to the prescribed mode of enlarging them in order to effectuate a comprehensive system of roads and canals, such as will have the effect of drawing more closely together every part of our country by promoting intercourse and improvements, and by increasing the share of every part in the common stock of national prosperity."

Which is precisely like the other, and does not relate to local improvements.

Henry Clay, speaking in Congress in 1818, said:

"Of all the modes in which a Government can employ its surplus revenue none is more permanently beneficial than that of internal improvement. Fixed to the soil, it becomes a durable part of the land itself, diffusing comfort and activity and animation on all sides. The first direct effect is on the agricultural community, into whose pockets comes the difference in the expense of transportation between good and bad ways."

That also related to the question of transportation, and evidently to interstate commerce.

Daniel Webster, in an address in the United States Senate in 1830, said:

"They [meaning the United States Government] enjoy the revenues derived from commerce, and the States have no abundant and easy sources of public income. The customhouses fill the General Treasury, while the States have scanty resources except by resorting to heavy direct taxes.

"Under this view of things I thought it necessary to settle, at least for myself, some definite notions with respect to the powers of the Government in regard to internal affairs, and I arrived at the conclusion that Government had power to accomplish sundry objects, or aid in their accomplishment, which are now commonly spoken of as internal improvements."

Which is precisely to the same effect.

Eight years later President Jackson, commenting on President Monroe's message, said:

"No less than 23 different laws have been passed through all the forms of the Constitution appropriating to upward of $2,500,000 out of the National Treasury in support of that improvement, with the approbation of every President of the United States, including my predecessor, since its commencement. The views of Mr. Monroe upon this subject were not left to inference. During his administration a bill was passed through both Houses of Congress conferring the jurisdiction and prescribing the mode by which the Federal Government should exercise it in the case of the Cumberland Road. He returned it with objections to its passage, and in assigning them took occasion to say that in the early stages of the Government he had inclined to the construction that it had no right to expend money except in the performance of acts authorized by other specific grants of power according to a strict construction of them, but that on further reflection and observation his mind had undergone a change; that his opinion then was that Congress had an unlimited power to raise money, and that in its appropriation it had a discretionary power, restricted only by the duty to appropriate it to purposes of common defense and of general, not local, national, not State, benefit, and this was avowed to be the governing principle through the residue of his administration."

This statement evidently relates to the construction of just one road. I will consider President Monroe's veto message, to which reference is made, further along. These quotations furnish a very slender foundation for this proposed legislation.

In this connection this remarkable and unfounded statement is made respecting the veto message of President Monroe, to which I shall call attention a little later:

When President Monroe vetoed the Federal road act in 1822 he did not base his veto upon the ground that Congress had no right to make appropriations to aid in road improvement, but upon the establishment of the road as a turnpike upon which tollgates were erected and tolls collected and in which the enforcement of the tolls by penalties was involved.

That is a misstatement of what was actually said by President Monroe, as I shall show when I come to his veto message.

Then, under the head of "Federal aid to other public improvements," it is said:

Attention has been directed again and again in connection with proposed Federal legislation in aid of road improvement, to the appropriations made by Congress for rivers and harbors, for the Panama Canal, and to aid in the establishment of transcontinental railroads. These citations would appear to be entirely justified, as the primary purpose of all those appropriations was to facilitate the development of the country and the transportation of people and products.

All of these are distinguishable from the present proposition, in that they were connected with interstate commerce or were the carrying out of Government functions.

It is further said under this head:

The Federal Government has a direct pecuniary interest in the improvement of public roads, as it now has an annual appropriation of $53,000,000 for the maintenance of a rural mail delivery service, involving the employment of nearly 44,000 rural mail carriers.

But it should be borne in mind that the money expended by the Government, mentioned here, is under a provision for the carrying of the mails. It does not include the improvement of roads. The Government has never undertaken to construct rural roads for the benefit of the Government.

Again, it is said:

The importance of an adequate system of public roads from a military standpoint will become increasingly evident with the development and more general use of the motor truck.

Then, under the head "Beneficial results to be expected from Federal aid—equalizing cost burdens," it is said:

The farmer has been—

Now we come to the farmer.

The farmer has been from time immemorial paying the bill for the building and upkeep of public roads. Appropriations of State funds in recent years have transferred a slight portion of this burden to the owners of city property, but it is probably conservative to say that at least 75 per cent of the money raised for road purposes at the present time is paid by the owners of country property.

Mr. President, I do not know how true that statement may be, but it does not in the least alter the situation. We are legislating here continually for the farmers, and probably as a class they need legislation for their benefit less than any other class in this country. There is no class of people in the United States to-day who are more prosperous as a whole than the farmers, and I happen to know that a good many of the intelligent farmers of this country are indignant at the use that is made of their name in the effort to procure legislation of this kind. Whatever may be the outcome, the farmer will have to bear his share of this burden, whether the money comes out of the National Treasury or the State treasury.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WORKS. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from California has referred to objections on the part of farmers to legislation of this character. I should like to ask him if he has heard of any objection on the part of farmers to this particular piece of legislation?

Mr. WORKS. No; I have not. I was not referring to this particular legislation; but I have heard such objection to other legislation of a similar kind, and I think the Senator has also. I have no doubt he has.

Then, under the heading "Encouragement of systematic road management," it is said:

Legislation by Congress requiring on the part of the States, as a condition to receiving Federal aid, that they provide for systematic and responsible supervision of the joint funds thus created, would be a long step in the direction of effective road management now so urgently needed. It is a self-evident proposition that in small communities the selfish influence of powerful individuals has greater opportunity to act counter to the public welfare than in the larger political communities.

This shows that the intention here is to carry out a general system and bring the Government into the construction of the roads to furnish the technical knowledge and skill that are necessary in order to construct them, and to relieve the States of that burden.

Then, under the heading "Higher standards of construction and maintenance," it is said:

Federal legislation properly enframed should insure the formation of a Federal corps of highway engineers, representative of the best technical and practical ability obtainable in this country.

I remember that the Senator from Alabama yesterday called attention to the fact either that it was a body of engineers that first suggested legislation of this kind or that they have as a body encouraged it. That is quite natural. Probably there is no other set of men that will benefit or profit more by it than the engineers.

Under the heading of "Permanent improvements in lieu of temporary repairs" it is said:

By confining the expenditures of the joint fund supplied by the Federal Government and the respective State governments to construction rather than to maintenance tangible and durable roads will be provided to take the place of those upon which untold millions have been expended for temporary patchwork in the past.

Under the heading "Government should require maintenance" it is said:

While the primary purpose of the Government in entering upon the policy of Federal aid is to secure the construction of systems of highways which are urgently needed, it should not forego the opportunity and the duty to require on the part of the States that they adequately maintain every mile of road constructed with the aid of Federal money.

So, with reference to "Correlation of road improvement." Under that heading it is said:

It is essential to the normal development of transportation facilities that the public roads of each State shall be coordinated and correlated with the public roads of the adjoining States. In the absence of the correlating influence which Government participation may provide it is probable that the development of the road system of the Nation as a whole would be haphazard and uneconomical.

Under the heading "Roads would be improved in the order of their importance" it is said:

It has been repeatedly estimated that 20 per cent of the roads may be so designated and improved as to carry some 80 to 85 per cent of the traffic. It may be assumed that the highway department of each State, representing both county and State interests, acting in cooperation with the Federal Government representatives, will select for improvement those roads which will best serve the traffic needs of the State and its local subdivisions.

Under the heading "Fundamental considerations in framing Federal-aid legislation—The Federal Government should cooperate with the State governments" it is said:

It is manifestly important that the Federal Government shall deal with a definite and responsible agency in carrying out the policy of Federal aid to road improvement. There are, besides the Federal Government, four distinct governmental units, namely, the State, the county, the township, and the municipality. As the primary purpose of Federal aid is to improve country roads, the municipality need not be considered in this connection.

Under the heading "No disturbance of State control" this very remarkable statement is made:

No policy of Federal aid should be adopted which does not permit the retention by the States of the fullest measure of control consistent with the necessary inspection and safeguarding which is customary with all Federal appropriations.

Under the heading "Self-help should be encouraged and 'pork barrel' discouraged" it is said:

While the contribution on the part of the Federal Government should be substantial, so that results of some magnitude might be accomplished, such contribution should impose upon the States the duty of contributing in at least as large a measure, so that there may be no insidious paternalism established, which would stifle local initiative and self-help.

Under the heading "Factors of apportionment" it is said:

Some plan must be adopted at the outset for determining what proportion of Federal appropriation shall go to each State. In arriving at the most feasible and equitable plan, consideration must be given to those factors which are intimately related to the public roads. First, it must be considered that primarily the road is designed for the use of the people, and it would, therefore, seem more equitable that population should form a basic factor in determining the distribution of appropriations.

Now, under the estimate of apportionment provided, California would receive the following amounts:

First year	$155,750
Second year	311,500
Third year	467,250
Fourth year	623,000
Fifth year	778,750
Or a total of	2,336,250

Friday, April 21, 1916.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have analyzed as best I could the provisions of the bill, with such comments as I desired to make upon it, and also the report of the committee. I pass now to a consideration of the constitutional question involved. I think it must be admitted that there is no direct or enumerated power in the Constitution that would authorize the United States to aid the States in the construction of local roads. The real question is whether there is any implied or incidental power that would justify legislation of this kind; and in dealing with it, Mr. President, we must bear in mind that this is not a proposition to aid in the construction of any particular highway that does or might connect States and therefore be interstate in character. It is proposed to enter upon a general system throughout the whole country of investing the money of the National Government in the improvement of local roads. I undertake to say that there is no provision in the Constitution, and no incidental or implied power resulting from any provision of the Constitution, which would justify legislation of this kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the policy which has been pursued in the last 20 years with respect to the withdrawal of lands from entry, the withdrawal of reservoir sites, the withdrawal of water-power sites, thereby preventing any taxation to be raised by the State for local purposes, almost of necessity require that there should be substantial aid by the Federal Government in matters concerning local affairs, especially when it must be considered as being constitutional in view of the fact that the object and purpose is primarily to have roads for the Postal Service, for military service, and for interstate-commerce service?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, nothing that Congress or the executive department has done in the past, however unjust or just it may be, could justify Congress in violating the Constitution of the United States. There is nothing, it seems to me, in anything the Government has done that is parallel to what is proposed to be done now or that could uphold any legislation of this kind.

I recognize fully the injustice to the Western States that is referred to by the Senator from Colorado, but this is a separate and distinct proposition which must be dealt with alone. It can not be affected by anything that has taken place in the past.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator think that the bill as framed, under the language which is used, would be upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States as being constitutional?

Mr. WORKS. No; I do not by any means. There is absolutely nothing in any decision of the Supreme Court or any other court down to the present time that I have been able to discover which can justify such legislation as this, and I am going to attempt to show it is in violation of the Constitution and can not be justified.

When a lawyer is called upon to deal with the question of incidental or implied powers of the National Government he turns almost instinctively to the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in the case of McCulloch against The State of Maryland. It is a great opinion, delivered by a great judge, upon a great question. It has practically fixed the law of construction of the Constitution of the United States that has been followed by all of the decisions of the Federal and State courts from that time down to this.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to understand the Senator. Does he contend that the Federal Government could not under the Constitution appropriate money to assist in the development of interstate roads, or does he take the position that the pending bill is not for that kind of development?

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, it is not necessary for me to take any position respecting the right of the Government to participate with the States in the construction of interstate highways. That question is not before the Senate by this bill. I contend that the bill is not for the purpose of constructing interstate highways at all. It does not purport to be any such thing. It is an effort to aid the States in the construction of local roads within the borders of the several States, and it does not deal with all the States together. It deals individually with each State, because any action that may take place under the bill is limited to cases where the legislature of the State assents to it. Therefore there may be some of them that would take advantage of the legislation and some that would not. As was suggested here yesterday, if one of the States should not assent to the provisions of the bill and take advantage of it, then that State is compelled to pay its share of the taxes to improve the roads in the other States, which is eminently unjust.

Mr. President, I think I need not apologize to the Senate of the United States for taking up some of its time in considering with some particularity and quoting at some length from the case to which I have referred.

The case of McCulloch v. State of Maryland (4 Wheaton, 316, 400) involved the power of Congress to pass "An act to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the United States." It was admitted that no express power to establish such a corporation was contained in the Constitution, and that the Federal Government was one of limited and enumerated powers. The effect of the decision was to give to Congress such incidental powers of legislation as is necessary to carry out the powers expressly given. The case is a leading one, the opinion being delivered by Chief Justice Marshall.

Now, in the beginning let me call attention to the situation and the question really involved here. It is perfectly evident that under this decision and others that have followed it there must be some direct power given to the Government of the United States to which some incidental power may be attached in order to entitle the Government to enter upon a scheme of this kind. Therefore we must necessarily stop to inquire what is the direct or enumerated power under the Constitution to which we can attach some incidental power that will justify this kind of legislation.

Let me quote from this opinion:

In discussing these questions the conflicting powers of the General and State Governments must be brought into view, and the supremacy of their respective laws, when they are in opposition, must be settled.

If any one proposition could command the universal assent of mankind, we might expect it would be this—that the Government of the Union, though limited in its powers, is supreme within its sphere of action. This would seem to result necessarily from its nature.

In that connection I want to again call attention to what I said yesterday—that it is absolutely necessary that we should divide the power as between the States and the National Government. If the construction of these roads as post roads is a Government function or is within the power of the National Government, then the laws of the United States must be supreme respecting the work to be done or the power to be executed. There can be no division of power in a matter with which the National Government has a right to deal, as between the State and the Federal Government. I proceed with the quotation:

It is the Government of all, its powers are delegated by all, it represents all, and acts for all. Though any one State may be willing to control its operations, no State is willing to allow others to control them. The Nation, on those subjects on which it can act, must necessarily bind its component parts. But this question is not left to mere reason; the people have, in express terms, decided it by saying, "This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof" "shall be the supreme law of the land," and by requiring that the members of the State legislatures and the officers of the executive and judicial departments of the States shall take the oath of fidelity to it.

The Government of the United States, then, though limited in its powers, is supreme; and its laws, when made in pursuance of the Constitution, form the supreme law of the land, "anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Among the enumerated powers we do not find that of establishing a bank or creating a corporation.

And I insist, Mr. President, that under the enumerated powers we find none authorizing the United States to aid in the construction of roads within a State.

But there is no phrase in the instrument which, like the Articles of Confederation, excludes incidental or implied powers and which requires that everything granted shall be expressly and minutely described. Even the tenth amendment, which was framed for the purpose of quieting the excessive jealousies which had been excited, omits the word "expressly," and declares only that the powers "not delegated to the United States nor prohibited to the States are reserved to the States or to the people," thus leaving the question, whether the particular power which may become the subject of contest has been delegated to the one Government or prohibited to the other, to depend on a fair construction of the whole instrument.

I insist in that connection again, Mr. President, that there can be no joint power respecting a matter of this kind. Of course, in certain instances the States and the Federal Government have coordinate jurisdiction; but that can not possibly be so here. Either the one Government or the other must have the right and jurisdiction to deal with this question; and if it has, that necessarily excludes the power and jurisdiction of the other.

The men who drew and adopted this amendment had experienced the embarrassments resulting from the insertion of this word in the articles of confederation and probably omitted it to avoid those embarrassments. A constitution to contain an accurate detail of all the subdivisions of which its great powers will admit and of all the means by which they may be carried into execution would partake of the prolixity of a legal code and could scarcely be embraced by the human mind. It would probably never be understood by the public. Its nature, therefore, requires that only its great outlines should be marked, its important objects designated, and the minor ingredients which compose those objects be deducted from the nature of the objects themselves. That this idea was entertained by the framers of the American Constitution is not only to be inferred from the nature of the instrument but from the language. Why else were some of the limitations, found in the ninth section of the first article, introduced? It is also in some degree warranted by their having omitted to use any restrictive term which might prevent its receiving a fair and just interpretation? In considering this question, then, we must never forget that it is a constitution we are expounding.

Although among the enumerated powers of government we do not find the word "bank" or "incorporation," we find the great powers to lay and collect taxes, to borrow money, to regulate commerce, to declare and conduct a war, and to raise and support armies and navies. The sword and the purse, all the external relations, and no inconsiderable portion of the industry of the Nation are intrusted to its Government. It can never be pretended that these vast powers draw after them others of inferior importance merely because they are inferior. Such an idea can never be advanced. But it may with great reason be contended that a Government, intrusted with such ample powers, on the due execution of which the happiness and prosperity of the Nation so vitaily depends, must also be intrusted with ample means for their execution. The power being given, it is the interest of the Nation to facilitate its execution. It can never be their interest, and can not be presumed to have been their intention, to clog and embarrass its execution by withholding the most appropriate means. Throughout this vast Republic, from the St. Croix to the Gulf of Mexico, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, revenue is to be collected and expended, armies are to be marched and supported. The exigencies of the Nation may require that the treasure raised in the North should be transported to the South; that raised in the East converted to the West; or that this order should be reversed. Is that construction of the Constituion to be preferred which would render these operations difficult, hazardous, and expensive? Can we adopt that construction (unless the words imperiously require it) which would impute to the framers of that instrument, when granting these powers for the public good, the intention of impeding their exercise by withholding a choice of means? If, indeed, such be the mandate of the Constitution, we have only to obey; but that instrument does not profess to enumerate the means by which the powers it confers may be executed; nor does it prohibit the creation of a corporation, if the existence of such a being be essential to the beneficial exercise of those powers. It is, then, the subject of fair inquiry how far such means may be employed.

* * * * * * *

The power of creating a corporation is one appertaining to sovereignty, and is not expressly conferred on Congress. This is true. But all legislative powers appertain to sovereignty. The original power of giving the law on any subject whatever, is a sovereign power; and if the Government of the Union is restrained from creating a corporation, as a means for performing its functions, on the single reason that the creation of a corporation is an act of sovereignty, if the sufficiency of this reason be acknowledged, there would be some difficulty in sustaining the authority of Congress to pass other laws for the accomplishment of the same objects.

* * * * * * *

The power of creating a corporation, though appertaining to sovereignty, is not, like the power of making war or levying taxes or of regulating commerce, a great substantive and independent power which can not be implied as incidental to other powers or used as a means of executing them. It is never the end for which other powers are exercised, but a means by which other objects are accomplished. No contributions are made to charity for the sake of an incorporation, but a corporation is created to administer the charity; no seminary of learning is instituted in order to be incorporated, but the corporate character is conferred to subserve the purposes of education. No city was ever built with the sole object of being incorporated, but is incorporated as affording the best means of being well governed. The power of creating a corporation is never used for its own sake, but for the purpose of effecting something else. No sufficient reason is therefore perceived why it may not pass as incidental to those powers which are expressly given, if it be a direct mode of executing them.

That suggests an idea, Mr. President. There must not only be an enumerated or express power from which you may infer or draw an indirect or incidental power, but that incidental power must be one that is reasonably necessary to carry out the enumerated or expressed power.

But the Constitution of the United States has not left the right of Congress to employ the necessary means for the execution of the powers conferred on the Government to general reasoning. To its enumeration of powers is added that of making "all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution, in the Government of the United States, or in any department thereof."

It was contended in argument that only such incidental or implied powers can be exercised as are absolutely necessary to carry out the expressed powers.

In discussing this contention the Chief Justice said:

But the argument on which most reliance is placed is drawn from the peculiar language of this clause. Congress is not empowered by it to make all laws which may have relation to the powers conferred on the Government, but such only as may be "necessary and proper" for carrying them into execution. The word "necessary" is considered as controlling the whole sentence and as limiting the right to pass laws for the execution of the granted powers to such as are indispensable, and without which the power would be nugatory. That it excludes the choice of means and leaves to Congress in each case that only which is most direct and simple.

Is it true that this is the sense in which the word "necessary" is always used? Does it always import an absolute physical necessity so strong that one thing to which another may be termed necessary can not exist without that other? We think it does not. If reference be had to its use in the common affairs of the world, or in approved authors, we find that it frequently imports no more than that one thing is convenient or useful or essential to another. To employ the means necessary to an end is generally understood as employing any means calculated to produce the end and not as being confined to those single means without which the end would be entirely unattainable.

* * * * * * *

The word "necessary" is of this description. It has not a fixed character peculiar to itself. It admits of all degrees of comparison and is often connected with other words which increase or diminish the impression the mind receives of the urgency it imports. A thing may be necessary, very necessary, absolutely, or indispensably necessary. To no mind would the same idea be conveyed by these several phrases. This comment on the word is well illustrated by the passage cited at the bar from the tenth section of the first article of the Constitution. It is, we think, impossible to compare the sentence which prohibits a State from laying "imposts or duties on imports or exports except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws," with that which authorizes Congress "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution" the powers of the General Government without feeling a conviction that the convention understood itself to change materially the meaning of the word "necessary" by prefixing the word "absolutely." This word, then, like others, is used in various senses, and in its construction the subject, the context, the intention of the person using them are all to be taken into view.

Mr. President, there are some other things in this opinion, or in the extracts which I have taken from it, which I think are important to this question, but I shall ask to include them in my remarks without reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

Let this be done in the case under consideration. The subject is the execution of those great powers on which the welfare of a nation essentially depends. It must have been the intention of those who gave these powers to insure, as far as human prudence could insure, their beneficial execution. This could not be done by confiding the choice of means to such narrow limits as not to leave it in the power of Congress to adopt any which might be appropriate, and which were conducive to the end. This provision is made in a constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and consequently to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which government should, in all future time, execute its powers would have been to change, entirely, the character of the instrument, and give it the properties of a legal code. It would have been an unwise attempt to provide, by immutable rules, for exigencies which, if foreseen at all, must have been seen dimly, and which can be best provided for as they occur. To have declared that the best means shall not be used, but those alone without which the power given would be nugatory, would have been to deprive the legislature of the capacity to avail itself of experience, to exercise its reason, and to accommodate its legislation to circumstances. If we apply this principle of construction to any of the powers of the Government, we shall find it so pernicious in its operation that we shall be compelled to discard it.

* * * * * * *

Take, for example, the power "to establish post offices and post roads." This power is executed by the single act of making the establishment. But from this has been inferred the power and duty of carrying the mail along the post roads, from one post office to another; and from this implied power has again been inferred the right to punish those who steal letters from the post office or rob the mail. It may be said, with some plausibility, that the right to carry the mail and to punish those who rob it is not indispensably necessary to the establishment of a post office and post road. This right is indeed essential to the beneficial exercise of the power but not indispensably necessary to its existence.

Mr. WORKS. After fully considering the various questions raised, the court concluded:

We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the Government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended. But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow to the National Legislature that discretion, with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution, which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

* * * * * * *

After the most deliberate consideration, it is the unanimous and decided opinion of this court that the act to incorporate the bank of the United States is a law made in pursuance of the Constitution and is a part of the supreme law of the land.

Mr. President, the report on this bill has mentioned and attempted to construe the veto message delivered by President Monroe involving the very question that is involved here, except that that was legislation attempting to aid in the construction of a single road. It is said in the report, in substance, that the President did not veto the bill on the ground that Congress had no power to enact laws of that kind or to render aid such as was proposed or to construct roads in a general sense, but that it was only held by him that toll roads could not be established by the Government and tolls collected by it.

Mr. President, that is a mistake. The veto message goes much further than that. The fact of establishing a toll road and the collection of tolls were mentioned in the message, but the conclusion of the President was not founded on any such consideration as that, as a reading of the message will show. I look upon this message as one of the most important that has been delivered in the way of a message or of a decision of the courts of the country involving this question. It covers every conceivable ground upon which it is claimed that legislation of this kind may rest. It takes up the very things which are mentioned in the report of the committee as foundations for this legislation, refutes every one of them from beginning to end, and reaches the conclusion that no such legislation is competent on the part of the Government. It should be remembered in this connection that this veto message was delivered two years after the celebrated decision of the court in McCulloch against The State of Maryland, and it was in the light of the decision of Chief Justice Marshall that this veto message was delivered, although it is not mentioned in the veto message itself.

Now, in view of what has been said about it and of the importance of this message, I want to call particular attention to some of its provisions and its reasoning.

The veto message of President Monroe was upon a bill entitled "An act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland Road," May 4, 1822, and will be found in Messages and Papers of the Presidents, volume 2, pages 142 to 144:

Having duly considered the bill entitled "An act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland Road," it is with deep regret, approving, as I do, the policy, that I am compelled to object to its passage and to return the bill to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, under a conviction that Congress do not possess the power under the Constitution to pass such a law.

* * * * * * *

It has never been contended that the power was specifically granted. It is claimed only as being incidental to some one or more of the powers which was specifically granted. The following are the powers from which it is said to be derived:

First, from the right to establish post offices and post roads; second, from the right to declare war; third, to regulate commerce; fourth, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare; fifth, from the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof; sixth, and lastly, from the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States.

According to my judgment it can not be derived from either of those powers nor from all of them united, and in consequence it does not exist.

Following that broad statement, the message discusses generally the powers and jurisdiction of the States and of the National Government, and, after having done that, takes up specifically the different claims of power and discusses them all minutely. I am not going to take up time in reading these discussions, although I think they are most important and should receive the attention of the Senate. I am admonished by the desire of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to push this bill along that I ought not to take up more of the time than is proper and necessary under the circumstances. I have no disposition, although I am very much opposed to the bill, to prevent action upon it. I will ask to be allowed to insert in the RECORD the extracts from the message which I have here in my hand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The extracts referred to are as follows:

It may be presumed that the proposition relating to internal improvements by roads and canals, which has been several times before Congress, will be taken into consideration again either for the purpose of recommending to the States the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to vest the necessary power in the General Government or to carry the system into effect on the principle that the power has already been granted. It seems to be the prevailing opinion that great advantage would be derived from the exercise of such a power by Congress. Respecting the right there is much diversity of sentiment. It is of the highest importance that this question should be settled. If the right exist it ought forthwith to be exercised. If it does not exist, surely those who are friends to the powers ought to unite in recommending an amendment to the Constitution to obtain it.

* * * * * * *

The Constitution of the United States, being ratified by the people of the several States, became of necessity to the extent of its powers the paramount authority of the Union. On sound principles it can be viewed in no other light. The people, the highest authority known to our system, from whom all our institutions spring and on whom they depend, formed it. Had the people of the several States thought proper to incorporate themselves into one community, under one government, they might have done it. They had the power, and there was nothing then nor is there anything now, should they be so disposed, to prevent it. They wisely stopped however at a certain point, extending the incorporation to that point, making the National Government thus far a consolidated Government and preserving the State governments without that limit perfectly sovereign and independent of the National Government. Had the people of the several States incorporated themselves into one community, they must have remained such, their constitution becoming then, like the constitution of the several States, incapable of change until altered by the will of the majority. In the institution of a State government by the citizens of a State a compact is formed to which all and every citizen are equal parties. They are also the sole parties and may amend it at pleasure. In the institution of the Government of the United States by the citizens of every State a compact was formed between the whole American people which has the same force and partakes of all the qualities to the extent of its powers as a compact between the citizens of a State in the formation of their own constitution. It can not be altered except by those who formed it or in the mode prescribed by the parties to the compact itself.

* * * * * * *

There were two separate and independent governments established over our Union, one for local purposes over each State by the people of the State, the other for national purposes over all the States by the people of the United States. The whole power of the people, on the representative principle, is divided between them. The State governments are independent of each other, and to the extent of their powers are complete sovereignties. The National Government begins where the State governments terminate, except in some instances where there is a concurrent jurisdiction between them. This Government is also, according to the extent of its powers, a complete sovereignty. I speak here, as repeatedly mentioned before, altogether of representative sovereignties, for the real sovereignty is in the people alone.

* * * * * * *

I will now proceed to examine the powers of the General Government, which, like the governments of the several States, is divided into three branches—a legislative, executive, and judiciary—each having its appropriate share. Of these the legislative, from the nature of its powers, all laws proceeding from it, and the manner of its appointment, its members being elected immediately by the people, is by far the most important. The whole system of the National Government may be said to rest essentially on the powers granted to this branch. They mark the limit within which, with few exceptions, all the branches must move in the discharge of their respective functions.

* * * * * * *

The next circumstance to be attended to is that the people composing this Union are the people of the several States, and not of the United States in the full sense of a consolidated government. The militia are the militia of the several States; lands are held under the laws of the States, descents, contracts, and all the concerns of private property, the administration of justice, and the whole criminal code, except in the cases of breaches of the laws of the United States made under and in conformity with the powers vested in Congress and of the laws of nations, are regulated by State laws. This enumeration shows the great extent of the powers of the State governments. The territory and the people form the basis on which all governments are founded. The militia constitutes their effective force. The regulation and protection of property and of personal liberty are also among the highest attributes of sovereignty. This, without other evidence, is sufficient to show that the great office of the Constitution of the United States is to unite the States together under a Government endowed with powers adequate to the purposes of its institution, relating, directly or indirectly, to foreign concerns, to the discharge of which a National Government thus formed alone could be competent.

This view of the exclusive jurisdiction of the several States over the territory within their respective limits, except in cases otherwise specially provided for, is supported by the obvious intent of the several powers granted to Congress, to which a more particular attention is now due. Of these the right to declare war is perhaps the most important, as well by the consequences attending war as by the other powers granted in aid of it. The right to lay taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, though necessary for the support of the civil government, is equally necessary to sustain the charges of war; the right to raise and support armies and a navy and to call forth and govern the militia when in the service of the United States are altogether of the latter kind. They are granted in aid of the power to make war and intended to give effect to it. These several powers are of great force and extent, and operate more directly within the limits and upon the resources of the States than any of the other powers. But still they are means only for given ends. War is declared and must be maintained, an army and a navy must be raised, fortifications must be erected for the common defense, debts must be paid. For these purposes duties, imposts, and excises are levied, taxes are laid, the lands, merchandise, and other property of the citizens are liable for them; if the money is not paid, seizures are made and the lands are sold. The transaction is terminated; the lands pass into other hands, who hold them, as the former proprietors did, under the laws of the individual States. They were means only to certain ends; the United States have nothing further to do with them. The same view is applicable to the power of the General Government over persons. The militia is called into the service of the United States; the service is performed; the corps returns to the State to which it belongs; it is the militia of such State and not of the United States. Soldiers are required for the Army, who may be obtained by voluntary enlistment or by some other process founded in the principles of equality. In either case the citizen after the tour of duty is performed is restored to his former station in society, with his equal share in the common sovereignty of the Nation. In all these cases, which are the strongest which can be given, we see that the right of the General Government is nothing more than what it is called in the Constitution, a power to perform certain acts, and that the subject on which it operates is a means only to that end; that it was both before and after that act under the protection and subject to the laws of the individual State within which it was.

I shall conclude my remarks on this part of the subject by observing that the view which has been presented of the powers and character of the two Governments is supported by the marked difference which is observable in the manner of their endowment. The State governments are divided into three branches—a legislative, executive, and judiciary—and the appropriate duties of each assigned to it without any limitation of power except such as is necessary to guard against abuse in the form of bills of right. But in instituting the National Government an entirely different principle was adopted and pursued. The Government itself is organized, like the State governments, into three branches, but its powers are enumerated and defined in the most precise form. The subject has already been too fully explained to require illustration by a general view of the whole Constitution, every part of which affords proof of what is here advanced. It will be sufficient to advert to the eighth section of the first article, being that more particularly which defines the powers and fixes the character of the Government of the United States.

* * * * * * *

Having shown the origin of the State governments and their endowments when first formed; having also shown the origin of the National Government and the powers vested in it; and having shown, lastly, the powers which are admitted to have remained to the State governments after those which were taken from them by the National Government, I will now proceed to examine whether the power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement by roads and canals has been vested in the United States.

Before we can determine whether this power has been granted to the General Government it will be necessary to ascertain distinctly the nature and extent of the power requisite to make such improvements. When that is done we shall be able to decide whether such power is vested in the National Government.

* * * * * * *

It may be urged that the opposition suggested by the owner of the land or by the States individually may be avoided by a satisfactory arrangement with the parties. But a suppression of opposition in that way is no proof of a right in Congress, nor could it, if confined to that limit, remove all the impediments to the exercise of the power. It is not sufficient that Congress may, by the command and application of the public revenue, purchase the soil, and thus silence that class of individuals, or by the accommodation afforded to individual States put down opposition on their part. Congress must be able rightfully to control all opposition or they can not carry the system into effect. Cases would inevitably occur to put the right to the test. The work must be preserved from injury, tolls must be collected, offenders must be punished. With these culprits no bargain can be made. When brought to trial they must deny the validity of the law, and that plea being sustained all claim to the right ceases.

If the United States possess this power, it must be either because it has been specifically granted or that it is incidental and necessary to carry into effect some specific grant. The advocates for the power derive it from the following sources: First, the right to establish post offices and post roads; second, to declare war; third, to regulate commerce among the several States; fourth, from the power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; fifth, from the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof; sixth, and lastly, from the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States. It is to be observed that there is but little accord among the advocates for this power as to the particular source from whence it is derived. They all agree, however, in ascribing it to some one or more of those above mentioned. I will examine the ground of the claim in each instance.

The first of these grants is in the following words: "Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads." What is the just import of these words and the extent of the grant? The word "establish" is the ruling term; "post offices and post roads" are the subjects on which it acts. The question, therefore, is, What power is granted by that word? The sense in which words are commonly used is that in which they are to be understood in all transactions between public bodies and individuals. The intention of the parties is to prevail, and there is no better way of ascertaining it than by giving to the terms used their ordinary import. If we were to ask any number of our most enlightened citizens who had no connection with public affairs and whose minds were unprejudiced what was the import of the word "establish" and the extent of the grant which it controls, we do not think there would be any difference of opinion among them. We are satisfied that all of them would answer that a power was thereby given to Congress to fix on the towns, courthouses, and other places throughout our Union at which there should be post offices the routes by which the mails should be carried from one post office to another, so as to diffuse intelligence as extensively and to make the institution as useful as possible, to fix the postage to be paid on every letter and packet thus carried, to support the establishment, and to protect the post offices and mails from robbery by punishing those who should commit the offense. The idea of a right to lay off the roads of the United States on a general scale of improvement, to take the soil from the proprietor by force to establish turnpikes and tolls, and to punish offenders in the manner stated above would never occur to any such person. The use of the existing road by the stage, mail carrier, or post boy in passing over it as others do is all that would be thought of, the jurisdiction and soil remaining to the State, with a right in the State or those authorized by its legislature to change the road at pleasure.

* * * * * * *

If the United States possessed the power contended for under this grant, might they not in adopting the roads of the individual States for the carriage of the mail, as has been done, assume jurisdiction over them and preclude a right to interfere with or alter them? Might they not establish turnpikes and exercise all the other acts of sovereignty above stated over such roads necessary to protect them from injury and defray the expense of repairing them? Surely, if the right exists, these consequences necessarily followed as soon as the road was established. The absurdity of such a pretension must be apparent to all who examine it. In this way a large portion of the territory of every State might be taken from it, for there is scarcely a road in any State which will not be used for the transportation of the mail. A new field for legislation and internal government would thus be opened.

From this view of the subject I think we may fairly conclude that the right to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement, or any part of it, has not been granted to Congress under the power to establish post offices and post roads; that the common roads of the country only were contemplated by that grant and are fully competent to all its purposes.

The next object of inquiry is whether the right to declare war includes the right to adopt and execute this system of improvement. The objections to it are, I presume, not less conclusive than those which are applicable to the grant which we have just examined.

Under the last-mentioned grant a claim has been set up to as much of that system as relates to roads. Under this it extends alike to roads and canals.

We must examine this grant by the same rules of construction that were applied to the preceding one. The object was to take this power from the individual States and to vest it in the General Government. This has been done in clear and explicit terms, first, by granting the power to Congress, and, secondly, by prohibiting the exercise of it by the States. "Congress shall have a right to declare war." This is the language of the grant. If the right to adopt and execute this system of improvement is included in it, it must be by way of incident only, since there is nothing in the grant itself which bears any relation to roads and canals. The following considerations, it is presumed, prove incontestably that this power has not been granted in that or any other manner:

The United States are exposed to invasion through the whole extent of their Atlantic coast by any European power with whom we might be engaged in war—on the northern and northwestern frontier on the side of Canada by Great Britain and on the southern by Spain or any power in alliance with her. If internal improvements are to be carried to the full extent to which they may be useful for military purposes, the power as it exists must apply to all the roads of the Union, there being no limitation to it. Wherever such improvements may facilitate the march of troops, the transportation of cannon, or otherwise aid the operations or mitigate the calamities of war along the coast or in any part of the interior they would be useful for military purposes, and might therefore be made. The power following as an incident to another power can be measured as to its extent by reference only to the obvious extent of the power to which it is incidental. So great a scope was, it is believed, never given to incidental power.

The second number of the clause, which is applicable to military and naval purposes alone, claims particular attention here. It fully confirms the view taken of the other enumerated powers, for had it been intended to include in the right to declare war, by way of incident, any right of jurisdiction or legislation over territory within a State, it would have been done as to fortifications, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings. By specifically granting the right as to such small portions as might be necessary for these purposes and on certain conditions, minutely and well defined, it is manifest that it was not intended to grant it as to any other portion on any condition for any purpose or in any manner whatsoever.

It may be said that, although the authority to exercise exclusive legislation in certain cases within the States with their consent may be considered as a prohibition to Congress to exercise like exclusive legislation in any other case, although their consent should be granted, it does not prohibit the exercise of such jurisdiction or power within a State as would be competent to all the purposes of internal improvement. I can conceive no ground on which the idea of such a power over any part of the territory of a State can be inferred from the power to declare war. There never can be an occasion for jurisdiction for military purposes, except in fortifications, dockyards, and the like places. If the soldiers are in the field or are quartered in garrisons without the fortifications, the civil authority must prevail where they are. The government of the troops by martial law is not affected by it. In war, when the forces are increased and the movement is on a greater scale, consequences follow which are inseparable from the exigencies of the State. More freedom of action and a wider range of power in the military commanders, to be exercised on their own responsibility, may be necessary to the public safety; but even here the civil authority of the State never ceases to operate. It is also exclusive for all civil purposes.

I come next to the right to regulate commerce, the third source from whence the right to make internal improvements is claimed. It is expressed in the following words: "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." The reasoning applicable to the preceding claims is equally so to this. The mischief complained of was that this power could not be exercised with advantage by the individual States, and the object was to transfer it to the United States. The sense in which the power was understood and exercised by the States was doubtless that in which it was transferred to the United States. The policy was the same as to three branches of this grant, and it is scarcely possible to separate the two first from each other in any view which may be taken of the subject. The last, relating to the Indian tribes, is of a nature distinct from the others, for reasons too well known to require explanation. Commerce between independent powers for communities is universally regulated by duties and imposts. It was so regulated by the States before the adoption of this Constitution equally in respect to each other and to foreign powers. The goods and vessels employed in the trade are the only subjects of regulation. It can act on none other. A power, then, to impose such duties and imposts in regard to foreign nations and to prevent any on the trade between the States was the only power granted.

The fourth claim is founded on the right of Congress to "pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare" of the United States. This claim has less reason on its side than either of those which we have already examined.

* * * * * * *

An unqualified power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare, as the second part of this clause would be if considered as a distinct and separate grant, would extend to every object in which the public could be interested. A power to provide for the common defense would give to Congress the command of the whole force and of all the resources of the Union; but a right to provide for the general welfare would go much further. It would, in effect, break down all the barriers between the States and the General Government and consolidate the whole under the latter.

I have dwelt thus long on this part of the subject from an earnest desire to fix in a clear and satisfactory manner the import of the second part of this grant, well knowing from the generality of the terms used their tendency to lead into error. I indulge a strong hope that the view herein presented will not be without effect, but will tend to satisfy the unprejudiced and impartial that nothing more was granted by that part than a power to appropriate the public money raised under the other part. To what extent that power may be carried will be the next object of inquiry.

It is contended on the one side that as the National Government is a Government of limited powers it has no right to expend money except in the performance of acts authorized by the other specific grants according to a strict construction of their powers; that this grant in neither of its branches gives to Congress discretionary power of any kind, but is a mere instrument in its hands to carry into effect the powers contained in the other grants. To this construction I was inclined in the more early stage of our Government, but on further reflection and observation my mind has undergone a change for reasons which I will frankly unfold.

The grant consists, as heretofore observed, of a twofold power—the first to raise, the second to appropriate, the public money—and the terms used in both instances are general and unqualified. Each branch was obviously drawn with a view to the other, and the import of each tends to illustrate that of the other. The grant to raise money gives a power over every subject from which revenue may be drawn, and is made in the same manner with the grants to declare war, to raise and support armies and a navy, to regulate commerce, to establish post offices and post roads, and with all the other specific grants to the General Government. In the discharge of the powers contained in any of these grants there is no other check than that which is to be found in the great principles of our system, the responsibility of the Representative to his constituents.

* * * * * * *

If then the right to raise and appropriate the public money is not restricted to the expenditures under the other specific grants according to a strict construction of their powers, respectively, is there no limitation to it? Have Congress a right to raise and appropriate the money to any and every purpose according to their will and pleasure? They certainly have not. The Government of the United States is a limited Government, instituted for great national purposes, and for those only. Other interests are committed to the States whose duty it is to provide for them. Each government should look to the great and essential purposes for which it was instituted and confine itself to those purposes. A State government will rarely, if ever, apply money to national purposes without making it a charge to the Nation. The people of the State would not permit it. Nor will Congress be apt to apply money in aid of the State administrations for purposes strictly local in which the Nation at large has no interest, although the State should desire it. The people of the other States would condemn it. They would declare that Congress had no right to tax them for such a purpose, and dismiss at the next election such of their representatives as had voted for the measure, especially if it should be severely felt. I do not think that in offices of this kind there is much danger of the two governments mistaking their interests or their duties. I rather expect that they would soon have a clear and distinct understanding of them and move on in great harmony.

* * * * * * *

The right of appropriation is nothing more than a right to apply the public money to this or that purpose. It has no incidental power, nor does it draw after it any consequences of that kind. All that Congress could do under it in the case of internal improvements would be to appropriate the money necessary to make them. For every act requiring legislative sanction or support the State authority must be relied on. The condemnation of the land, if the proprietors should refuse to sell it, the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, and the protection of the work when finished must be done by the State. To these purposes the powers of the General Government are believed to be utterly incompetent.

To the objection that the United States have no power in any instance which is not complete to all the purposes to which it may be made instrumental, and in consequence that they have no right to appropriate any portion of the public money to internal improvements because they have not the right of sovereignty and jurisdiction over them when made, a full answer has, it is presumed, been already given. It may, however, be proper to add that if this objection was well founded it would not be confined to the simple case of internal improvements but would apply to others of high importance. Congress have a right to regulate commerce. To give effect to this power it becomes necessary to establish customhouses in every State along the coast and in many parts of the interior. The vast amount of goods imported and the duties to be performed to accommodate the merchants and secure the revenue make it necessary the spacious buildings should be erected, especially in the great towns, for their reception. This, it is manifest, could best be performed under the direction of the General Government. Have Congress the right to seize the property of individuals if they should refuse to sell it, importers best adapted to the purpose to have it valued, and to take it at the valuation? Have they a right to exercise jurisdiction within those buildings? Neither of these claims has ever been set up, nor could it, as is presumed, be sustained. They have invariably either rented houses where such as were suitable could be obtained, or where they could not, purchased the grounds of individuals, erected the buildings, and held them under the laws of the State. Under the power to establish post offices and post roads houses are also requisite for the reception of the mails and the transaction of the business of the several offices. These have always been rented or purchased and held under the laws of the State in the same manner as if they had been taken by a citizen. The United States have a right to establish tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, and such have been established in every State of the Union. It is believed that the houses for these inferior courts have invariably been rented. No right of jurisdiction in them has ever been claimed, nor other right than that of privilege, and that only while the court is in session. A still stronger case may be urged. Should Congress be compelled by invasion or other cause to remove the Government to some town within one of the States, would they have a right of jurisdiction over such town, or hold even the house in which they held their session under other authority than the laws of such State? It is believed that they would not. If they have a right to appropriate money for any of these purposes, to be laid out under the protection of the laws of the State, surely they have an equal right to do it for the purposes of internal improvements.

* * * * * * *

The Cumberland Road is the only regular work which has been undertaken by the General Government or which could give rise to any question between the two Governments respecting its powers. It is a great work, over the highest mountains in our Union, connecting from the seat of the General Government the eastern with the western waters, and more intimately the Atlantic with the Western States, in the formation of which $1,800,000 have been expended. The measures pursued in this case require to be particularly noticed as fixing the opinion of the parties, and particularly of Congress, on the important question of the right.

* * * * * * *

By an act of April 30, 1802, entitled "An act to enable the people of the eastern division of the territory northwest of the River Ohio to form a constitution and State government and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes," after describing the limits of the proposed new State and authorizing the people thereof to elect a convention to form a constitution, the three following propositions were made to the convention, to be obligatory on the United States if accepted by it: First, that section No. 16 of every township, or, where such section had been sold, other lands equivalent thereto, should be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of free schools. Second, that the 6 miles' reservation, including the salt springs commonly called the Sciota Salt Springs, the salt springs near the Muskingum River and in the military tract with the sections which include the same, should be granted to the said State for the use of the people thereof, under such regulations as the legislature of the State should prescribe; provided, that it should never sell or lease the same for more than 10 years. Third, that one-twentieth part of the proceeds of the public lands lying within the said State which might be sold by Congress from and after the 30th of June ensuing should be applied to the laying out and making public roads from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic, to the Ohio, and through the State of Ohio, such roads to be laid out under the authority of Congress, with the consent of the several States through which they should pass.

These three propositions were made on the condition that the convention of the State should provide by an ordinance irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every tract of land sold by Congress after the 30th of June ensuing should remain for the term of five years after sale exempt from every species of tax whatsoever.

I will now proceed to the fifth source from which the power is said to be derived, viz, the power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof. This is the seventeenth and last of the enumerated powers granted to Congress.

I have always considered this power as having been granted on a principle of greater caution to secure the complete execution of all the powers which had been vested in the General Government. It contains no distinct and specific power, as every other grant does, such as to lay and collect taxes, to declare war, to regulate commerce, and the like. Looking to the whole scheme of the General Government, it gives to Congress authority to make all laws which should be deemed necessary and proper for carrying all its powers into effect.

I come now to the last source from which this power is said to be derived, viz, the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States, which is contained in the second clause of the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution.

To form a just opinion of the nature and extent of this power it will be necessary to bring into view the provisions contained in the first clause of the section of the article referred to, which makes an essential part of the policy in question. By this it is declared that new States shall be admitted into the Union, but that no new States shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State nor any States be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the United States.

* * * * * * *

Since, then, it is manifest that the power granted to Congress to dispose of and make all needful regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States relates solely to the territory and property which had been ceded by individual States, and which after such cession lay without their respective limits, and for which special provision was deemed necessary, the main power of the Constitution operating internally, not being applicable or adequate thereto, it follows that this power gives no authority, and has even no bearing on the question of internal improvements. The authority to admit new States and to dispose of the property and regulate the territory is not among the enumerated powers granted to Congress, because the duties to be performed under it are not among the ordinary duties of that body, like the imposition of taxes, the regulation of commerce, and the like. They are objects in their nature special, and for which special provision was more suitable and proper.

Having now examined all the powers of Congress under which the right to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement is claimed and the reasons in support of it in each instance, I think that it may fairly be concluded that such a right has not been granted. It appears and is admitted that much may be done in aid of such a system by the right which is derived from several of the existing grants, and more especially from that to appropriate the public money. But still it is manifest that as a system for the United States it can never be carried into effect under that branch or under all of them united, the great and essential power being deficient, consisting of a right to take up the subject on principle; to cause our Union to be examined by men of science with a view to such improvements; to authorize commissioners to lay off the roads and canals in all proper directions, to take the land at a valuation if necessary, and to construct the works; to pass laws with suitable penalties for their protection; and to raise a revenue from them, to keep them in repair, and make further improvement by the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, with gates to be placed at the proper distances.

* * * * * * *

The advantages which would be derived from such improvements are incalculable. The facility which would thereby be afforded to the transportation of the whole of the rich productions of our country to market would alone more than amply compensate for all the labor and expense attending them. Great, however, as is that advantage, it is one only of many and by no means the most important. Every power of the General Government and of the State governments connected with the strength and resources of the country would be made more efficient for the purposes intended by them. In war they would facilitate the transportation of men, ordnance, and provisions, and munitions of war of every kind to every part of our extensive coast and interior on which an attack might be made or threatened. Those who have any knowledge of the occurrences of the late war must know the good effect which would result in the event of another war from the command of an interior navigation alone along the coast for all the purposes of war as well as of commerce between the different parts of our Union. The impediments to all military operations which proceeded from the want of such a navigation and the reliance which was placed, notwithstanding those impediments on such a commerce, can not be forgotten. In every other line their good effect would be most sensibly felt. Intelligence by means of the Post Office Department would be more easily, extensively, and rapidly diffused. Parts the most remote from each other would be brought more closely together. Distant lands would be made more valuable, and the industry of our fellow citizens on every portion of our soil be better rewarded.

* * * * * * *

If it is thought proper to vest this power in the United States, the only mode in which it can be done is by an amendment of the Constitution. The States individually can not transfer the power to the United States, nor can the United States receive it. The Constitution forms an equal and the sole relation between the General Government and the several States, and it recognizes no change in it which shall not in like manner apply to all. If it is once admitted that the General Government may form compacts with individual States not common to the others, and which the others might even disapprove, into what pernicious consequences might it not lead? Such compacts are utterly repugnant to the principles of the Constitution and of the most dangerous tendency. The States through which this road passes have given their sanction only to the route and to the acquisition of the soil by the United States, a right very different from that of jurisdiction, which can not be granted without an amendment to the Constitution and which need not be granted for the purposes of this system except in the limited manner heretofore stated. On full consideration, therefore, of the whole subject I am of opinion that such an amendment ought to be recommended to the several States for their adoption.

Mr. WORKS. I desire to call particular attention to one of the subjects that he discusses, which I think is the only one that by any possibility can be used as a foundation for legislation of the kind that is now before the Senate. He says:

It is to be observed that there is but little accord among the advocates for this power as to the particular source from whence it is derived. They all agree, however, in ascribing it to some one or more of those above mentioned. I will examine the ground of the claim in each instance.

The first of these grants is in the following words: "Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads." What is the just import of these words and the extent of the grant? The word "establish" is the ruling term; "post offices and post roads" are the subjects on which it acts. The question therefore is, What power is granted by that word? The sense in which words are commonly used is that in which they are to be understood in all transactions between public bodies and individuals. The intention of the parties is to prevail, and there is no better way of ascertaining it than by giving to the terms used their ordinary import. If we were to ask any number of our most enlightened citizens, who had no connection with public affairs and whose minds were unprejudiced, what was the import of the word "establish" and the extent of the grant which it controls, we do not think there would be any difference of opinion among them. We are satisfied that all of them would answer that a power was thereby given to Congress to fix on the towns, courthouses, and other places throughout our Union at which there should be post offices, the routes by which the mails should be carried from one post office to another, so as to diffuse intelligence as extensively and to make the institution as useful as possible, to fix the postage to be paid on every letter and packet thus carried, to support the establishment, and to protect the post offices and mails from robbery by punishing those who should commit the offense. The idea of a right to lay off the roads of the United States on a general scale of improvement, to take the soil from the proprietor by force, to establish turnpikes and tolls, and to punish offenders in the manner stated above would never occur to any such person. The use of the existing road by the stage, mail carrier, or postboy in passing over it as others do is all that would be thought of, the jurisdiction and soil remaining to the State, with a right in the State or those authorized by its legislature to change the road at pleasure.

* * * * * * *

If the United States possessed the power contended for under this grant, might they not in adopting the roads of the individual States for the carriage of the mail, as has been done, assume jurisdiction over them and preclude a right to interfere with or alter them? Might they not establish turnpikes and exercise all the other acts of sovereignty above stated over such roads necessary to protect them from injury and defray the expense of repairing them? Surely if the right exists these consequences necessarily followed as soon as the road was established. The absurdity of such a pretension must be apparent to all who examine it. In this way a large portion of the territory of every State might be taken from it, for there is scarcely a road in any State which will not be used for the transportation of the mail. A new field for legislation and internal government would thus be opened.

It may be remarked in this connection, Mr. President, that it is recited in the report of the committee that for three-quarters of a century the United States Government has not enacted any such legislation as this; it has not aided States in the construction of roads within their borders. It has taken no action of that kind, presumably for the reason that the decision in the McCulloch case, to which I have called attention, and the veto message of President Monroe established beyond a doubt in the mind of anyone who had examined them the fact that the Government had no such power under the Constitution.

Mr. President, I have a few other decided cases here bearing upon this question, not so directly as the ones to which I have referred, but which, I think, embody the principles which should control and the limitation that should be placed upon the National Government in dealing with questions of this kind.

The case of Pensacola Telegraph Co. against Western Union Telegraph Co. (96 U. S., 1) is an interesting one, in which the respective rights of a State and the Federal Government in dealing with interstate commerce is considered. Congress by statute, approved July 24, 1866, granted—to any telegraph company the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads which have been or may hereafter be declared such by act of Congress, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States.

On the 11th of December, 1866, the Legislature of the State of Florida by statute granted to the Pensacola Telegraph Co.—

the exclusive privilege and right of establishing and maintaining lines of electric telegraph in the counties of Escambia and Santa Rosa, either from different points within said counties or either of them from any point in this or any other State.

On the 5th of June, 1867, the directors of the Western Union Telegraph Co. by resolution accepted the provisions of the act of Congress above referred to.

On the 14th of February, 1873, the Legislature of Florida granted to the Alabama & Florida Railroad Co. certain rights to construct, maintain, and operate a telegraph line over the same territory embraced in the exclusive grant to the Pensacola Telegraph Co.

On the 24th of June, 1874, the Pensacola & Louisville Railroad Co. granted to the Western Union Co. the right to erect a telegraph line upon its right of way and also the rights and privileges conferred by the acts of 1873 and 1874.

The Western Union Co. immediately commenced the erection of the line, but before its completion this suit was brought by the Pensacola Telegraph Co. to enjoin the work and the use of the line on account of the alleged exclusive right of the company under its charter from the State of Florida, which raised directly the question of the powers of the State and Federal Government to control such use.

I quote extracts from the opinion of Chief Justice Waite:

Congress has power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States" (Const., Art. I, sec. 8, par. 3), and "to establish post offices and post roads" (id., par. 7). The Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof are the supreme law of the land. (Art. VI, par. 2.) A law of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution suspends or overrides all State statutes with which it is in conflict.

Since the case of Gibbons v. Ogden (9 Wheat., 1) it has never been doubted that commercial intercourse is an element of commerce which comes within the regulating power of Congress. Post offices and post roads are established to facilitate the transmission of intelligence. Both commerce and the Postal Service are placed within the power of Congress, because, being national in their operation, they should be under the protecting care of the National Government.

* * * * * * *

The Government of the United States, within the scope of its powers, operates upon every foot of territory under its jurisdiction. It legislates for the whole Nation, and is not embarrassed by State lines. Its peculiar duty is to protect one part of the country from encroachments by another upon the national rights which belong to all.

The State of Florida has attempted to confer upon a single corporation the exclusive right of transmitting intelligence by telegraph over a certain portion of its territory. This embraces the two westernmost counties of the State and extends from Alabama to the Gulf. No telegraph line can cross the State from east to west or from north to south within these counties except it passes over this territory. Within it is situated an important seaport, at which business centers and with which those engaged in commercial pursuits have occasion more or less to communicate. The United States have there also the necessary machinery of the National Government. They have a navy yard, forts, custom-houses, courts, post offices, and the appropriate officers for the enforcement of the laws. The legislation of Florida, if sustained, excludes all commercial intercourse by telegraph between the citizens of the other States and those residing upon this territory except by the employment of this corporation. The United States can not communicate with their own officers by telegraph except in the same way. The State, therefore, clearly has attempted to regulate commercial intercourse between its citizens and those of other States and to control the transmission of all telegraphic correspondence within its own jurisdiction.

It is unnecessary to decide how far this might have been done if Congress had not acted upon the same subject, for it has acted. The statute of July 24, 1866, in effect, amounts to a prohibition of all State monopolies in this particular. It substantially declares, in the interest of commerce and the convenient transmission of intelligence from place to place by the Government of the United States and its citizens, that the erection of telegraph lines shall, so far as State interference is concerned, be free to all who will submit to the conditions imposed by Congress, and that corporations organized under the laws of one State for constructing and operating telegraph lines shall not be excluded by another from prosecuting their business within its jurisdiction if they accept the terms proposed by the National Government for this national privilege. To this extent, certainly the statute is a legitimate regulation of commercial intercourse among the States, and is appropriate legislation to carry into execution the powers of Congress over the Postal Service. It gives no foreign corporation the right to enter upon private property without the consent of the owner and erect the necessary structures for its business, but it does provide that whenever the consent of the owner is obtained no State legislation shall prevent the occupation of post roads for telegraph purposes by such corporations as are willing to avail themselves of its privileges.

It is insisted, however, that the statute extends only to such military and post roads as are upon the public domain, but this, we think, is not so. The language is, "through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by act of Congress, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States." There is nothing to indicate any intention of limiting the effect of the words employed, and they are, therefore, to be given their natural and ordinary significance. Read in this way, the grant evidently extends to the public domain, the military and post roads, and the navigable waters of the United States. These are all within the dominion of the National Government to the extent of the national powers, and are, therefore, subject to legitimate congressional regulation. No question arises as to the authority of Congress to provide for the appropriation of private property to the uses of the telegraph, for no such attempt has been made. The use of public property alone is granted. If private property is required, it must, so far as the present legislation is concerned, be obtained by private arrangement with its owner. No compulsory proceedings are authorized. State sovereignty under the Constitution is not interfered with. Only national privileges are granted.

The State law in question, so far as it confers exclusive rights upon the Pensacola Co., is certainly in conflict with this legislation of Congress. To that extent it is, therefore, inoperative as against a corporation of another State entitled to the privileges of the act of Congress. Such being the case, the charter of the Pensacola Co. does not exclude the Western Union Co. from the occupancy of the right of way of the Pensacola & Louisville Railroad Co. under the arrangement made for that purpose.

This sentence in the opinion is significant as limiting the power of the Federal Government:

These are all within the dominion of the National Government to the extent of the national powers.

And the extent of the national powers is confined to commerce between the States and not within a State. And it is expressly held and confined in Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Pennsylvania Railroad Co. (195 U. S., 540) that the act only applies "to commercial intercourse by telegraph among the States," and does not confer upon telegraph companies the right to enter upon private property without the consent of the owner.

As it applies to post roads, the right of the Government to control or maintain them is necessarily confined to the use for interstate commerce and not mere local traffic or transportation. In the later case emphasis is given to this paragraph of the opinion in the earlier decision:

It (the act of 1866) gives no foreign corporation the right to enter upon private property without the consent of the owner and erect the necessary structures for its business, but it does provide that whenever the consent of the owner is obtained no State legislation shall prevent the occupation of post roads for telegraph purposes by such corporations as are willing to avail themselves of its privileges.

The fact that the legal title to post roads established as such, as set out in the veto message of President Monroe, may be in the adjoining private owner and must be acquired under State laws by any company seeking to use it would prevent entry upon it under authority of the United States. And this was clearly established by the case of Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Ann Arbor Railroad Co. (178 U. S., 239).

The strongest support for the claim of unlimited power in the National Government to maintain and control post roads may be found in this statement of Mr. Justice Field in Ex parte Jackson (96 U. S., 727):

The power vested in Congress to establish post offices and post roads has been practically construed, since the foundation of the Government, to authorize not merely the designation of the routes over which the mails shall be carried, and the offices where letters and other documents shall be received to be distributed or forwarded, but the carriage of the mail, and all measures necessary to secure its safe and speedy transit, and the prompt delivery of its contents.

But the question involved related solely to the right of the Government to prescribe what should or should not be transmitted through the mail and had no reference to the right to build or maintain a road within a State.

To the same effect is Public Clearing House v. Coyne (194 U. S., 497).

That the power of Congress to control the operation of railroads over which mails are carried is confined to roads doing an interstate business is definitely determined in Gladson v. Minnesota (166 U. S., 427, 430), in which it was claimed that the State regulations were—an attempt on the part of the State to regulate interstate commerce; and secondly, being an unlawful interference with and an attempt to regulate the United States mail.

Of this the court said:

The principles of law which govern this case are familiar and have been often affirmed by this court. A railroad corporation created by a State is for all purposes of local government a domestic corporation, and its railroad within the State is a matter of domestic concern. Even when its road connects, as most railroads do, with railroads in other States, a State which created the corporation may make all needful regulations of a police character for the government of the company while operating its road in that jurisdiction. It may prescribe the location and the plan of construction of the road, the rate of speed at which the trains shall run, and the places at which they shall stop, and may make any other reasonable regulations for their management in order to secure the objects of the incorporation and the safety, good order, convenience, and comfort of the passengers and of the public. All such regulations are strictly within the police power of the State. They are not in themselves regulations of interstate commerce; and it is only when they operate as such in the circumstances of their application, and conflict with the express or presumed will of Congress exerted upon the same subject, that they can be required to give way to the paramount authority of the Constitution of the United States. (Stone v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 116 U. S., 307, 333, 334; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S., 465, 481, 482; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S., 299, 308, 317; New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad v. New York, 165 U. S., 628, 632.)

An entirely different rule is applied where such regulations affect interstate commerce, as held in Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Illinois (163 U. S., 142), in which it was said:

Upon the state of facts presented by this record, the duties of the Illinois Central Railroad Co. were not confined to those which it owed to the State of Illinois under the charter of the company and other laws of the State, but included distinct duties imposed upon the corporation by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The State may doubtless compel the railroad company to perform the duty imposed by its charter of carrying passengers and goods between its termini within the State. But so long, at least, as that duty is adequately performed by the company, the State can not, under the guise of compelling its performance interfere with the performance of paramount duties to which the company has been subjected by the Constitution and laws of the United States.

The State may make reasonable regulations to secure the safety of passengers, even on interstate trains, while within its borders. But the State can do nothing which will directly burden or impede the interstate traffic of the company, or impair the usefulness of its facilities for such traffic. (Railroad Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall., 584, 589; Stone v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., 116 U. S., 307, 334; Smith v. Alabama 124, U. S. 465.)

The opinion in re Debs (158 U. S., 564) is a most interesting and instructive one, as bearing on this question. The case was one of an attempted obstruction of transportation by railroad companies, thereby interfering with interstate commerce and the carrying of the mails. After quoting extensively from the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch against Maryland, to which I have already referred, Mr. Justice Brewer said:

Under the power vested in Congress to establish post offices and post roads, Congress has, by a mass of legislation, established the great Post Office System of the country, with all its detail of organization, its machinery for the transaction of business, defining what shall be carried and what not, and the prices of carriage, and also prescribing penalties for all offenses against it.

Obviously these powers given to the National Government over interstate commerce and in respect to the transportation of the mails were not dormant and unused. Congress had taken hold of these two matters, and by various and specific acts had assumed and exercised the powers given to it, and was in the full discharge of its duty to regulate interstate commerce and carry the mails. The validity of such exercise and the exclusiveness of its control had been again and again presented to this court for consideration. It is curious to note the fact that in a large proportion of the cases in respect to interstate commerce brought to this court the question presented was of the validity of State legislation in its bearings upon interstate commerce, and the uniform course of decision has been to declare that it is not within the competency of a State to legislate in such a manner as to obstruct interstate commerce. If a State, with its recognized powers of sovereignty, is impotent to obstruct interstate commerce, can it be that any mere voluntary association of individuals within the limits of that State has a power which the State itself does not possess?

As, under the Constitution, power over interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails is vested in the National Government and Congress by virtue of such grant has assumed actual and direct control, if follows that the National Government may prevent any unlawful and forcible interference therewith. But how shall this be accomplished? Doubtless, it is within the competency of Congress to prescribe by legislation that any interference with these matters shall be offences against the United States, and prosecuted and punished by indictment in the proper courts. But is that the only remedy? Have the vast interests of the Nation in interstate commerce, and in the transportation of the mails, no other protection than lies in the possible punishment of those who interfere with it?

But there is no such impotency in the National Government. The entire strength of the Nation may be used to enforce in any part of the land the full and free exercise of all national powers and the security of all rights entrusted by the Constitution to its care. The strong arm of the National Government may be put forth to brush away all obstructions to the freedom of interstate commerce or the transportation of the mails. If the emergency arises, the Army of the Nation, and all its militia, are at the service of the Nation to compel obedience to its laws.

See also State of Pennsylvania against Wheeling, and so forth, Bridge Co. (18 U. S., 421).

These cases, like all the others, rest upon the powers of the United States to deal with interstate transportation. I have no doubt, however, that the National Government has the power to protect the transportation of its mails within a State, subject to reasonable regulations by the State authorities and to private rights.

In Hepburn v. Griswold (8 Wall., 603, 615) the court said:

But the extension of power by implication was regarded with some apprehension by the wise men who framed and by the intelligent citizens who adopted the Constitution. This apprehension is manifest in the terms by which the grant of incidental and auxiliary powers is made. All powers of this nature are included under the description of "power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers expressly granted to Congress or vested by the Constitution in the Government or in any of its departments or officers."

The same apprehension is equally apparent in the tenth article of the amendments, which declares that "the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States or the people."

We do not mean to say that either of these constitutional provisions is to be taken as restricting any exercise of power fairly warranted by legitimate derivation from one of the enumerated or express powers. The first was undoubtedly introduced to exclude all doubt in respect to the existence of implied powers, while the words "necessary and proper" were intended to have a "sense," to use the words of Mr. Justice Story, "at once admonitory and directory," and to require that the means used in the execution of an express power "should be bona fide, appropriate to the end." The second provision was intended to have a like admonitory and directory sense and to restrain the limited Government established under the Constitution from the exercise of powers not clearly delegated or derived by just inference from powers so delegated.

* * * * * * * * *

It must be taken then as finally settled, so far as judicial decisions can settle anything, that the words "all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution" powers expressly granted or vested have in the Constitution a sense equivalent to that of the words, laws, not absolutely necessary, indeed, but appropriate, plainly adapted to constitutional and legitimate ends, laws not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, laws really calculated to effect objects intrusted to the Government.

Mr. President, I have tried in the first instance to show that as a matter of policy the Government ought not to go into legislation of this kind. I believe it would be a great mistake. Everybody who stops to think about it knows that if we should enter into this field, as is proposed by this bill, and which carries an appropriation of only $75,000,000, it would be only a beginning. It would amount to practically nothing. In the State of California we would get, of the total amount that is provided for in the bill, only something over $2,000,000, which would amount to practically nothing to the State of California in dealing with the roads in that State. The temptation would present itself, after this money is expended, to go on and expend more and more for the purpose of improving the roads of the States; and if this legislation is justified and is necessary, it must be carried further in order to carry out the intent of Congress, as indicated by this bill and the report that is made by the committee.

Are we ready to undertake an enterprise of that kind on the part of the National Government that will mean the expenditure of millions of dollars, independently of any question of power in the Government so to legislate? I think it would be bad policy. I think it would be dangerous. I regard this bill as one of the worst and most vicious "pork-barrel" pieces of proposed legislation that has ever come before this body.

I do not say that, Mr. President, because I am opposed to the improvement of the roads. By no means. I am a great believer in the expenditure of money by the States and by the National Government, where it has a right to act in the matter, in the construction and improvement of highways. There is probably no State in the Union that has exhibited more enterprise and expended more money in the construction and improvement of its roads than the State which I represent in part on the floor of the Senate. I have myself approved of that course by the State. You can go to California to-day and ride from the city of San Francisco to the city of Los Angeles, nearly 500 miles, upon a road that is almost as smooth as a floor. They have established automobile bus lines that are traveling now, eight from each end, between those two cities, carrying passengers, and they are being well patronized, because it is a trip that anyone would like to take. But that is a question for the States to determine. It is a State function. The Government of the United States has no business to go into my State in any guise or for any purpose to expend the money of the National Government to build the roads of California.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from California to the fact that in the year 1914 the total expenditure of State funds, joint funds, and local funds amounted to $14,670,614, and yet there are 48,000 miles of roads in the State, of which only 9,388 are improved.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to be as accurate as I can in dealing with the question of the expenditures in my own State for the purpose of constructing and improving the roads. With that object in view I wired the State highway commission, asking them to give me a statement of the amount of money expended by the State and by the counties for this purpose, and I have extracted from a telegram received in answer the following information:

Counties of State have spent per year in recent years from $7,000,000 to $9,000,000.

State appropriated under act of 1909 during past six years $18,000,000.

Counties have spent in highway bonds probably an equal amount, $18,000,000.

Averaging expenditure of counties at $8,000,000 per year for 6 years	$48, 000, 000
State	18, 000, 000
County bonds	18, 000, 000
Total	$84, 000, 000

Which would give an average expenditure per year for the last six years for roads in California of $14,000,000.

I ought to say, Mr. President, in justice to the State highway engineer, Mr. Fletcher, from whom I received this telegram, that he urges me to support the bill as being a good thing for the State of California. I am not at all surprised that a State engineer should support a bill of this kind. The State engineers in the different States throughout the country have been for the bill from the first. In fact, I think they were probably the first body that really agitated the idea of making these appropriations from the National Treasury to help the States in the construction of their roads. I have no doubt in the world that Mr. Fletcher believes that this would be a good thing for the State of California. I apprehend that he has not considered it from all sides, but is taking a naturally selfish view of the question as to what good may come from it to his own State.

But I hope I am not susceptible of being influenced by any such considerations in dealing with a great question of this kind. I know that the great part of the people of my State would like to have me support this bill. I have no doubt but that I shall be criticized by a good many people for opposing it; but I am thoroughly convinced that the bill is bad, and therefore I am trying to do what seems to be my duty as the representative not only of my State but of the United States.

Mr. President, I think I have said now all that I desire to say about this bill. As I said in the beginning, it is not a very popular stand to take. Most of the States—unthinkingly, I believe—are anxious to profit by the use of the money of the National Government; but I think it ought not to be done in this way, as a matter of policy. I believe that it can not be done constitutionally.

Mr. WORKS subsequently said: Mr. President, the veto message from which I quoted is so important a document that I ask that it may be printed in full in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The veto message referred to is as follows:

VETO MESSAGE.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1822.

To the House of Representatives:

Having duly considered the bill entitled "An act for the preservation and repair of the Cumberland Road," it is with deep regret, approving as I do the policy, that I am compelled to object to its passage and to return the bill to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, under a conviction that Congress do not possess the power under the Constitution to pass such a law.

A power to establish turnpikes with gates and tolls, and to enforce the collection of tolls by penalties, implies a power to adopt and execute a complete system of internal improvement. A right to impose duties to be paid by all persons passing a certain road, and on horses and carriages, as is done by this bill, involves the right to take the land from the proprietor on a valuation and to pass laws for the protection of the road from injuries, and if it exists as to one road it exists as to any other, and to as many roads as Congress may think proper to establish. A right to legislate for one of these purposes is a right to legislate for the others. It is a complete right of jurisdiction and sovereignty for all the purposes of internal improvement, and not merely the right of applying money under the power vested in Congress to make appropriations, under which power, with the consent of the States through which this road passes, the work was originally commenced, and has been so far executed. I am of opinion that Congress do not possess this power; that the States individually can not grant it, for, although they may assent to the appropriation of money within their limits for such purposes, they can grant no power of jurisdiction or sovereignty by special compacts with the United States. This power can be granted only by an amendment to the Constitution and in the mode prescribed by it.

If the power exist it must be either because it has been specifically granted to the United States or that it is incidental to some power which has been specifically granted. If we examine the specific grants of power we do not find it among them, nor is it incidental to any power which has been specifically granted.

It has never been contended that the power was specifically granted. It is claimed only as being incidental to some one or more of the powers which are specifically granted. The following are the powers from which it is said to be derived:

First, from the right to establish post offices and post roads; second, from the right to declare war; third, to regulate commerce; fourth, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare; fifth, from the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof; sixth and lastly, from the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States.

According to my judgment it can not be derived from either of those powers, nor from all of them united, and, in consequence, it does not exist.

Having stated my objections to the bill, I should now cheerfully communicate at large the reasons on which they are founded if I had time to reduce them to such form as to include them in this paper. The advanced stage of the session renders that impossible. Having at the commencement of my service in this high trust considered it a duty to express the opinion that the United States do not possess the power in question, and to suggest for the consideration of Congress the propriety of recommending to the States an amendment to the Constitution to vest the power in the United States, my attention has been often drawn to the subject since, in consequence whereof I have occasionally committed my sentiments to paper respecting it. The form which this exposition has assumed is not such as I should have given it had it been intended for Congress, nor is it concluded. Nevertheless, as it contains my views on this subject, being one which I deem of very high importance and which in many of its bearings has now become peculiarly urgent, I will communicate it to Congress, if in my power, in the course of the day, or certainly on Monday next.

JAMES MONROE.

WASHINGTON, May 4, 1822.

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit the paper alluded to in the message of this day on the subject of internal improvements.

JAMES MONROE.

VIEWS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES ON THE SUBJECT OF INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

"It may be presumed that the proposition relating to internal improvements by roads and canals, which has been several times before Congress, will be taken into consideration again either for the purpose of recommending to the States the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to vest the necessary power in the General Government or to carry the system into effect on the principle that the power has already been granted. It seems to be the prevailing opinion that great advantage would be derived from the exercise of such a power by Congress. Respecting the right there is much diversity of sentiment. It is of the highest importance that this question should be settled. If the right exist, it ought forthwith to be exercised. If it does not exist, surely those who are friends to the power ought to unite in recommending an amendment to the Constitution to obtain it. I propose to examine this question.

"The inquiry confined to its proper objects and within the most limited scale is extensive. Our Government is unlike other governments both in its origin and form. In analyzing it the differences in certain respects between it and those of other nations, ancient and modern, necessarily come into view. I propose to notice these differences so far as they are connected with the object of inquiry and the consequences likely to result from them, varying in equal degree from those which have attended other governments. The digression, if it may be so called, will, in every instance, be short and the transition to the main object immediate and direct.

"To do justice to the subject it will be necessary to mount to the source of power in these States and to pursue this power in its gradations and distribution among the several departments in which it is now vested. The great division is between the State governments and the General Government. If there was a perfect accord in every instance as to the precise extent of the powers granted to the General Government, we should then know with equal certainty what were the powers which remained to the State governments, since it would follow that those which were not granted to the one would remain to the other. But it is on this point, and particularly respecting the construction of these powers and their incidents, that a difference of opinion exists, and hence it is necessary to trace distinctly the origin of each government, the purposes intended by it, and the means adopted to accomplish them. By having the interior of both governments fully before us we shall have all the means which can be afforded to enable us to form a correct opinion of the endowments of each.

"Before the Revolution the present States, then Colonies, were separate communities, unconnected with each other except in their common relation to the Crown. Their governments were instituted by grants from the Crown, which operated, according to the conditions of each grant, in the nature of a compact between the settlers in each colony and the Crown. All power not retained in the Crown was vested exclusively in the Colonies, each having a government consisting of an executive, a judiciary, and a legislative assembly, one branch of which was in every instance elected by the people. No office was hereditary, nor did any title under the Crown give rank or office in any of the Colonies. In resisting the encroachments of the parent country and abrogating the power of the Crown, the authority which had been held by it vested exclusively in the people of the Colonies. By them was a Congress appointed, composed of delegates from each colony, who managed the war, declared independence, treated with foreign powers, and acted in all things according to the sense of their constituents. The Declaration of Independence confirmed in form what had before existed in substance. It announced to the world new States, possessing and exercising complete sovereignty, which they were resolved to maintain. They were soon after recognized by France and other powers, and finally by Great Britain herself in 1783.

"Soon after the power of the Crown was annulled the people of each colony established a constitution or frame of government for themselves, in which these separate branches—legislative, executive, and judiciary—were instituted, each independent of the others. To these branches, each having its appropriate portion, the whole power of the people not delegated to Congress was communicated, to be exercised for their advantage on the representative principle by persons of their appointment, or otherwise deriving their authority immediately from them, and holding their offices for stated terms. All the powers necessary for useful purposes held by any of the strongest Government of the Old World not vested in Congress were imparted to these State governments without other checks than such as are necessary to prevent abuse, in the form of fundamental declarations or bills of right. The great difference between our governments and those of the Old World consists in this, that the former, being representative, the persons who exercise their powers do it not for themselves or in their own right, but for the people, and therefore while they are in the highest degree efficient they can never become oppressive. It is this transfer of the power of the people to representative and responsible bodies in every branch which constitutes the great improvement in the science of government and forms the boast of our system. It combines all the advantages of every known government without any of their disadvantages. It retains the sovereignty in the people, while it avoids the tumult and disorder incident to the exercise of that power by the people themselves. It possesses all the energy and efficiency of the most despotic governments, while it avoids all the oppressions and abuses inseparable from those governments.

"In every stage of the conflict from its commencement until March, 1781, the powers of Congress were undefined, but of vast extent. The assemblies or conventions of the several colonies being formed by representatives from every county in each colony and the Congress by delegates from each colonial assembly, the powers of the latter for general purposes resembled those of the former for local. They rested on the same basis, the people, and were complete for all the purposes contemplated. Never was a movement so spontaneous, so patriotic, so efficient. The Nation exerted its whole faculties in support of its rights, and of its independence after the contest took that direction, and it succeeded. It was, however, foreseen at a very early stage that, although the patriotism of the country might be relied on in the struggle for its independence, a well-digested compact would be necessary to preserve it after obtained. A plan of confederation was in consequence proposed and taken into consideration by Congress even at the moment when the other great act which severed them from Great Britain and declared their independence was proclaimed to the world. This compact was ratified on the 21st of March, 1781, by the last State, and thereupon carried into immediate effect.

"The following powers were vested in the United States by the Articles of Confederation. As this, the first bond of union, was in operation nearly eight years, during which time a practical construction was given to many of its powers, all of which were adopted in the Constitution with important additions, it is thought that a correct view of those powers and of the manner in which they are executed may shed light on the subject under consideration. It may fairly be presumed that where certain powers were transferred from one instrument to the other and in the same terms, or terms descriptive only of the same powers, that it was intended that they should be construed in the same sense in the latter that they were in the former.

"Article I declares that the style of the Confederacy shall be 'The United States of America.'

"Article II. Each State retains its sovereignty, freedom, and independence, and every power and right which is not expressly delegated to the United States.

"Article III. The States severally enter into a firm league of friendship with each other for their common defense, the security of their liberties, and their mutual and general welfare, binding themselves to assist each other against all force offered to or attacks made upon them on account of religion, sovereignty, trade, etc.

"Article IV. The free inhabitants of each State, paupers, vagabonds, and fugitives from justice excepted, shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of free citizens in the several States, etc. Fugitives from justice into any of the States shall be delivered up on the demand of the executive of the State from which they fled. Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the records and acts of every other State.

"Article V. Delegates shall be annually appointed by the legislature of each State to meet in Congress on the first Monday in November, with a power to recall, etc. No State shall appoint less than two nor more than seven, nor shall any delegate hold his office for more than three in six years. Each State shall maintain its own delegates. Each State shall have one vote. Freedom of speech shall not be impeached, and the members shall be protected from arrests, except for treason, etc.

"Article VI. No State shall send or receive an embassy or enter into a treaty with a foreign power. Nor shall any person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States or any State accept any present, emolument, office, or title from a foreign power. Nor shall the United States or any State grant any title of nobility. No two States shall enter into any treaty without the consent of Congress. No State shall lay any imposts or duties which may interfere with any treaties entered into by the United States. No State shall engage in war unless it be invaded or menaced with invasion by some Indian tribe, nor grant letters of marque or reprisal unless it be against pirates, nor keep up vessels of war, nor any body of troops in time of peace, without the consent of Congress; but every State shall keep up a well-regulated militia, etc.

"Article VII. When land forces are raised by any State for the common defense all officers of and under the rank of colonel shall be appointed by the legislature of each State.

"Article VIII. All charges of war and all other expenses which shall be incurred for the common defense or general welfare shall be defrayed out of a common treasury, which shall be supplied by the several States in proportion to the value of all the land in each State granted to individuals. The taxes for paying each proportion shall be levied by the several States.

"Article IX. Congress shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of determining on peace and war, except in the cases mentioned in the sixth article; of sending and receiving ambassadors; entering into alliances, except, etc.; of establishing rules for deciding what captures on land and water shall be legal; of granting letters of marque and reprisal in time of peace; appointing courts for the trial of piracies and felonies on the high seas; for deciding controversies between the States and between individuals claiming lands under two or more States whose jurisdiction has been adjusted; of regulating the alloy and value of coin struck by their authority and of foreign coin; fixing the standard of weights and measures; regulating the trade with the Indians; establishing and regulating post offices from one State to another and throughout all the States, and exacting such postage as may be requisite to defray the expenses of the office; of appointing all officers of the land forces except the regimental; appointing all the officers of the naval forces; to ascertain the necessary sums of money to be raised for the service of the United States and appropriate the same; to borrow money and emit bills of credit; to build and equip a Navy; to agree on the number of land forces and to make requisitions on each State for its quota; that the assent of nine States shall be requisite to these great acts.

"Article X regulates the powers of the committee of the States to sit in the recess of Congress.

"Article XI provides for the admission of Canada into the Confederation.

"Article XII pledges the faith of the United States for the payment of all bills of credit issued and money borrowed on their account.

"Article XIII. Every State shall abide by the determination of the United States on all questions submitted to them by the Confederation, the Articles of the Confederation to be perpetual and not to be altered without the consent of every State.

"This bond of union was soon found to be utterly incompetent to the purposes intended by it. It was defective in its powers; it was defective also in the means of executing the powers actually granted by it. Being a league of sovereign and independent States, its acts, like those of all other leagues, required the interposition of the States composing it to give them effect within their respective jurisdictions. The acts of Congress without the aid of State laws to enforce them were altogether nugatory. The refusal or omission of one State to pass such laws was urged as a reason to justify like conduct in others, and thus the Government was soon at a stand.

"The experience of a few years demonstrated that the Confederation could not be relied on for the security of the blessings which had been derived from the Revolution. The interests of the Nation required a more efficient Government, which the good sense and virtue of the people provided by the adoption of the present Constitution.

"The Constitution of the United States was formed by a convention of delegates from the several States, who met in Philadelphia, duly authorized for the purpose, and it was ratified by a convention in each State which was especially called to consider and decide on the same. In this progress the State governments were never suspended in their functions. On the contrary, they took the lead in it. Conscious of their incompetency to secure to the Union the blessings of the Revolution, they promoted the diminution of their own powers and the enlargement of those of the General Government in the way in which they might be most adequate and efficient. It is believed that no other example can be found of a Government exerting its influence to lessen its own powers, of a policy so enlightened, of a patriotism so pure and disinterested. The credit, however, is more especially due to the people of each State, in obedience to whose will and under whose control the State governments acted.

"The Constitution of the United States, being ratified by the people of the several States, became of necessity to the extent of its powers the paramount authority of the Union. On sound principles it can be viewed in no other light. The people, the highest authority known to our system, from whom all our institutions spring and on whom they depend, form it. Had the people of the several States thought proper to incorporate themselves into one community, under one government, they might have done it. They had the power, and there was nothing then, nor is there anything now, should they be so disposed, to prevent it. They wisely stopped, however, at a certain point, extending the incorporation to that point, making the National Government thus far a consolidated Government, and preserving the State governments without that limit perfectly sovereign and independent of the National Government. Had the people of the several States incorporated themselves into one community, they must have remained such, their Constitution becoming then, like the constitution of the several States, incapable of change until altered by the will of the majority. In the institution of a State government by the citizens of a State a compact is formed to which all and every citizen are equal parties. They are also the sole parties and may amend it at pleasure. In the institution of the Government of the United States by the citizens of every State a compact was formed between the whole American people which had the same force and partakes of all the qualities to the extent of its powers as a compact between the citizens of a State in the formation of their own constitution. It can not be altered except by those who formed it or in the mode prescribed by the parties to the compact itself.

"This Constitution was adopted for the purpose of remedying all defects of the Confederation, and in this it has succeeded beyond any calculation that could have been formed of any human institution. By binding the States together the Constitution performs the great office of the Confederation; but it is in that sense only that it has any of the properties of that compact, and in that it is more effectual to the purpose, as it holds them together by a much stronger bond; and in all other respects in which the Confederation failed the Constitution has been blessed with complete success. The Confederation was a compact between separate and independent States, the execution of whose articles in the powers which operated internally depended on the State governments. But the great office of the Constitution, by incorporating the people of the several States to the extent of its powers into one community and enabling it to act directly on the people, was to annul the powers of the State governments to that extent, except in cases where they were concurrent, and to preclude their agency in giving effect to those of the General Government. The Government of the United States relies on its own means for the execution of its powers, as the State governments do for the execution of theirs, both governments having a common origin or sovereign, the people—the State governments the people of each State, the National Government the people of every State—and being amenable to the power which created it. It is by executing its functions as a Government thus originating and thus acting that the Constitution of the United States holds the States together and performs the office of a league. It is owing to the nature of its powers and the high source from whence they are derived—the people—that it performs that office better than the Confederation or any league which ever existed, being a compact which the State governments did not form, to which they are not parties, and which executes its own powers independently of them.

"There were two separate and independent governments established over our Union, one for local purposes over each State by the people of the State, the other for national purposes over all the States by the people of the United States. The whole power of the people, on the representative principle, is divided between them. The State governments are independent of each other, and to the extent of their powers are complete sovereignties. The National Government begins where the State governments terminate, except in some instances where there is a concurrent jurisdiction between them. This Government is also, according to the extent of its powers, a complete sovereignty. I speak here, as repeatedly mentioned before, altogether of representative sovereignties, for the real sovereignty is in the people alone.

"The history of the world affords no such example of two separate and independent governments established over the same people, nor can it exist except in governments founded on the sovereignty of the people. In monarchies and other governments not representative there can be no such division of power. The government is inherent in the possessor; it is his, and can not be taken from him without a revolution. In such governments alliances and leagues alone are practicable. But with us individuals count for nothing in the offices which they hold; that is, they have no right to them. They hold them as representatives, by appointment from the people, in whom the sovereignty is exclusively vested. It is impossible to speak too highly of this system, taken in its twofold character and in all its great principles of two governments, completely distinct from and independent of each other, each constitutional, founded by and acting directly on the people, each competent to all its purposes, administering all the blessings for which it was instituted, without even the most remote danger of exercising any of its powers in a way to oppress the people. A system capable of expansion over a vast territory not only without weakening either government, but enjoying the peculiar advantage of adding thereby new strength and vigor to the faculties of both; possessing also this additional advantage, that while the several States enjoy all the rights reserved to them of separate and independent governments, and each is secured by the nature of the Federal Government, which acts directly on the people, against the failure of the others to bear their equal share of the public burdens, and thereby enjoys in a more perfect degree all the advantages of a league, it holds them together by a bond altogether different and much stronger than the late Confederation or any league that was ever known before—a bond beyond their control, and which can not even be amended except in the mode prescribed by it. So great an effort in favor of human happiness was never made before; but it became those who made it. Established in the new hemisphere, descended from the same ancestors, speaking the same language, having the same religion and universal toleration, born equal and educated in the same principles of free government, made independent by a common struggle and menaced by the same dangers, ties existed between them which never applied before to separate communities. They had every motive to bind them together which could operate on the interests and affections of a generous, enlightened, and virtuous people, and it affords inexpressible consolation to find that these motives had their merited influence.

"In thus tracing our institutions to their origin and pursuing them in their progress and modifications down to the adoption of this Constitution two important facts have been disclosed, on which it may not be improper in this stage to make a few observations. The first is that in wresting the power, or what is called the sovereignty, from the Crown it passed directly to the people. The second that it passed directly to the people of each Colony and not to the people of all the Colonies in the aggregate; to 13 distinct communities and not to 1. To these two facts, each contributing its equal proportion, I am inclined to think that we are in an eminent degree indebted for the success of our Revolution. By passing to the people it vested in a community every individual of which had equal rights and a common interest. There was no family dethroned among us, no banished pretender in a foreign country looking back to his connections and adherents here in the hope of a recall; no order of nobility whose hereditary rights in the Government had been violated; no hierarchy which had been degraded and oppressed. There was but one order, that of the people, by whom everything was gained by the change. I mention it also as a circumstance of peculiar felicity that the great body of the people had been born and educated under these equal and original institutions. Their habits, their principles, and their prejudices were therefore all on the side of the Revolution and of free republican government.

"Had distinct orders existed our fortune might and probably would have been different. It would scarcely have been possible to have united so completely the whole force of the country against a common enemy. A contest would probably have arisen in the outset between the orders for the control. Had the aristocracy prevailed, the people would have been heartless. Had the people prevailed, the nobility would probably have left the country, or, remaining behind, internal divisions would have taken place in every State and a civil war broken out more destructive even than the foreign, which might have defeated the whole movement. Ancient and modern history is replete with examples proceeding from conflicts between distinct orders, of revolutions attempted which proved abortive, of republics which have terminated in despotism. It is owing to the simplicity of the elements of which our system is composed that the attraction of all the parts has been to a common center, that every change has tended to cement the union, and, in short, that we have been blessed with such glorious and happy success.

"And that the power wrested from the British Crown passed to the people of each Colony the whole history of our political movement from the emigration of our ancestors to the present day clearly demonstrates. What produced the Revolution? The violation of our rights. What rights? Our chartered rights. To whom were the charters granted, to the people of each Colony or to the people of all the Colonies as a single community? We know that no such community as the aggregate existed, and, of course, that no such rights could be violated. It may be added that the nature of the powers which were given to the delegates by each Colony and the manner in which they were executed show that the sovereignty was in the people of each and not in the aggregate. They respectively presented credentials such as are usual between ministers of separate powers, which were examined and approved before they entered on the discharge of the important duties committed to them. They voted also by Colonies and not individually, all the members from one Colony being entitled to one vote only. This fact alone, the first of our political association and at the period of our greatest peril, fixes beyond all controversy the source from whence the power which has directed and secured success to all our measures has proceeded.

"Had the sovereignty passed to the aggregate, consequences might have ensued, admitting the success of our Revolution, which might even yet seriously affect our system. By passing to the people of each Colony the opposition to Great Britain, the prosecution of the war, the Declaration of Independence, the adoption of the Confederation, and of this Constitution are all imputable to them. Had it passed to the aggregate, every measure would be traced to that source; even the State governments might be said to have emanated from it, and amendments of their constitutions on that principle be proposed by the same authority. In short, it is not easy to perceive all the consequences into which such a doctrine might lead. It is obvious that the people in mass would have had much less agency in all the great measures of the Revolution and in those which followed than they actually had, and proportionably less credit for their patriotism and services than they are now entitled to and enjoy. By passing to the people of each Colony the whole body in each were kept in constant and active deliberation on subjects of the highest national importance and in the supervision of the conduct of all the public servants in the discharge of their respective duties. Thus the most effectual guards were provided against abuses and dangers of every kind which human ingenuity could devise, and the whole people rendered more competent to the self-government which by an heroic exertion they had acquired.

"I will now proceed to examine the powers of the General Government, which, like the governments of the several States, is divided into three branches—a legislative, executive, and judiciary—each having its appropriate share. Of these the legislative, from the nature of its powers, all laws proceeding from it, and the manner of its appointment, its members being elected immediately by the people, is by far the most important. The whole system of the National Government may be said to rest essentially on the powers granted to this branch. They mark the limit within which, with few exceptions, all the branches must move in the discharge of their respective functions. It will be proper, therefore, to take a full and correct view of the powers granted to it.

"By the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution it is declared that Congress shall have power—

"First. To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts, and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States;

"Second. To borrow money;

"Third. To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;

"Fourth. To establish an uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws respecting bankruptcies;

"Fifth. To coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures;

"Sixth. To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States;

"Seventh. To establish post offices and post roads;

"Eighth. To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries;

"Ninth. To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, to define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offenses against the laws of nations;

"Tenth. To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;

"Eleventh. To raise and support armies;

"Twelfth. To provide and maintain a navy;

"Thirteenth. To make rules for the government of the land and naval forces;

"Fourteenth. To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions;

"Fifteenth. To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be in the service of the United States, reserving to the States the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

"Sixteenth. To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by the cession of particular States and the acceptance by Congress, become the seat of government of the United States; and to exercise like authority over all places purchased, by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same may be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings;

"Seventeenth. And to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

"To the other branches of the Government the powers properly belonging to each are granted. The President, in whom the executive power is vested, is made Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and militia, when called into the service of the United States. He is authorized, with the advice and consent of the Senate, two-thirds of the Members present concurring, to form treaties, to nominate and, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers whose appointments are not otherwise provided for by law. He has power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment. It is made his duty to give to Congress from time to time information of the state of the Union, to recommend to their consideration such measures as he may judge necessary and expedient, to convene both Houses on extraordinary occasions, to receive ambassadors, and to take care that the laws be faithfully executed.

"The judicial power is vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as Congress may establish; and it is made to extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made under their authority. Cases affecting ambassadors and other public characters, cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, causes in which the United States are a party, between two or more States, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming grants of land under different States, between a State or the citizens thereof and foreign States, are specially assigned to these tribunals.

"Other powers have been granted in other parts of the Constitution which, although they relate to specific objects unconnected with the ordinary administration, yet, as they form important features in the Government and may shed useful light on the construction which ought to be given to the powers above enumerated, it is proper to bring into view.

"By Article I, section 9, clause 1, it is provided that the migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by Congress prior to the year 1808, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation not exceeding $10 for each person.

"By Article III, section 3, clause 1, new States may be admitted by Congress into the Union, but that no new State shall be formed within the jurisdiction of another State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the United States. And by the next clause of the same article and section power is vested in Congress to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States, with a proviso that nothing in the Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

"By Article IV, section 4, the United States guarantee to every State a republican form of government and engage to protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature, or of the executive when the legislature can not be convened, against domestic violence.

"Of the other parts of the Constitution relating to power, some form restraints on the exercise of the powers granted to Congress and others on the exercise of the powers remaining to the States. The object in both instances is to draw more completely the line between the two governments and also to prevent abuses by either. Other parts operate like conventional stipulations between the States, abolishing between them all distinctions applicable to foreign powers and securing to the inhabitants of each State all the rights and immunities of citizens in the several States.

"By the fifth article it is provided that Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case shall be valid as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode may be proposed by Congress: Provided, That no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal vote in the Senate, and that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article.

"By the second section of the sixth article it is declared that the Constitution, and laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and that the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. This right in the National Government to execute its powers was indispensable to its existence. If the State governments had not been restrained from encroaching on the powers vested in the National Government, the Constitution, like the Confederation, would soon have been set at naught; and it was not within the limit of the human mind to devise any plan for the accomplishment of the object other than by making a national constitution which should be to the extent of its powers the supreme law of the land. This right in the National Government would have existed under the Constitution to the full extent provided for by this declaration had it not been made. To prevent the possibility of a doubt, however, on so important a subject it was proper to make the declaration.

"Having presented above a full view of all the powers granted to the United States, it will be proper to look to those remaining to the States. It is by fixing the great powers which are admitted to belong to each government that we may hope to come to a right conclusion respecting those in controversy between them. In regard to the National Government this task was easy, because its powers were to be found in specific grants in the Constitution; but it is more difficult to give a detail of the powers of the State governments, as their constitutions, containing all powers granted by the people not specifically taken from them by grants to the United States, can not well be enumerated. Fortunately a precise detail of all the powers remaining to the State governments is not necessary in the present instance. A knowledge of their great powers only will answer every purpose contemplated, and respecting these there can be no diversity in opinion. They are sufficiently recognized and established by the Constitution of the United States itself.

"In designating the important powers of the State governments it is proper to observe, first, that the territory contemplated by the Constitution belongs to each State in its separate character and not to the United States in their aggregate character. Each State holds territory according to its original charter, except in cases where cessions have been made to the United States by individual States. The United States had none when the Constitution was adopted which had not been thus ceded to them and which they held on the conditions on which such cession had been made. Within the individual States it is believed that they held not a single acre; but if they did it was as citizens held it, merely as private property. The territory acquired by cession lying without the individual States rests on a different principle and is provided for by a separate and distinct part of the Constitution. It is the territory within the individual States to which the Constitution in its great principles applies, and it applies to such territory as the territory of a State and not as that of the United States. The next circumstance to be attended to is that the people composing this Union are the people of the several States, and not of the United States in the full sense of a consolidated government. The militia are the militia of the several States; lands are held under the laws of the States; descents, contracts, and all the concerns of private property, the administration of justice, and the whole criminal code, except in the cases of breaches of the laws of the United States made under and in conformity with the powers vested in Congress and of the laws of nations, are regulated by State laws. This enumeration shows the great extent of the powers of the State governments. The territory and the people form the basis on which all governments are founded. The militia constitutes their effective force. The regulation and protection of property and of personal liberty are also among the highest attributes of sovereignty. This, without other evidence, is sufficient to show that the great office of the Constitution of the United States is to unite the States together under a Government endowed with powers adequate to the purposes of its institution, relating, directly or indirectly, to foreign concerns, to the discharge of which a National Government thus formed alone could be competent.

"This view of the exclusive jurisdiction of the several States over the territory within their respective limits, except in cases otherwise specially provided for, is supported by the obvious intent of the several powers granted to Congress, to which a more particular attention is now due. Of these the right to declare war is perhaps the most important, as well by the consequences attending war as by the other powers granted in aid of it. The right to lay taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, though necessary for the support of the civil government, is equally necessary to sustain the charges of war; the right to raise and support armies and a navy and to call forth and govern the militia when in the service of the United States are altogether of the latter kind. They are granted in aid of the power to make war and intended to give effect to it. These several powers are of great force and extent and operate more directly within the limits and upon the resources of the States than any of the other powers. But still they are means only for given ends. War is declared and must be maintained, an army and a navy must be raised, fortifications must be erected for the common defense, debts must be paid. For these purposes duties, imposts, and excises are levied, taxes are laid, the lands, merchandise, and other property of the citizens are liable for them; if the money is not paid seizures are made and the lands are sold. The transaction is terminated; the lands pass into other hands, who hold them, as the former proprietors did, under the laws of the individual States. They were means only to certain ends; the United States have nothing further to do with them. The same view is applicable to the power of the General Government over persons. The militia is called into the service of the United States; the service is performed; the corps returns to the State to which it belongs; it is the militia of such State, and not of the United States. Soldiers are required for the Army, who may be obtained by voluntary enlistment or by some other process founded in the principles of equality. In either case the citizen, after the tour of duty is performed, is restored to his former station in society, with his equal share in the common sovereignty of the Nation. In all these cases, which are the strongest which can be given, we see that the right of the General Government is nothing more than what it is called in the Constitution, a power to perform certain acts, and that the subject on which it operates is a means only to that end; that it was both before and after that act under the protection and subject to the laws of the individual State within which it was.

"To the other powers of the General Government the same remarks are applicable and with greater force. The right to regulate commerce with foreign powers was necessary as well to enable Congress to lay and collect duties and imposts as to support the rights of the Nation in the intercourse with foreign powers. It is executed at the ports of the several States and operates almost altogether externally. The right to borrow and coin money and to fix its value and that of foreign coin are important to the establishment of a National Government, and particularly necessary in support of the right to declare war, as, indeed, may be considered the right to punish piracy and felonies on the high seas and offenses against the laws of nations. The right to establish an uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws respecting bankruptcies seems to be essentially connected with the right to regulate commerce. The first branch of it relates to foreigners entering the country; the second, to merchants who have failed. The right to promote the progress of useful arts and sciences may be executed without touching any of the individual States. It is accomplished by granting patents to inventors and preserving models, which may be done exclusively within the Federal district. The right to constitute courts inferior to the Supreme Court was a necessary consequence of the judiciary existing as a separate branch of the General Government. Without such inferior court in every State it would be difficult and might even be impossible to carry into effect the laws of the General Government. The right to establish post offices and post roads is essentially of the same character. For political, commercial, and social purposes it was important that it should be vested in the General Government. As a mere matter of regulation, and nothing more, I presume, was intended by it, it is a power easily executed and involving little authority within the States individually. The right to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over the Federal district and over forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings with the consent of the State within which the same may be is a power of a peculiar character, and is sufficient in itself to confirm what has been said of all the other powers of the General Government. Of this particular grant further notice will hereafter be taken.

"I shall conclude my remarks on this part of the subject by observing that the view which has been presented of the powers and character of the two Governments is supported by the marked difference which is observable in the manner of their endowment. The State governments are divided into three branches—a legislative, executive, and judiciary—and the appropriate duties of each assigned to it without any limitation of power except such as is necessary to guard against abuse, in the form of bills of right. But in instituting the National Government an entirely different principle was adopted and pursued. The Government itself is organized, like the State governments, into three branches, but its powers are enumerated and defined in the most precise form. The subject has already been too fully explained to require illustration by a general view of the whole Constitution, every part of which affords proof of what is here advanced. It will be sufficient to advert to the eighth section of the first article, being that more particularly which defines the powers and fixes the character of the Government of the United States. By this section it is declared that Congress shall have power, first, to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, etc.

"Having shown the origin of the State governments and their endowments when first formed; having also shown the origin of the National Government and the powers vested in it, and having shown, lastly, the powers which are admitted to have remained to the State governments after those which were taken from them by the National Government, I will now proceed to examine whether the power to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement by roads and canals has been vested in the United States.

"Before we can determine whether this power has been granted to the General Government it will be necessary to ascertain distinctly the nature and extent of the power requisite to make such improvements. When that is done we shall be able to decide whether such power is vested in the National Government.

"If the power existed it would, it is presumed, be executed by a board of skillful engineers, on a view of the whole Union, on a plan which would secure complete effect to all the great purposes of our Constitution. It is not my intention, however, to take up the subject here on this scale. I shall state a case for the purpose of illustration only. Let it be supposed that Congress intended to run a road from the city of Washington to Baltimore and to connect the Chesapeake Bay with the Delaware and the Delaware with the Raritan by a canal, what must be done to carry the project into effect? I make here no question of the existing power. I speak only of the power necessary for the purpose. Commissioners would be appointed to trace a route in the most direct line, paying due regard to heights, water courses, and other obstacles, and to acquire the right to the ground over which the road and canal would pass, with sufficient breadth for each. This must be done by voluntary grants, or by purchases from individuals, or, in case they would not sell or should ask an exorbitant price, by condemning the property and fixing its value by a jury of the vicinage. The next object to be attended to after the road and canal are laid out and made is to keep them in repair. We know that there are people in every community capable of committing voluntary injuries, of pulling down walls that are made to sustain the road, of breaking the bridges over water courses and breaking the road itself. Some living near it might be disappointed that it did not pass through their lands and commit these acts of violence and waste from revenge or in the hope of giving it that direction, though for a short time. Injuries of this kind have been committed and are still complained of on the road from Cumberland to the Ohio. To accomplish this object Congress should have a right to pass laws to punish offenders wherever they may be found. Jurisdiction over the road would not be sufficient, though it were exclusive. It would seldom happen that the parties would be detected in the act. They would generally commit it in the night and fly far off before the sun appeared. The power to punish these culprits must therefore reach them wherever they go. The must also be amenable to competent tribunals, Federal or State. The power must likewise extend to another object not less essential or important than those already mentioned. Experience has shown that the establishment of turnpikes, with gates and tolls and persons to collect the tolls, is the best expedient that can be adopted to defray the expense of these improvements and the repairs which they necessarily require. Congress must therefore have power to make such an establishment and to support it by such regulations, with fines and penalties in the case of injuries, as may be competent to the purpose. The right must extend to all those objects, or it will be utterly incompetent. It is possessed and exercised by the States individually, and it must be possessed by the United States or the pretension must be abandoned.

"Let it be further supposed that Congress, believing that they do possess the power, have passed an act for those purposes, under which commissioners have been appointed, who have begun the work. They are met at the first farm on which they enter by the owner, who forbids them to trespass on his land. They offer to buy it at a fair price or at twice or thrice its value. He persists in his refusal. Can they, on the principle recognized and acted on by all the State governments that in cases of this kind the obstinacy and perverseness of an individual must yield to the public welfare, summon a jury of upright and discreet men to condemn the land, value it, and compel the owner to receive the amount and to deliver it up to them? I believe that very few would concur in the opinion that such a power exists.

"The next object is to preserve these improvements from injury. The locks of the canal are broken, the walls which sustained the road are pulled down, the bridges are broken, the road itself is plowed up, toll is refused to be paid, the gates of the canal or turnpike are forced. The offenders are pursued, caught, and brought to trial. Can they be punished? The question of right must be decided on principle. The culprits will avail themselves of every barrier that may serve to screen them from punishment. They will plead that the law under which they stand arraigned is unconstitutional, and that question must be decided by the court, whether Federal or State, on a fair investigation of the powers vested in the General Government by the Constitution. If the judges find that these powers have not been granted to Congress, the prisoners must be acquitted, and by their acquittal all claim to the right to establish such a system is at an end.

"I have supposed an opposition to be made to the right in Congress by the owner of the land and other individuals charged with breaches of laws made to protect the works from injury, because it is the mildest form in which it can present itself. It is not, however, the only one. A State, also, may contest the right, and then the controversy assumes another character. Government might contend against government, for to a certain extent both the Governments are sovereign and independent of each other, and in that form it is possible, though not probable, that opposition might be made. To each limitations are prescribed, and should a contest rise between them respecting their rights and the people sustain it with anything like an equal division of numbers the worst consequences might ensue.

"It may be urged that the opposition suggested by the owner of the land or by the States individually may be avoided by a satisfactory arrangement with the parties. But a suppression of opposition in that way is no proof of a right in Congress, nor could it, if confined to that limit, remove all the impediments to the exercise of the power. It is not sufficient that Congress may by the command and application of the public revenue purchase the soil, and thus silence that class of individuals, or by the accommodation afforded to individual States put down opposition on their part. Congress must be able rightfully to control all opposition or they can not carry the system into effect. Cases would inevitably occur to put the right to the test. The work must be preserved from injury, tolls must be collected, offenders must be punished. With these culprits no bargain can be made. When brought to trial they must deny the validity of the law, and that plea being sustained all claim to the right ceases.

"If the United States possess this power, it must be either because it has been specifically granted or that it is incidental and necessary to carry into effect some specific grant. The advocates for the power derive it from the following sources: First, the right to establish post offices and post roads; second, to declare war; third, to regulate commerce among the several States; fourth, from the power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; fifth, from the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof; sixth and lastly, from the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States. It is to be observed that there is but little accord among the advocates for this power as to the particular source from whence it is derived. They all agree, however, in ascribing it to some one or more of those above mentioned. I will examine the ground of the claim in each instance.

"The first of these grants is in the following words: 'Congress shall have power to establish post offices and post roads.' What is the just import of these words and the extent of the grant? The word 'establish' is the ruling term; 'post offices and post roads' are the subjects on which it acts. The question therefore is, What power is granted by that word? The sense in which words are commonly used is that in which they are to be understood in all transactions between public bodies and individuals. The intention of the parties is to prevail, and there is no better way of ascertaining it than by giving to the terms used their ordinary import. If we were to ask any number of our most enlightened citizens, who had no connection with public affairs and whose minds were unprejudiced, what was the import of the word 'establish' and the extent of the grant which it controls, we do not think there would be any difference of opinion among them. We are satisfied that all of them would answer that a power was thereby given to Congress to fix on the towns, courthouses, and other places throughout our Union at which there should be post offices, the routes by which the mails should be carried from one post office to another, so as to diffuse intelligence as extensively and to make the institution as useful as possible, to fix the postage to be paid on every letter and packet thus carried, to support the establishment, and to protect the post office and mails from robbery by punishing those who should commit the offense. The idea of a right to lay off the roads of the United States on a general scale of improvement, to take the soil from the proprietor by force, to establish turnpikes and tolls, and to punish offenders in the manner stated above would never occur to any such person. The use of the existing road by the stage, mail carrier, or post boy in passing over it as others do is all that would be thought of, the jurisdiction and soil remaining to the State, with a right in the State or those authorized by its legislature to change the road at pleasure.

"The intention of the parties is supported by other proof, which ought to place it beyond all doubt. In the former act of Government, the Confederation, we find a grant for the same purpose expressed in the following words: 'The United States in Congress assembled shall have the sole and exclusive right and power of establishing and regulating post offices from one State to another throughout all the United States, and exacting such postage on the papers passing through the same as may be requisite to defray the expenses of the said office.' The term 'establish' was likewise the ruling one in that instrument, and was evidently intended and understood to give a power simply and solely to fix where there should be post offices. By transferring this term from the Confederation into the Constitution it was doubtless intended that it should be understood in the same sense in the latter that it was in the former instrument, and to be applied alike to post offices and post roads. In whatever sense it is applied to post offices it must be applied in the same sense to post roads. But it may be asked, If such was the intention, why were not all the other terms of the grant transferred with it? The reason is obvious. The Confederation being a bond of union between independent States, it was necessary in granting the powers which were to be exercised over them to be very explicit and minute in defining the powers granted. But the Constitution to the extent of its powers having incorporated the States into one Government like the government of the States individually, fewer words in defining the powers granted by it were not only adequate, but perhaps better adapted to the purpose. We find that brevity is a characteristic of the instrument. Had it been intended to convey a more enlarged power in the Constitution than had been granted in the Confederation, surely the same controlling term would not have been used, or other words would have been added, to show such intention and to mark the extent to which the power should be carried. It is a liberal construction of the powers granted in the Constitution by this term to include in it all the powers that were granted in the Confederation by terms which specifically defined and, as was supposed, extended their limits. It would be absurd to say that by omitting from the Constitution any portion of the phraseology which was deemed important in the Confederation the import of that term was enlarged, and with it the powers of the Constitution, in a proportional degree, beyond what they were in the Confederation. The right to exact postage and to protect the post offices and mails from robbery by punishing the offenders may fairly be considered as incidents to the grant, since without it the object of the grant might be defeated. Whatever is absolutely necessary to the accomplishment of the object of the grant, though not specified, may fairly be considered as included in it. Beyond this the doctrine of incidental power can not be carried.

"If we go back to the origin of our settlements and institutions and trace their progress down to the Revolution, we shall see that it was in this sense, and in none other, that the power was exercised by all our colonial governments. Post offices were made for the country, and not the country for them. They are the offspring of improvement; they never go before it. Settlements are first made, after which the progress is uniform and simple, extending to objects in regular order most necessary to the comfort of man—schools, places of public worship, courthouses, and markets; post offices follow. Roads may, indeed, be said to be coeval with settlements; they lead to all the places mentioned, and to every other which the various and complicated interests of society require.

"It is believed that not one example can be given, from the first settlement of our country to the adoption of this Constitution, of a post office being established without a view to existing roads or of a single road having been made by pavement, turnpike, etc., for the sole purpose of accommodating a post office. Such, too, is the uniform progress of all societies. In granting, then, this power to the United States it was undoubtedly intended by the framers and ratifiers of the Constitution to convey it in the sense and extent only in which it had been understood and exercised by the previous authorities of the country.

"This conclusion is confirmed by the object of the grant and the manner of its execution. The object is the transportaton of the mail throughout the United States, which may be done on horseback, and was so done until lately, since the establishment of stages. Between the great towns and in other places where the population is dense stages are preferred because they afford an additional opportunity to make a profit from passengers; but where the population is sparse and on crossroads it is generally carried on horseback. Unconnected with passengers and other objects, it can not be doubted that the mail itself may be carried in every part of our Union with nearly as much economy and greater dispatch on horseback than in a stage, and in many parts with much greater. In every part of the Union in which stages can be preferred the roads are sufficiently good provided those which serve for every other purpose will accommodate them. In every other part where horses alone are used if other people pass them on horseback surely the mail carrier can. For an object so simple and so easy in its execution it would doubtless excite surprise if it should be thought proper to appoint commissioners to lay off the country on a great scheme of improvement, with the power to shorten distances, reduce heights, level mountains, and pave surfaces.

"If the United States possessed the power contended for under this grant, might they not in adopting the roads of the individual States for the carriage of the mail, as has been done, assume jurisdiction over them and preclude a right to interfere with or alter them? Might they not establish turnpikes and exercise all the other acts of sovereignty above stated over such roads necessary to protect them from injury and defray the expense of repairing them? Surely if the right exists these consequences necessarily followed as soon as the road was established. The absurdity of such a pretension must be apparent to all who examine it. In this way a large portion of the territory of every State might be taken from it, for there is scarcely a road in any State which will not be used for the transportation of the mail. A new field for legislation and internal government would thus be opened.

"From this view of the subject I think we may fairly conclude that the right to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement, or any part of it, has not been granted to Congress under the power to establish post offices and post roads; that the common roads of the country only were contemplated by that grant, and are fully competent to all its purposes.

"The next object of inquiry is whether the right to declare war includes the right to adopt and execute this system of improvement. The objections to it are, I presume, not less conclusive than those which are applicable to the grant which we have just examined.

"Under the last-mentioned grant a claim has been set up to as much of that system as relates to roads. Under this it extends alike to roads and canals.

"We must examine this grant by the same rules of construction that were applied to the preceding one. The object was to take this power from the individual States and to vest it in the General Government. This has been done in clear and explicit terms, first by granting the power to Congress, and secondly by prohibiting the exercise of it by the States. 'Congress shall have a right to declare war.' This is the language of the grant. If the right to adopt and execute this system of improvement is included in it, it must be by way of incident only, since there is nothing in the grant itself which bears any relation to roads and canals. The following considerations, it is presumed, prove incontestably that this power has not been granted in that or any other manner.

"The United States are exposed to invasion through the whole extent of their Atlantic coast by any European power with whom we might be engaged in war—on the northern and northwestern frontier, on the side of Canada, by Great Britain, and on the southern by Spain or any power in alliance with her. If internal improvements are to be carried to the full extent to which they may be useful for military purposes, the power as it exists must apply to all the roads of the Union, there being no limitation to it. Wherever such improvements may facilitate the march of troops, the transportation of cannon, or otherwise aid the operations or mitigate the calamities of war along the coast or in any part of the interior they would be useful for military purposes, and might therefore be made. The power following as an incident to another power can be measured as to its extent by reference only to the obvious extent of the power to which it is incidental. So great a scope was, it is believed, never given to incidental power.

"If it had been intended that the right to declare war should include all the powers necessary to maintain war, it would follow that nothing would have been done to impair the right or to restrain Congress from the exercise of any power which the exigencies of war might require. The nature and extent of this exigency would mark the extent of the power granted, which should always be construed liberally, so as to be adequate to the end. A right to raise money by taxes, duties, excises, and by loan; to raise and support armies and a navy; to provide for calling forth, arming, disciplining, and governing the militia when in the service of the United States, establishing fortifications and governing the troops stationed in them independently of the State authorities; and to perform many other acts, is indispensable to the maintenance of war. No war with any great power can be prosecuted with success without the command of the resources of the Union in all these respects. These powers, then, would of necessity and by common consent have fallen within the right to declare war had it been intended to convey by way of incident to that right the necessary powers to maintain war. But these powers have all been granted specifically with many others, in great detail, which experience had shown were necessary for the purposes of war. By specifically granting, then, these powers it is manifest that every power was thus granted which it was intended to grant for military purposes, and that it was also intended that no important power should be included in this grant by way of incident, however useful it might be for some of the purposes of the grant.

"By the sixteenth of the enumerated powers, Article I, section 8, Congress are authorized to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatever over such district as may by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, not exceeding 10 miles square, become the seat of Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other useful buildings. If any doubt existed on a view of other parts of the Constitution respecting the decision which ought to be formed on the question under consideration, I should suppose that this clause would completely remove it. It has been shown after the most liberal construction of all the enumerated powers of the General Government that the territory within the limits of the respective States belonged to them; that the United States had no right under the powers granted to them, with the exception specified in this grant, to even the smallest portion of territory within a State, all those powers operating on a different principle and having their full effect without impairing in the slightest degree this right in the States; that those powers were in every instance means to ends, which being accomplished left the subject—that is, the property, in which light only land could be regarded—where it was before, under the jurisdiction and subject to the laws of the State governments.

"The second number of the clause, which is applicable to military and naval purposes alone, claims particular attention here. It fully confirms the view taken of the other enumerated powers, for had it been intended to include in the right to declare war, by way of incident, any right of jurisdiction or legislation over territory within a State, it would have been done as to fortifications, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings. By specifically granting the right as to such small portions of territory as might be necessary for these purposes and on certain conditions, minutely and well defined, it is manifest that it was not intended to grant it as to any other portion on any condition for any purpose or in any manner whatsoever.

"It may be said that, although the authority to exercise exclusive legislation in certain cases within the States with their consent may be considered as a prohibition to Congress to exercise like exclusive legislation in any other case, although their consent should be granted, it does not prohibit the exercise of such jurisdiction or power within a State as would be competent to all the purposes of internal improvement. I can conceive no ground on which the idea of such a power over any part of the territory of a State can be inferred from the power to declare war. There never can be an occasion for jurisdiction for military purposes except in fortifications, dockyards, and the like places. If the soldiers are in the field or are quartered in garrisons without the fortifications, the civil authority must prevail where they are. The government of the troops by martial law is not affected by it. In war, when the forces are increased and the movement is on a greater scale, consequences follow which are inseparable from the exigencies of the State. More freedom of action and a wider range of power in the military commanders, to be exercised on their own responsibility, may be necessary to the public safety; but even here the civil authority of the State never ceases to operate. It is also exclusive for all civil purposes.

"Whether any power short of that stated would be adequate to the purposes of internal improvement is denied. In the case of territory, one Government must prevail for all the purposes intended by the grant. The jurisdiction of the United States might be modified in such manner as to admit that of the State in all cases and for all purposes not necessary to the execution of the proposed power; but the right of the General Government must be complete for all the purposes above stated. It must extend to the seizure and condemnation of the property, if necessary; to the punishment of offenders for injuries to the roads and canals; to the establishment and enforcement of tolls, etc. It must be a complete right to the extent above stated or it will be of no avail. That right does not exist.

"The reasons which operate in favor of the right of exclusive legislation in forts, dockyards, etc., do not apply to any other places. The safety of such works and of the cities which they are intended to defend, and even of whole communities, may sometimes depend on it. If spies are admitted within them in time of war, they might communicate intelligence to the enemy which might be fatal. All nations surround such works with high walls and keep their gates shut. Even here, however, three important conditions are indispensable to such exclusive legislation: First, the ground must be requisite for and be applied to those purposes; second, it must be purchased; third, it must be purchased by the consent of the State in which it may be. When we find that so much care has been taken to protect the sovereignty of the States over the territory within their respective limits, admitting that of the United States over such small portions and for such special and important purposes only, the conclusion is irresistible not only that the power necessary for internal improvements has not been granted, but that it has been clearly prohibited.

"I come next to the right to regulate commerce, the third source from whence the right to make internal improvements is claimed. It is expressed in the following words: 'Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.' The reasoning applicable to the preceding claims is equally so to this. The mischief complained of was that this power could not be exercised with advantage by the individual States, and the object was to transfer it to the United States. The sense in which the power was understood and exercised by the States was doubtless that in which it was transferred to the United States. The policy was the same as to three branches of this grant, and it is scarcely possible to separate the two first from each other in any view which may be taken of the subject. The last, relating to the Indian tribes, is of a nature distinct from the others for reasons too well known to require explanation. Commerce between independent powers or communities is universally regulated by duties and imposts. It was so regulated by the States before the adoption of this Constitution equally in respect to each other and to foreign powers. The goods and vessels employed in the trade are the only subjects of regulation. It can act on none other. A power, then, to impose such duties and imposts in regard to foreign nations and to prevent any on the trade between the States was the only power granted.

"If we recur to the causes which produced the adoption of this Constitution, we shall find that injuries resulting from the regulation of trade by the States, respectively, and the advantages anticipated from the transfer of the power to Congress were among those which had the most weight. Instead of acting as a nation in regard to foreign powers, the States individually had commenced a system of restraint on each other whereby the interests of foreign powers were promoted at their expense. If one State imposed high duties on the goods or vessels of a foreign power to countervail the regulations of such power, the next adjoining States imposed lighter duties to invite those articles into their ports, that they might be transferred thence into the other States, securing the duties to themselves. This contracted policy in some of the States was soon counteracted by others. Restraints were immediately laid on such commerce by the suffering States, and thus had grown up a state of affairs disorderly and unnatural, the tendency of which was to destroy the Union itself and with it all hope of realizing those blessings which we had anticipated from the glorious Revolution which had been so recently achieved. From this deplorable dilemma, or, rather, certain ruin, we were happily rescued by the adoption of the Constitution.

"Among the first and most important effects of this great Revolution was the complete abolition of this pernicious policy. The States were brought together by the Constitution as to commerce into one community equally in regard to foreign nations and each other. The regulations that were adopted regarded us in both respects as one people. The duties and imposts that were laid on the vessels and merchandise of foreign nations were all uniform throughout the United States, and in the intercourse between the States themselves no duties of any kind were imposed other than between different ports and counties within the same State.

"This view is supported by a series of measures, all of a marked character, preceding the adoption of the Constitution. As early as the year 1781 Congress recommended it to the States to vest in the United States a power to levy a duty of 5 per cent on all goods imported from foreign countries into the United States for the term of 15 years. In 1783 this recommendation, with alterations as to the kind of duties and an extension of this term to 25 years, was repeated and more earnestly urged. In 1784 it was recommended to the States to authorize Congress to prohibit, under certain modifications, the importation of goods from foreign powers into the United States for 15 years. In 1785 the consideration of the subject was resumed, and a proposition presented in a new form, with an address to the States, explaining fully the principles on which a grant of the power to regulate trade was deemed indispensable. In 1786 a meeting took place at Annapolis of delegates from several of the States on this subject, and on their report a convention was formed at Philadelphia the ensuing year from all the States, to whose deliberations we are indebted for the present Constitution.

"In none of these measures was the subject of internal improvement mentioned or even glanced at. Those of 1784, 1785, 1786, and 1787, leading step by step to the adoption of the Constitution, had in view only the obtaining of a power to enable Congress to regulate trade with foreign powers. It is manifest that the regulation of trade with the several States was altogether a secondary object, suggested by and adopted in connection with the other. If the power necessary to this system of improvement is included under either branch of this grant, I should suppose that it was the first rather than the second. The pretension to it, however, under that branch has never been set up. In support of the claim under the second no reason has been assigned which appears to have the least weight.

"The fourth claim is founded on the right of Congress to 'pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare' of the United States. This claim has less reason on its side than either of those which we have already examined. The power of which this forms a part is expressed in the following words: 'Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.'

"That the second part of this grant gives a right to appropriate the public money, and nothing more, is evident from the following considerations: First. If the right of appropriation is not given by this clause, it is not given at all, there being no other grant in the Constitution which gives it directly or which has any bearing on the subject, even by implication, except the two following:

"First, the prohibition, which is contained in the eleventh of the enumerated powers, not to appropriate money for the support of armies for a longer term than two years; and, second, the declaration of the sixth member or clause of the ninth section of the first article that no money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

"Second. This part of the grant has none of the characteristics of a distinct and original power. It is manifestly incidental to the great objects of the first part of the grant, which authorizes Congress to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, a power of vast extent, not granted by the Confederation, the grant of which formed one of the principal inducements to the adoption of this Constitution. If both parts of the grant are taken together (as they must be, for the one follows immediately after the other in the same sentence), it seems to be impossible to give to the latter any other construction than that contended for. Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises. For what purpose? To pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States, an arrangement and phraseology which clearly show that the latter part of the clause was intended to enumerate the purposes to which the money thus raised might be appropriated.

"Third. If this is not the real object and fair construction of the second part of this grant, it follows either that it has no import or operation whatever or one of much greater extent than the first part. This presumption is evidently groundless in both instances. In the first, because no part of the Constitution can be considered useless; no sentence or clause in it without a meaning. In the second, because such a construction as made the second part of the clause an original grant, embracing the same object with the first, but with much greater power than it, would be in the highest degree absurd. The order generally observed in grants, an order founded in common sense, since it promotes a clear understanding of their import, is to grant the power intended to be conveyed in the most full and explicit manner, and then to explain or qualify it, if explanation or qualification should be necessary. This order has, it is believed, been invariably observed in all the grants contained in the Constitution. In the second, because if the clause in question is not construed merely as an authority to appropriate the public money, it must be obvious that it conveys a power of indefinite and unlimited extent; that there would have been no use for the special powers to raise and support armies and a navy, to regulate commerce, to call forth the militia, or even to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises. An unqualified power to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare, as the second part of this clause would be if considered as a distinct and separate grant, would extend to every object in which the public could be interested. A power to provide for the common defense would give to Congress the command of the whole force and of all the resources of the Union; but a right to provide for the general welfare would go much further. It would in effect break down all the barriers between the States and the General Government and consolidate the whole under the latter.

"The powers specifically granted to Congress are what are called the enumerated powers, and are numbered in the order in which they stand, among which that contained in the first clause holds the first place in point of importance. If the power created by the latter part of the clause is considered an original grant, unconnected with and independent of the first, as in that case it must be, then the first part is entirely done away, as are all the other grants in the Constitution, being completely absorbed in the transcendent power granted in the latter part; but if the clause be construed in the sense contended for, then every part has an important meaning and effect; not a line, a word, in it is superfluous. A power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises subjects to the call of Congress every branch of the public revenue, internal and external, and the addition to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare gives the right of applying the money raised—that is, of appropriating it to the purposes specified according to a proper construction of the terms. Hence it follows that it is the first part of the clause only which gives a power which affects in any manner the power remaining to the States, as the power to raise money from the people, whether it be by taxes, duties, imposts, or excises, though concurrent in the States as to taxes and excises, must necessarily do. But the use or application of the money after it is raised is a power altogether of a different character. It imposes no burden on the people, nor can it act on them in a sense to take power from the States or in any sense in which power can be controverted, or become a question between the two Governments. The application of money raised under a lawful power is a right or grant which may be abused. It may be applied partially among the States, or to improper purposes in our foreign and domestic concerns; but still it is a power not felt in the sense of other power, since the only complaint which any State can make of such partiality and abuse is that some other State or States have obtained greater benefit from the application than by a just rule of apportionment they were entitled to. The right of appropriation is therefore from its nature secondary and incidental to the right of raising money, and it was proper to place it in the same grant and the same clause with that right. By finding them, then, in that order we see a new proof of the sense in which the grant was made, corresponding with the view herein taken of it.

"The last part of this grant, which provides that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States, furnishes another strong proof that it was not intended that the second part should constitute a distinct grant in the sense above stated, or convey any other right than that of appropriation. This provision operates exclusively on the power granted in the first part of the clause. It recites three branches of that power—duties, imposts, and excises—those only on which it could operate, the rule by which the fourth—that is, taxes—should be laid being already provided for in another part of the Constitution. The object of this provision is to secure a just equality among the States in the exercise of that power by Congress. By placing it after both the grants—that is, after that to raise and that to appropriate the public money—and making it apply to the first only it shows that it was not intended that the power granted in the second should be paramount to and destroy that granted in the first. It shows also that no such formidable power as that suggested had been granted in the second, or any power against the abuse of which it was thought necessary specially to provide. Surely if it was deemed proper to guard a specific power of limited extent and well-known import against injustice and abuse, it would have been much more so to have guarded against the abuse of a power of such vast extent and so indefinite as would have been granted by the second part of the clause if considered as a distinct and original grant.

"With this construction all the other enumerated grants, and, indeed, all the grants of power contained in the Constitution, have their full operation and effect. They all stand well together, fulfilling the great purposes intended by them. Under it we behold a great scheme, consistent in all its parts, a government instituted for national purposes, vested with adequate powers for those purposes, commencing with the most important of all, that of the revenue, and proceeding in regular order to the others with which it was deemed proper to endow it, all, too, drawn with the utmost circumspection and care. How much more consistent is this construction with the great objects of the institution and with the high character of the enlightened and patriotic citizens who framed it, as well as of those who ratified it, than one which subverts every sound principle and rule of construction and throws everything into confusion.

"I have dwelt thus long on this part of the subject from an earnest desire to fix in a clear and satisfactory manner the import of the second part of this grant, well knowing from the generality of the terms used their tendency to lead into error. I indulge a strong hope that the view herein presented will not be without effect, but will tend to satisfy the unprejudiced and impartial that nothing more was granted by that part than a power to appropriate the public money raised under the other part. To what extent that power may be carried will be the next object of inquiry.

"It is contended on the one side that as the National Government is a government of limited powers it has no right to expend money except in the performance of acts authorized by the other specific grants according to a strict construction of their powers; that this grant in neither of its branches gives to Congress discretionary power of any kind, but is a mere instrument in its hands to carry into effect the powers contained in the other grants. To this construction I was inclined in the more early stage of our Government; but on further reflection and observation my mind has undergone a change, for reasons which I will frankly unfold.

"The grant consists, as heretofore observed, of a twofold power—the first to raise, the second to appropriate, the public money—and the terms used in both instances are general and unqualified. Each branch was obviously drawn with a view to the other, and the import of each tends to illustrate that of the other. The grant to raise money gives a power over every subject from which revenue may be drawn, and is made in the same manner with the grants to declare war, to raise and support armies and a navy, to regulate commerce, to establish post offices and post roads, and with all the other specific grants to the General Government. In the discharge of the powers contained in any of these grants there is no other check than that which is to be found in the great principles of our system, the responsibility of the representative to his constituents. If war, for example, is necessary, and Congress declare it for good cause, their constituents will support them in it. A like support will be given them for the faithful discharge of their duties under any and every other power vested in the United States. It affords to the friends of our free governments the most heartfelt consolation to know—and from the best evidence, our own experience—that in great emergencies the boldest measures, such as form the strongest appeals to the virtue and patriotism of the people, are sure to obtain the most decided approbation. But should the representative act corruptly and betray his trust, or otherwise prove that he was unworthy of the confidence of his constituents, he would be equally sure to lose it and to be removed and otherwise censured, according to his deserts. The power to raise money by taxes, duties, imposts, and excises is alike unqualified, nor do I see any check on the exercise of it other than that which applies to the other powers above recited, the responsibility of the representative to his constituents. Congress know the extent of the public engagements and the sums necessary to meet them; they know how much may be derived from each branch of revenue without pressing it too far; and, paying due regard to the interests of the people, they likewise know which branch ought to be resorted to in the first instance. From the commencement of the Government two branches of this power, duties and imposts, have been in constant operation, the revenue from which has supported the Government in its various branches and met its other ordinary engagements. In great emergencies the other two, taxes and excises, have likewise been resorted to, and neither was the right or the policy ever called in question.

"If we look to the second branch of this power, that which authorizes the appropriation of the money thus raised, we find that it is not less general and unqualified than the power to raise it. More comprehensive terms than to 'pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare' could not have been used. So intimately connected with and dependent on each other are these two branches of power that had either been limited the limitation would have had the like effect on the other. Had the power to raise money been conditional or restricted to special purposes, the appropriation must have corresponded with it, for none but the money raised could be appropriated, nor could it be appropriated to other purposes than those which were permitted. On the other hand, if the right of appropriation had been restricted to certain purposes, it would be useless and improper to raise more than would be adequate to those purposes. It may fairly be inferred these restraints or checks have been carefully and intentionally avoided. The power in each branch is alike broad and unqualified, and each is drawn with peculiar fitness to the other, the latter requiring terms of great extent and force to accommodate the former, which have been adopted, and both placed in the same clause and sentence. Can it be presumed that all these circumstances were so nicely adjusted by mere accident? Is it not more just to conclude that they were the result of due deliberation and design? Had it been intended that Congress should be restricted in the appropriation of the public money to such expenditures as were authorized by a rigid construction of the other specific grants, how easy would it have been to have provided for it by a declaration to that effect. The omission of such declaration is therefore an additional proof that it was not intended that the grant should be so construed.

"It was evidently impossible to have subjected this grant in either branch to such restriction without exposing the Government to very serious embarrassment. How carry it into effect? If the grant had been made in any degree dependent upon the States, the Government would have experienced the fate of the Confederation. Like it, it would have withered and soon perished. Had the Supreme Court been authorized, or should any other tribunal distinct from the Government be authorized, to impose its veto, and to say that more money had been raised under either branch of this power—that is, by taxes, duties, imposts, or excises—than was necessary, that such a tax or duty was useless, that the appropriation to this or that purpose was unconstitutional, the movement might have been suspended and the whole system disorganized. It was impossible to have created a power within the Government or any other power distinct from Congress and the Executive which should control the movement of the Government in this respect and not destroy it. Had it been declared by a clause in the Constitution that the expenditures under this grant should be restricted to the construction which might be given of the other grants, such restraint, though the most innocent, could not have failed to have had an injurious effect on the vital principles of the Government and often on its most important measures. Those who might wish to defeat a measure proposed might construe the power relied on in support of it in a narrow and contracted manner, and in that way fix a precedent inconsistent with the true import of the grant. At other times those who favored a measure might give to the power relied on a forced or strained construction, and, succeeding in the object, fix a precedent in the opposite extreme. Thus it is manifest that if the right of appropriation be confined to that limit, measures may oftentimes be carried or defeated by considerations and motives altogether independent of and unconnected with their merits, and the several powers of Congress receive constructions equally inconsistent with their true import. No such declaration, however, has been made, and from the fair import of the grant, and, indeed, its positive terms, the inference that such was intended seems to be precluded.

"Many considerations of great weight operate in favor of this construction, while I do not perceive any serious objection to it. If it be established, it follows that the words 'to provide for the common defense and general welfare' have a definite, safe, and useful meaning. The idea of their forming an original grant, with unlimited power, superseding every other grant, is abandoned. They will be considered simply as conveying a right of appropriation, a right indispensable to that of raising a revenue and necessary to expenditures under every grant. By it, as already observed, no new power will be taken from the States, the money to be appropriated being raised under a power already granted to Congress. By it, too, the motive for giving a forced or strained construction to any of the other specific grants will in most instances be diminished and in many utterly destroyed. The importance of this consideration can not be too highly estimated, since, in addition to the examples already given, it ought particularly to be recollected that to whatever extent any specified power many be carried the right of jurisdiction goes with it, pursuing it through all its incidents. The very important agency which this grant has in carrying into effect every other grant is a wrong argument in favor of the construction contended for. All the other grants are limited by the nature of the offices which they have severally to perform, each conveying a power to do a certain thing, and that only, whereas this is coextensive with the great scheme of the Government itself. It is the lever which raises and puts the whole machinery in motion and continues the movement. Should either of the other grants fail in consequence of any condition or limitation attached to it or misconstruction of its powers, much injury might follow, but still it would be the failure of one branch of power, of one item in the system only. All the others might move on. But should the right to raise and appropriate the public money be improperly restricted, the whole system might be sensibly affected, if not disorganized. Each of the other grants is limited by the nature of the grant itself; this, by the nature of the Government only. Hence it became necessary that, like the power to declare war, this power should be commensurate with the great scheme of the Government and with all its purposes.

"If, then, the right to raise and appropriate the public money is not restricted to the expenditures under the other specific grants according to a strict construction of their powers, respectively, is there no limitation to it? Have Congress a right to raise and appropriate the money to any and to every purpose according to their will and pleasure? They certainly have not. The Government of the United States is a limited Government, instituted for great national purposes, and for those only. Other interests are committed to the States, whose duty it is to provide for them. Each government should look to the great and essential purposes for which it was instituted and confine itself to those purposes. A State government will rarely, if ever, apply money to national purposes without making it a charge to the Nation. The people of the State would not permit it. Nor will Congress be apt to apply money in aid of the State administrations for purposes strictly local in which the Nation at large has no interest, although the State should desire it. The people of the other States would condemn it. They would declare that Congress had no right to tax them for such a purpose and dismiss at the next election such of their representatives as had voted for the measure, especially if it should be severely felt. I do not think that in offices of this kind there is much danger of the two Governments mistaking their interests or their duties. I rather expect that they would soon have a clear and distinct understanding of them and move on in great harmony.

"Good roads and canals will promote many very important national purposes. They will facilitate the operations of war, the movements of troops, the transportation of cannon, of provisions, and every warlike store, much to our advantage and to the disadvantage of the enemy in time of war. Good roads will facilitate the transportation of the mail, and thereby promote the purposes of commerce and political intelligence among the people. They will, by being properly directed to these objects, enhance the value of our vacant lands, a treasure of vast resource to the Nation. To the appropriation of the public money to improvements having these objects in view and carried to a certain extent I do not see any well-founded constitutional objection.

"In regard to our foreign concerns, provided they are managed with integrity and ability, great liberality is allowable in the application of the public money. In the management of these concerns no State interests can be affected, no State rights violated. The complete and exclusive control over them is vested in Congress. The power to form treaties of alliance and commerce with foreign powers, to regulate by law our commerce with them, to determine on peace or war, to raise armies and a navy, to call forth the militia and direct their operations belongs to the General Government. These great powers, embracing the whole scope of our foreign relations, being granted, on what principle can it be said that the minor are withheld? Are not the latter clearly and evidently comprised in the former? Nations are sometimes called upon to perform to each other acts of humanity and kindness, of which we see so many illustrious examples between individuals in private life. Great calamities make appeals to the benevolence of mankind which ought not to be resisted. Good offices in such emergencies exalt the character of the party rendering them. By exciting grateful feelings they soften the intercourse between nations and tend to prevent war. Surely if the United States have a right to make war they have a right to prevent it. How was it possible to grant to Congress a power for such minor purposes other than in general terms, comprising it within the scope and policy of that which conveyed it for the greater?

"The right of appropriation is nothing more than a right to apply the public money to this or that purpose. It has no incidental power nor does it draw after it any consequences of that kind. All that Congress could do under it in the case of internal improvements would be to appropriate the money necessary to make them. For every act requiring legislative sanction or support the State authority must be relied on. The condemnation of the land, if the proprietors should refuse to sell it, the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, and the protection of the work when finished must be done by the State. To these purposes the powers of the General Government are believed to be utterly incompetent.

"To the objection that the United States have no power in any instance which is not complete to all the purposes to which it may be made instrumental, and in consequence that they have no right to appropriate any portion of the puolic money to internal improvements because they have not the right of sovereignty and jurisdiction over them when made, a full answer has, it is presumed, been already given. It may, however, be proper to add that if this objection was well founded it would not be confined to the simple case of internal improvements, but would apply to others of high importance. Congress have a right to regulate commerce. To give effect to this power it becomes necessary to establish customhouses in every State along the coast and in many parts of the interior. The vast amount of goods imported and the duties to be performed to accommodate the merchants and secure the revenue make it necessary that spacious buildings should be erected, especially in the great towns, for their reception. This, it is manifest, could best be performed under the direction of the General Government. Have Congress the right to seize the property of individuals if they should refuse to sell it in quarters best adapted to the purpose to have it valued, and to take it at the valuation? Have they a right to exercise jurisdiction within those buildings? Neither of these claims has ever been set up, nor could it as is presumed, be sustained. They have invariably either rented houses where such as were suitable could be obtained or, where they could not, purchased the ground of individuals, erected the buildings, and held them under the laws of the State. Under the power to establish post offices and post roads houses are also requisite for the reception of the mails and the transaction of the business of the several offices. These have always been rented or purchased and held under the laws of the State in the same manner as if they had been taken by a citizen. The United States have a right to establish tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court, and such have been established in every State of the Union. It is believed that the houses for these inferior courts have invariably been rented. No right of jurisdiction in them has ever been claimed, nor other right than that of privilege, and that only while the court is in session. A still stronger case may be urged. Should Congress be compelled by invasion or other cause to remove the Government to some town within one of the States, would they have a right of jurisdiction over such town or hold even the house in which they held their session under other authority than the laws of such State? It is believed that they would not. If they have a right to appropriate money for any of these purposes, to be laid out under the protection of the laws of the State, surely they have an equal right to do it for the purposes of internal improvements.

"It is believed that there is not a corporation in the Union which does not exercise great discretion in the application of the money raised by it to the purposes of its institution. It would be strange if the Government of the United States, which was instituted for such important purposes and endowed with such extensive powers, should not be allowed at least equal discretion and authority. The evil to be particularly avoided is the violation of State rights. Shunning that, it seems to be reasonable and proper that the powers of Congress should be so construed as that the General Government in its intercourse with other nations and in our internal concerns should be able to adopt all such measures lying within the fair scope and intended to facilitate the direct objects of its powers as the public welfare may require and a sound and provident policy dictate.

"The measures of Congress have been in strict accord with the view taken of the right of appropriation both as to its extent and limitation, as will be shown by a reference to the laws, commencing at a very early period. Many roads have been opened, of which the following are the principal: The first from Cumberland, at the headwaters of the Potomac, in the State of Maryland, through Pennsylvania and Virginia, to the State of Ohio (Mar. 29, 1806; see vol. 4, p. 13, of the late edition of the laws). The second from the frontiers of Georgia, on the route from Athens to New Orleans, to its intersection with the thirty-first degree of north latitude (Apr. 31, 1806, p. 58). The third from the Mississippi at a point and by a route described to the Ohio (same act). The fourth from Nashville, in Tennessee, to Natchez (same act). The fifth from the thirty-first degree of north latitude, on the route from Athens to New Orleans, under such regulations as might be agreed on between the Executive and the Spanish Government (Mar. 3, 1807, p. 117). The sixth from the foot of the rapids of the river Miami, of Lake Erie, to the western line of the Connecticut Reserve (Dec. 12, 1811, p. 364). The seventh from the lower Sandusky to the boundary line established by the treaty of Greenville (same act). The eighth from a point where the United States road leading from Vincennes to the Indian boundary line, established by the treaty of Greenville, strikes the said line, to the North Bend, in the State of Ohio (Jan. 8, 1812, p. 367). The ninth for repairing and keeping in repair the road between Columbia, on Duck River, in Tennessee, and Madisonville, in Louisiana, and also the road between Fort Hawkins, in Georgia, and Fort Stoddard (Apr. 27, 1816, p. 104, of the acts of that year). The tenth from the Shawneetown, on the Ohio River, to the Sabine, and to Kaskaskias, in Illinois (Apr. 27, 1816, p. 112). The eleventh from Reynoldsburg, on Tennessee River, in the State of Tennessee, through the Chickasaw Nation, to intersect the Natchez road near the Chickasaw old town (Mar. 3, 1817, p. 252). The twelfth: By this act authority was given to the President to appoint three commissioners for the purpose of examining the country and laying out a road from the termination of the Cumberland road, at Wheeling, on the Ohio, through the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, to a point to be chosen by them, on the left bank of the Mississippi, between St. Louis and the mouth of the Illinois River, and to report an accurate plan of the said road, with an estimate of the expense of making it. It is, however, declared by the act that nothing was thereby intended to imply an obligation on the part of the United States to make or defray the expense of making the said road or any part thereof.

"In the late war two other roads were made by the troops for military purposes—one from the upper Sandusky, in the State of Ohio, through the Black Swamp, toward Detroit, and another from Plattsburg, on Lake Champlain, through the Chatauga woods toward Sacketts Harbor, which have since been repaired and improved by the troops. Of these latter there is no notice in the laws. The extra pay to the soldiers for repairing and improving those roads was advanced in the first instance from the appropriation to the Quartermaster's Department and afterwards provided for by a specific appropriation by Congress. The necessity of keeping those roads open and in good repair, being on the frontier, to facilitate a communication between our posts, is apparent.

"All of these roads except the first were formed merely by cutting down the trees and throwing logs across, so as to make causeways over such parts as were otherwise impassable. The execution was of the coarsest kind. The Cumberland road is the only regular work which has been undertaken by the General Government or which could give rise to any question between the two Governments respecting its powers. It is a great work, over the highest mountains in our Union, connecting from the seat of the General Government the eastern with the western waters, and more intimately the Atlantic with the Western States, in the formation of which $1,800,000 have been expended. The measures pursued in this case require to be particularly noticed as fixing the opinion of the parties, and particularly of Congress, on the important question of the right. Passing through Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, it was thought necessary and proper to bring the subject before their respective legislatures to obtain their sanction, which was granted by each State by a legislative act, approving the route and providing for the purchase and condemnation of the land. This road was founded on an article of compact between the United States and the State of Ohio, under which that State came into the Union, and by which the expense attending it was to be defrayed by the application of a certain portion of the money arising from the sale of the public lands within that State. In this instance, which is by far the strongest in respect to the expense, extent, and nature of the work done, the United States have exercised no act of jurisdiction or sovereignty within either of the States by taking the land from the proprietors by force, by passing acts for the protection of the road, or to raise a revenue from it by the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, or any other act founded on the principle of jurisdiction or right. Whatever they have done has, on the contrary, been founded on the opposite principle, on the voluntary and unqualified admission that the sovereignty belonged to the State and not to the United States, and that they could perform no act which should tend to weaken the power of the State or to assume any to themselves. All that they have done has been to appropriate the public money to the construction of this road and to cause it to be constructed, for I presume that no distinction can be taken between the appropriation of money raised by the sale of the public lands and of that which arises from taxes, duties, imposts, and excises; nor can I believe that the power to appropriate derives any sanction from a provision to that effect having been made by an article of compact between the United States and the people of the then Territory of Ohio. This point may, however, be placed in a clearer light by a more particular notice of the article itself.

"By an act of April 30, 1802, entitled 'An act to enable the people of the eastern division of the territory northwest of the river Ohio to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and for other purposes,' after describing the limits of the proposed new State and authorizing the people thereof to elect a convention to form a constitution, the three following propositions were made to the convention, to be obligatory on the United States if accepted by it: First, that section No. 16 of every township, or, where such section had been sold, other lands equivalent thereto, should be granted to the inhabitants of such township for the use of free schools. Second, that the 6 miles' reservation, including the salt springs commonly called the Scioto Salt Springs, the salt springs near the Muskingum River and in the military tract, with the sections which include the same, should be granted to the said State for the use of the people thereof, under such regulations as the legislature of the State should prescribe: Provided, That it should never sell or lease the same for more than 10 years. Third, that one-twentieth part of the proceeds of the public lands lying within the said State which might be sold by Congress from and after the 30th June ensuing should be applied to the laying out and making public roads from the navigable waters emptying into the Atlantic, to the Ohio, and through the State of Ohio, such roads to be laid out under the authority of Congress, with the consent of the several States through which they should pass.

"These three propositions were made on the condition that the convention of the State should provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every tract of land sold by Congress after the 30th of June ensuing should remain for the term of five years after sale exempt from every species of tax whatsoever.

"It is impossible to read the ordinance of the 23d of April, 1784, or the provisions of the act of April 30, 1802, which are founded on it, without being profoundly impressed with the enlightened and magnanimous policy which dictated them. Anticipating that the new States would be settled by the inhabitants of the original States and their offspring, no narrow or contracted jealousy was entertained of their admission into the Union in equal participation in the national sovereignty with the original States. It was foreseen at the early period at which that ordinance passed that the expansion of our Union to the Lakes and to the Mississippi and all its waters would not only make us a greater power but cement the Union itself. These three propositions were well calculated to promote these great results. A grant of land to each township for free schools, and of the salt springs to the State, which were within its limits, for the use of its citizens, with 5 per cent of the money to be raised from the sale of lands within the State for the construction of roads between the original States and the new State, and of other roads within the State, indicated a spirit not to be mistaken, nor could it fail to produce a corresponding effect in the bosoms of those to whom it was addressed. For these considerations the sole return required of the convention was that the new State should not tax the public lands which might be sold by the United States within it for the term of five years after they should be sold. As the value of these lands would be enhanced by this exemption from taxes for that term, and from which the new State would derive its proportionable benefit, and as it would also promote the rapid sale of those lands, and with it the augmentation of its own population, it can not be doubted, had this exemption been suggested unaccompanied by any propositions of particular advantage, that the convention would, in consideration of the relation which had before existed between the parties, and was about to be so much improved, most willingly have acceded to it and without regarding it as an onerous condition.

"Since, then, it appears that the whole of the money to be employed in making this road was to be raised from the sale of the public lands, and which would still belong to the United States, although no mention had been made of them in the compact, it follows that the application of the money to that purpose stands upon the same ground as if such compact had not been made, and in consequence that the example in favor of the right of appropriation is in no manner affected by it.

"The same rule of construction of the right of appropriation has been observed and the same liberal policy pursued toward the other new States, with certain modifications adapted to the situation of each, which were adopted with the State of Ohio. As, however, the reasoning which is applicable to the compact with Ohio in relation to the right of appropriation, in which light only I have adverted to it, is equally applicable to the several compacts with the other new States, I deem it unnecessary to take a particular notice of them.

"It is proper to observe that the money which was employed in the construction of all the other roads was taken directly from the Treasury. This fact affords an additional proof that in the contemplation of Congress no difference existed in the application of money to those roads between that which was raised by the sale of lands and that which was derived from taxes, duties, imposts, and excises.

"So far I have confined my remarks to the acts of Congress respecting the right of appropriation to such measures only as operate internally and affect the territory of the individual States. In adverting to those which operate externally and relate to foreign powers I find only two which appear to merit particular attention. These were gratuitous grants of money for the relief of foreigners in distress—the first in 1794 to the inhabitants of St. Domingo, who sought an asylum on our coast from the convulsions and calamities of the island; the second in 1812 to the people of Caracas, reduced to misery by an earthquake. The considerations which were applicable to these grants have already been noticed and need not be repeated.

"In this examination of the right of appropriation I thought it proper to present to view also the practice of the Government under it, and to explore the ground on which each example rested, that the precise nature and extent of the construction thereby given of the right might be clearly understood. The right to raise money would have given, as is presumed, the right to use it, although nothing had been said to that effect in the Constitution; and where the right to raise it is granted without special limitation, we must look for such limitation to other causes. Our attention is first drawn to the right to appropriate, and not finding it there we must then look to the general powers of the Government as designated by the specific grants and to the purposes contemplated by them, allowing to this (the right to raise money), the first and most important of the enumerated powers, a scope which will be competent to those purposes. The practice of the Government, as illustrated by numerous and strong examples directly applicable, ought surely to have great weight in fixing the construction of each grant. It ought, I presume, to settle it, especially where it is acquiesced in by the nation and produces a manifest and positive good. A practical construction, thus supported, shows that it has reason on its side and is called for by the interests of the Union. Hence, too, the presumption that it will be persevered in. It will surely be better to admit that the construction given by these examples has been just and proper than to deny that construction and still to practice on it—to say one thing and to do another.

"Wherein consists the danger of giving a liberal construction to the right of Congress to raise and appropriate the public money? It has been shown that its obvious effect is to secure the rights of the States from encroachment and greater harmony in the political movement between the two governments, while it enlarges to a certain extent in the most harmless way the useful agency of the General Government for all the purposes of its institution. Is not the responsibility of the representative to his constituent in every branch of the General Government equally strong and as sensibly felt as in the State governments, and is not the security against abuse as effectual in the one as in the other government? The history of the General Government in all its measures fully demonstrates that Congress will never venture to impose unnecessary burdens on the people or any that can be avoided. Duties and imposts have always been light, not greater, perhaps, than would have been imposed for the encouragement of our manufactures had there been no occasion for the revenue arising from them; and taxes and excises have never been laid except in cases of necessity, and repealed as soon as the necessity ceased. Under this mild process and the sale of some hundreds of millions of acres of good land the Government will be possessed of money, which may be applied with great advantage to national purposes. Within the States only will it be applied, and, of course, for their benefit, it not being presumable that such appeals as were made to the benevolence of the country in the instances of the inhabitants of St. Domingo and Caracas will often occur. How, then, shall this revenue be applied? Should it be idle in the Treasury? That our resources will be equal to such useful purposes I have no doubt, especially if by completing our fortifications and raising and maintaining our Navy at the point provided for immediately after the war we sustain our present altitude and preserve by means thereof for any length of time the peace of the Union.

"When we hear charges raised against other Governments of breaches of their constitutions, or, rather, of their charters, we always anticipate the most serious consequences—communities deprived of privileges which they have long enjoyed, or individuals oppressed and punished in violation of the ordinary forms and guards of trial to which they were accustomed and entitled. How different is the situation of the United States! Nor can anything mark more strongly the great characteristics of that difference than the grounds on which like charges are raised against this Government. It is not alleged that any portion of the community or any individual has been oppressed or that money has been raised under a doubtful title. The principal charges are that a work of great utility to the Union and affecting immediately and with like advantage many of the States has been constructed; that pensions to the surviving patriots of our Revolution, to patriots who fought the battles and promoted the independence of their country, have been granted, by money, too, raised not only without oppression but almost without being felt, and under an acknowledged constitutional power.

"From this view of the right to appropriate and of the practice under it I think that I am authorized to conclude that the right to make internal improvements has not been granted by the power 'to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare,' included in the first of the enumerated powers; that that grant conveys nothing more than a right to appropriate the public money, and stands on the same ground with the right to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, conveyed by the first branch of that power; that the Government itself being limited, both branches of the power to raise and appropriate the public money are also limited, the extent of the Government as designated by the specific grants marking the extent of the power in both branches, extending, however, to every object embraced by the fair scope of those grants and not confined to a strict construction of their respective powers, it being safer to aid the purposes of those grants by the appropriation of money than to extend by a forced construction the grant itself; that although the right to appropriate the public money to such improvements affords a resource indispensably necessary to such a scheme, it is nevertheless deficient as a power in the great characteristics on which its execution depends.

"The substance of what has been urged on this subject may be expressed in a few words. My idea is that Congress have an unlimited power to raise money, and that in its appropriation they have a discretionary power, restricted only by the duty to appropriate it to purposes of common defense and of general, not local, national, not State, benefit.

"I will now proceed to the fifth source from which the power is said to be derived, viz, the power to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution all the powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof. This is the seventeenth and last of the enumerated powers granted to Congress.

"I have always considered this power as having been granted on a principle of greater caution to secure the complete execution of all the powers which had been vested in the General Government. It contains no distinct and specific power, as every other grant does, such as to lay and collect taxes, to declare war, to regulate commerce, and the like. Looking to the whole scheme of the General Government, it gives to Congress authority to make all laws which should be deemed necessary and proper for carrying all its powers into effect. My impression has been invariably that this power would have existed substantially if this grant had not been made; for why is any power granted unless it be to be executed when required, and how can it be executed under our Government unless it be by laws necessary and proper for the purpose—that is, well adapted to the end. It is a principle universally admitted that a grant of a power conveys as a necessary consequence or incident to it the means of carrying it into effect by a fair construction of its import. In the formation, however, of the Constitution, which was to act directly upon the people and be paramount to the extent of its powers to the constitutions of the States, it was wise in its framers to leave nothing to implication which might be reduced to certainty. It is known that all power which rests solely on that ground has been systematically and zealously opposed under all Governments with which we have any acquaintance; and it was reasonable to presume that under our system, where there was a division of the sovereignty between the two independent Governments, the measures of the General Government would excite equal jealousy and produce an opposition not less systematic, though, perhaps, less violent. Hence the policy by the framers of our Government of securing by a fundamental declaration in the Constitution a principle which in all other Governments had been left to implication only. The terms 'necessary' and 'proper' secure to the powers of all the grants to which the authority given in this is applicable a fair and sound construction, which is equally binding as a rule on both Governments and on all their departments.

"In examining the right of the General Government to adopt and execute under this grant a system of internal improvement the sole question to be decided is whether the power has been granted under any of the other grants. If it has, this power is applicable to it to the extent stated. If it has not, it does not exist at all, for it has not been hereby granted. I have already examined all the other grants—one only excepted, which will next claim attention—and shown, as I presume, on the most liberal construction of their powers that the right has not been granted by any of them; hence it follows that in regard to them it has not been granted by this.

"I come now to the last source from which this power is said to be derived, viz, the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States, which is contained in the second clause of the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution.

"To form a just opinion of the nature and extent of this power it will be necessary to bring into view the provisions contained in the first clause of the section of the article referred to, which makes an essential part of the policy in question. By this it is declared that new States shall be admitted into the Union, but that no new States shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any States be formed by the junction of two or more States or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the United States.

"If we recur to the condition of our country at the commencement of the Revolution, we shall see the origin and cause of these provisions. By the charters of the several colonies limits by latitude and other descriptions were assigned to each. In commencing the Revolution the colonies, as has already been observed, claimed by those limits, although their population extended in many instances to a small portion of the territory lying within them. It was contended by some of the States after the declaration of independence that the vacant lands lying within any of the States should become the property of the Union, as by a common exertion they would be acquired. This claim was resisted by the others on the principle that all the States entered into the contest in the full extent of their chartered rights, and that they ought to have the full benefit of those rights in the event of success. Happily this controversy was settled, as all interfering claims and pretensions between the members of our Union and between the General Government and any of these members have been, in the most amicable manner and to the satisfaction of all parties. On the recommendation of Congress the individual States having such territory within their chartered limits ceded large portions thereof to the United States on condition that it should be laid off into districts of proper dimensions, the lands to be sold for the benefit of the United States, and that the districts be admitted into the Union when they should obtain such a population as it might be thought proper and reasonable to prescribe. This is the territory and this the property referred to in the second clause of the fourth article of the Constitution.

"All the States which had made cessions of vacant territory except Georgia had made them before the adoption of the Constitution, and that State had made a proposition to Congress to that effect which was under consideration at the time the Constitution was adopted. The cession was completed after the adoption of the Constitution. It was made on the same principle and on similar conditions with those which had been already made by the other States. As differences might arise respecting the right or the policy in Congress to admit new States into the Union under the new Government, or to make regulations for the government of the territory ceded in the intermediate state, or for the improvement and sale of the public lands, or to accept other cessions, it was thought proper to make special provisions for these objects, which was accordingly done by the above-recited clause in the Constitution.

"Thus the power of Congress over the ceded territory was not only limited to these special objects, but was also temporary. As soon as the Territory became a State the jurisdiction over it as it had before existed ceased. It extended afterwards only to the unsold lands, and as soon as the whole were sold it ceased in that sense also altogether. From that moment the United States have no jurisdiction or power in the new States other than in the old, nor can it be obtained except by an amendment of the Constitution.

"Since, then, it is manifest that the power granted to Congress to dispose of and make all needful regulations respecting the territory and other property of the United States relates solely to the territory and property which had been ceded by individual States, and which after such cession lay without their respective limits, and for which special provision was deemed necessary, the main power of the Constitution operating internally, not being applicable or adequate thereto, it follows that this power gives no authority, and has even no bearing on the question of internal improvement. The authority to admit new States and to dispose of the property and regulate the territory is not among the enumerated powers granted to Congress, because the duties to be performed under it are not among the ordinary duties of that body, like the imposition of taxes, the regulation of commerce, and the like. They are objects in their nature special, and for which special provision was more suitable and proper.

"Having now examined all the powers of Congress under which the right to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement is claimed and the reasons in support of it in each instance, I think that it may fairly be concluded that such a right has not been granted. It appears and is admitted that much may be done in aid of such a system by the right which is derived from several of the existing grants, and more especially from that to appropriate the public money. But still it is manifest that as a system for the United States it can never be carried into effect under that grant nor under all of them united, the great and essential power being deficient, consisting of a right to take up the subject on principle; to cause our Union to be examined by men of science, with a view to such improvements; to authorize commissioners to lay off the roads and canals in all proper directions; to take the land at a valuation if necessary, and to construct the works; to pass laws with suitable penalties for their protection; and to raise a revenue from them, to keep them in repair, and make further improvement by the establishment of turnpikes and tolls, with gates to be placed at the proper distances.

"It need scarcely be remarked that this power will operate, like many others now existing, without affecting the sovereignty of the States except in the particular offices to be performed. The jurisdiction of the several States may still exist over the roads and canals within their respective limits, extending alike to persons and property, as if the right to make and protect such improvements had not been vested in Congress. The right, being made commensurate simply with the purposes indispensable to the system, may be strictly confined to them. The right of Congress to protect the works by laws imposing penalties would operate on the same principles as the right to protect the mail. The act being punishable only, a jurisdiction over the place would be altogether unnecessary and even absurd.

"In the preceding inquiry little has been said of the advantages which would attend the exercise of such a power by the General Government. I have made the inquiry under a deep conviction that they are almost incalculable, and that there was a general concurrence of opinion among our fellow citizens to that effect. Still, it may not be improper for me to state the grounds upon which my own impression is founded. If it sheds no additional light on this interesting part of the subject, it will at least show that I have had more than one powerful motive for making the inquiry. A general idea is all that I shall attempt.

"The advantages of such a system must depend upon the interests to be affected by it and the extent to which they may be affected, and those must depend on the capacity of our country for improvement and the means at its command applicable to that object.

"I think that I may venture to affirm that there is no part of our globe comprehending so many degrees of latitude on the main ocean and so many degrees of longitude into the interior that admits of such great improvement and at so little expense. The Atlantic on the one side, and the Lakes, forming almost inland seas, on the other, separated by high mountains, which rise in the valley of the St. Lawrence and determine in that of the Mississippi, traversing from north to south almost the whole interior, with innumerable rivers on every side of those mountains, some of vast extent, many of which take their sources near to each other, give the great outline. The details are to be seen on the valuable maps of our country.

"It appears by the light already before the public that it is practicable and easy to connect by canals the whole coast from its southern to its northern extremity in one continued inland navigation, and to connect in like manner in many parts the western lakes and rivers with each other. It is equally practicable and easy to facilitate the intercourse between the Atlantic and the western country by improving the navigation of many of the rivers which have their sources near to each other in the mountains on each side, and by good roads across the mountains between the highest navigable points of those rivers. In addition to the example of the Cumberland Road, already noticed, another of this kind is now in train from the headwaters of the River James to those of the Kanawha; and in like manner may the Savannah be connected with the Tennessee. In some instances it is understood that the eastern and western waters may be connected together directly by canals. One great work of this kind is now in its progress and far advanced in the State of New York, and there is good reason to believe that two others may be formed, one at each extremity of the high mountains above mentioned, connecting in the one instance the waters of the St. Lawrence with Lake Champlain, and in the other some of the most important of the western rivers with those emptying into the Gulf of Mexico, the advantage of which will be seen at the first glance by an enlightened observer.

"Great improvements may also be made by good roads in proper directions through the interior of the country. As these roads would be laid out on principle on a full view of the country, its mountains, rivers, etc., it would be useless, if I had the knowledge, to go into detail respecting them. Much has been done by some of the States, but yet much remains to be done with a view to the Union.

"Under the colonial governments improvements of this kind were not thought of. There was, it is believed, not one canal and little communication from colony to colony. It was their policy to encourage the intercourse between each colony and the parent country only. The roads which were attended to were those which led from the interior of each colony to its principal towns on the navigable waters. By those routes the produce of the country was carried to the coast, and shipped thence to the mercantile houses in London, Liverpool, Glasgow, or other towns to which the trade was carried on. It is believed that there was but one connected route from North to South at the commencement of the Revolution, and that a very imperfect one. The existence and principle of our Union point out the necessity of a very different policy.

"The advantages which would be derived from such improvements are incalculable. The facility which would thereby be afforded to the transportation of the whole of the rich productions of our country to market would alone more than amply compensate for all the labor and expense attending them. Great, however, as is that advantage, it is one only of many and by no means the most important. Every power of the General Government and of the State governments connected with the strength and resources of the country would be made more efficient for the purposes intended by them. In war they would facilitate the transportation of men, ordnance, and provisions, and munitions of war of every kind to every part of our extensive coast and interior on which an attack might be made or threatened. Those who have any knowledge of the occurrences of the late war must know the good effect which would result in the event of another war from the command of an interior navigation alone along the coast for all the purposes of war as well as of commerce between the different parts of our Union. The impediments to all military operations which proceeded from the want of such a navigation and the reliance which was placed, notwithstanding those impediments, on such a commerce can not be forgotten. In every other line their good effect would be most sensibly felt. Intelligence by means of the Post Office Department would be more easily, extensively, and rapidly diffused. Parts the most remote from each other would be brought more closely together. Distant lands would be made more valuable, and the industry of our fellow citizens on every portion of our soil be better rewarded.

"It is natural in so great a variety of climate that there should be a corresponding difference in the produce of the soil; that one part should raise what the other might want. It is equally natural that the pursuits of industry should vary in like manner; that labor should be cheaper and manufactures succeed better in one part than in another; that were the climate the most severe and the soil less productive, navigation, the fisheries, and commerce should be most relied on. Hence the motive for an exchange for mutual accommodation and active intercourse between them. Each part would thus find for the surplus of its labor, in whatever article it consisted, an extensive market at home, which would be the most profitable because free from duty.

"There is another view in which these improvements are of still more vital importance. The effect which they would have on the bond of union itself affords an inducement for them more powerful than any which have been urged or than all of them united. The only danger to which our system is exposed arises from its expansion over a vast territory. Our Union is not held together by standing armies or by any ties other than the positive interests and powerful attractions of its parts toward each other. Ambitious men may hereafter grow up among us who may promise to themselves advancement from a change, and by practicing upon the sectional interests, feelings, and prejudices endeavor under various pretexts to promote it. The history of the world is replete with examples of this kind—of military commanders and demagogues becoming usurpers and tyrants, and of their fellow citizens becoming their instruments and slaves. I have little fear of this danger, knowing well how strong the bond which holds us together is and who the people are who are thus held together; but still, it is proper to look at and to provide against it, and it is not within the compass of human wisdom to make a more effectual provision than would be made by the proposed improvements. With their aid and the intercourse which would grow out of them the parts would soon become so compacted and bound together that nothing could break it.

"The expansion of our Union over a vast territory can not operate unfavorably to the States individually. On the contrary, it is believed that the greater the expansion within practicable limits—and it is not easy to say what are not so—the greater the advantage which the States individually will derive from it. With governments separate, vigorous, and efficient for all local purposes, their distance from each other can have no injurious effect upon their respective interests. It has already been shown that in some important circumstances, especially with the aid of these improvements, they must derive great advantage from that cause alone—that is, from their distance from each other. In every other way the expansion of our system must operate favorably for every State in proportion as it operates favorably for the Union. It is in that sense only that it can become a question with the States, or rather, with the people who compose them. As States they can be affected by it only by their relation to each other through the General Government and by its effect on the operations of that Government. Manifest it is that to any extent to which the General Government can sustain and execute its functions with complete effect will the States—that is, the people who compose them—be benefited. It is only when the expansion shall be carried beyond the faculties of the General Government so as to enfeeble its operations to the injury of the whole that any of the parts can be injured. The tendency in that stage will be to dismemberment and not to consolidation. This danger should, therefore, be looked at with profound attention as one of a very serious character. I will remark here that as the operations of the National Government are of a general nature, the States having complete power for internal and local purposes, the expansion may be carried to very great extent and with perfect safety. It must be obvious to all that the further the expansion is carried, provided it be not beyond the just limit, the greater will be the freedom of action to both Governments and the more perfect their security, and in all other respects the better the effect will be to the whole American people. Extent of territory, whether it be great or small, gives to a nation many of its characteristics. It marks the extent of its resources, of its population, of its physical force. It marks, in short, the difference between a great and a small power.

"To what extent it may be proper to expand our system of government is a question which does not press for a decision at this time. At the end of the Revolutionary War, in 1783, we had, as we contended and believed, a right to the free navigation of the Mississippi, but it was not until after the expiration of 12 years, in 1795, that that right was acknowledged and enjoyed. Further difficulties occurred in the bustling of a contentious world when, at the expiration of eight years more, the United States, sustaining the strength and energy of their character, acquired the Province of Louisiana, with the free navigation of the river from its source to the ocean and a liberal boundary on the western side. To this Florida has since been added, so that we now possess all the territory in which the original States had any interest, or in which the existing States can be said, either in a national or local point of view, to be in any way interested. A range of States on the western side of the Mississippi, which already is provided for, puts us essentially at ease. Whether it will be wise to go further will turn on other considerations than those which have dictated the course heretofore pursued. At whatever point we may stop, whether it be at a single range of States beyond the Mississippi or by taking a greater scope, the advantage of such improvements is deemed of the highest importance. It is so on the present scale. The further we go the greater will be the necessity for them.

"It can not be doubted that improvements for great national purposes would be better made by the National Government than by the governments of the several States. Our experience prior to the adoption of the Constitution demonstrated that in the exercise by the individual States of most of the powers granted to the United States a contracted rivalry of interest and misapplied jealousy of each other had an important influence on all their measures to the great injury of the whole. This was particularly exemplified by the regulations which they severally made of their commerce with foreign nations and with each other. It was this utter incapacity in the State governments, proceeding from these and other causes, to act as a Nation and to perform all the duties which the Nation owed to itself under any system which left the General Government dependent on the States, which produced the transfer of these powers to the United States by the establishment of the present Constitution. The reasoning which was applicable to the grant of any of the powers now vested in Congress is likewise so, at least to a certain extent, to that in question. It is natural that the States individually in making improvements should look to their particular and local interests. The members composing their respective legislatures represent the people of each State only, and might not feel themselves at liberty to look to objects in these respects beyond that limit. If the resources of the Union were to be brought into operation under the direction of the State assemblies, or in concert with them, it may be apprehended that every measure would become the object of negotiation, of bargain and barter, much to the disadvantage of the system, as well as discredit to both governments. But Congress would look to the whole and make improvements to promote the welfare of the whole. It is the peculiar felicity of the proposed amendment that while it will enable the United States to accomplish every national object, the improvements made with that view will eminently promote the welfare of the individual States, who may also add such others as their own particular interests may require.

"The situation of the Cumberland Road requires the particular and early attention of Congress. Being formed over very lofty mountains, and in many instances over deep and wide streams, across which valuable bridges have been erected, which are sustained by stone walls, as are many other parts of the road, all these works are subject to decay, have decayed, and will decay rapidly unless timely and effectual measures are adopted to prevent it.

"The declivities from the mountains and all the heights must suffer from the frequent and heavy falls of water and its descent to the valleys, as also from the deep congelations during our severe winters. Other injuries have also been experienced on this road, such as the displacing the capping of the walls and other works, committed by worthless people either from a desire to render the road impassable or to have the transportation in another direction, or from a spirit of wantonness to create employment for idlers. These considerations show that an active and strict police ought to be established over the whole road, with power to make repairs when necessary, to establish turnpikes and tolls as the means of raising money to make them, and to prosecute and punish those who commit waste and other injuries.

"Should the United States be willing to abandon this road to the States through which it passes, would they take charge of it, each of that portion within its limits, and keep it in repair? It is not to be presumed that they would, since the advantages attending it are exclusively national, by connecting, as it does, the Atlantic with the Western States, and in a line with the seat of the National Government. The most expensive parts of this road lie within Pennsylvania and Virginia, very near the confines of each State, and in a route not essentially connected with the commerce of either.

"If it is thought proper to vest this power in the United States, the only mode in which it can be done is by an amendment of the Constitution. The States individually can not transfer the power to the United States, nor can the United States receive it. The Constitution forms an equal and the sole relation between the General Government and the several States, and it recognizes no change in it which shall not in like manner apply to all. If it is once admitted that the General Government may form compacts with individual States not common to the others, and which the others might even disapprove, into what pernicious consequences might it not lead? Such compacts are utterly repugnant to the principles of the Constitution and of the most dangerous tendency. The States through which this road passes have given their sanction only to the route and to the acquisition of the soil by the United States, a right very different from that of jurisdiction, which can not be granted without an amendment to the Constitution, and which need not be granted for the purposes of this system except in the limited manner heretofore stated. On full consideration, therefore, of the whole subject, I am of opinion that such an amendment ought to be recommended to the several States for their adoption.

"I have now essentially executed that part of the task which I imposed on myself of examining the right of Congress to adopt and execute a system of internal improvement, and, I presume, have shown that it does not exist. It is, I think, equally manifest that such a power vested in Congress and wisely executed would have the happiest effect on all the great interests of our Union. It is, however, my opinion that the power should be confined to great national works only, since if it were unlimited it would be liable to abuse and might be productive of evil. For all minor improvements the resources of the States individually would be fully adequate, and by the States such improvements might be made with greater advantage than by the Union, as they would understand better such as their more immediate and local interests required.

"In the view above presented I have through it proper to trace the origin of our institutions, and particularly of the State and National Governments, for although they have a common origin in the people, yet, as the point at issue turned on what were the powers granted to the one Government and what were those which remained to the other, I was persuaded that an analysis which should mark distinctly the source of power in both Governments, with its progress in each, would afford the best means for obtaining a sound result. In our political career they are, obviously, three great epochs. The colonial state forms the first; the Revolutionary movement from its commencement to the adoption of the Articles of Confederation the second, and the intervening space from that event to the present day the third. The first may be considered the infant state. It was the school of morality, of political science and just principles. The equality of rights enjoyed by the people of every Colony under their original charters forms the basis of every existing institution, and it was owing to the creation by those charters of distinct communities that the power, when wrested from the Crown, passed directly and exclusively to the people of each Colony. The Revolutionary struggle gave activity to those principles, and its success secured to them a permanent existence in the governments of our Union, State and National. The third epoch comprises the administration under the Articles of Confederation, with the adoption of the Constitution and administration under it. On the first and last of these epochs it is not necessary to enlarge for any purpose connected with the object of this inquiry. To the second, in which we were transferred by a heroic exertion from the first to the third stage, and whose events give the true character to every institution, some further attention is due. In tracing in greater detail the prominent acts of a movement to which we owe so much I shall perform an office which, if not useful, will be gratifying to my own feelings, and I hope not unacceptable to my readers.

"Of the Revolutionary movement itself sentiments too respectful, too exalted, can not be entertained. It is impossible for any citizen having a just idea of the dangers which we had to encounter to read the record of our early proceedings and to see the firmness with which they were met and the wisdom and patriotism which were displayed in every stage without being deeply affected by it. An attack on Massachusetts was considered an attack on every Colony, and the people of each moved in her defense as in their own cause. The meeting of the General Congress in Philadelphia on the 6th of September, 1774, appears to have been the result of a spontaneous impulse in every quarter at the same time. The first public act proposing it, according to the Journals of the First Congress, was passed by the House of Representatives of Connecticut on the 3d of June of that year; but it is presumed that the first suggestion came from Massachusetts, the Colony most oppressed, and in whose favor the general sympathy was much excited. The exposition which that Congress made of grievances, in the petition to the King, in the address to the people of Great Britain, and in that to the people of the several Colonies, evinced a knowledge so profound of the English constitution and of the general principles of free government and of liberty, of our rights founded on that constitution and on the charters of the several Colonies, and of the numerous and egregious violations which had been committed of them, as must have convinced all impartial minds that the talent on this side of the Atlantic was at least equal to that on the other. The spirit in which those papers were drawn, which was known to be in strict accord with the public sentiment, proved that, although the whole people cherished a connection with the parent country and were desirous of preserving it on just principles, they nevertheless stood embodied at the parting line, ready to separate forever if a redress of grievances, the alternative offered, was not promptly rendered. That alternative was rejected, and in consequence war and dismemberment followed.

"The powers granted to the delegates of each colony who composed the First Congress looked primarily to the support of rights and to a redress of grievances, and in consequence, to the restoration of harmony, which was ardently desired. They justified, however, any extremity in case of necessity. They were ample for such purposes and were executed in every circumstance with the utmost fidelity. It was not until after the meeting of the Second Congress, which took place on the 10th May, 1775, when full proof was laid before it of the commencement of hostilities in the preceding month by a deliberate attack of the British troops on the militia and inhabitants of Lexington and Concord, in Massachusetts, that war might be said to be decided on, and measures were taken to support it. The progress even then was slow and reluctant, as will be seen by their second petition to the King and their second address to the people of Great Britain, which were prepared and forwarded after that event. The arrival, however, of large bodies of troops and the pressure of war in every direction soon dispelled all hope of accommodation.

"On the 15th of June, 1775, a commander in chief of the forces raised and to be raised for the defense of American liberty was appointed by the unanimous vote of Congress, and his conduct in the discharge of the duties of that high trust, which he held through the whole of the war, has given an example to the world for talents as a military commander; for integrity, fortitude, and firmness under the severest trials; for respect to the civil authority and devotion to the rights and liberties of his country of which neither Rome nor Greece have exhibited the equal. I saw him in my earliest youth, in the retreat through Jersey, at the head of a small band, or rather in its rear, for he was always next the enemy, and his countenance and manner made an impression on me which time can never efface. A lieutenant then in the Third Virginia Regiment, I happened to be on the rear guard at Newark, and I counted the force under his immediate command by platoons as it passed me, which amounted to less than 3,000 men. A deportment so firm, so dignified, so exalted, but yet so modest and composed, I have never seen in any other person.

"On the 6th July, 1775, Congress published a declaration of the causes which compelled them to take up arms, and immediately afterwards took measures for augmenting the Army and raising a Navy; for organizing the militia and providing cannon and small arms and military stores of every kind; for raising a revenue and pushing the war offensively with all the means in their power. Nothing escaped the attention of that enlightened body. The people of Canada were invited to joint the Union, and a force sent into the province to favor the Revolutionary party, which, however, was not capable of affording any essential aid. The people of Ireland were addressed in terms manifesting due respect for the sufferings, the talents, and patriotism of that portion of the British Empire, and a suitable acknowledgment was made to the assembly of Jamaica for the approbation it has expressed of our cause and the part it had taken in support of it with the British Government.

"On the 2d of June, 1775, the convention of Massachusetts, by a letter signed by their president, of May the 10th, stated to Congress that they labored under difficulties for the want of a regular form of government, and requested to be favored with explicit advice respecting the taking up and exercising the powers of civil government, and declaring their readiness to submit to such a general plan as the Congress might direct for the Colonies, or that they would make it their great study to establish such a form of government there as should not only promote their own advantage but the union and interest of all America. To this application an answer was given on the 9th, by which it was recommended to the convention 'to write letters to the inhabitants of the several places entitled to representation in assembly, requesting them to choose such representatives, and that the assembly, when chosen, should elect councilors, and that said assembly or council should exercise the powers of government until a governor of His Majesty's appointment will consent to govern the Colony according to its charter.'

"On the 18th October of the same year the delegates from New Hampshire laid before Congress an instruction from their convention 'to use their utmost endeavors to obtain the advice and direction of Congress with respect to a method for administering justice and regulating their civil police.' To this a reply was given on the 3d November, by which it was recommended to the convention 'to call a full and free representation of the people, and that the representatives, if they thought it necessary, should establish such a form of government as in their judgment would best promote the happiness of the people and most effectually secure peace and good order in the Province during the continuance of the present dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies.'

"On the 4th November it was resolved by Congress 'that if the Convention of South Carolina shall find it necessary to establish a form of government in that Colony it be recommended to that convention to call a full and free representation of the people; and the said representatives, if they think it necessary, shall establish such a form of government as in their judgment will best promote the happiness of the people and most effectually secure peace and good order in the Colony during the continuance of the present dispute between Great Britain and the Colonies.'

"On the 4th December, following a resolution passed recommending the same measure, and precisely in the same words, to the Convention of Virginia.

"On the 10th May, 1776, it was recommended to the respective assemblies and conventions of the United Colonies, where no government sufficient to the exigencies of their affairs had been established, 'to adopt such government as should, in the opinion of the representatives of the people, best conduce to the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular and America in general.'

"On the 7th June resolutions respecting independence were moved and seconded, which were referred to a committee of the whole on the 8th and 10th, on which latter day it was resolved to postpone a decision on the first resolution or main question until the 1st July, but that no time might be lost in case the Congress agree thereto that a committee be appointed to prepare a declaration to the effect of that resolution.

"On the 11th June, 1776, Congress appointed a committee to prepare and digest a plan of confederation for the Colonies. On the 12th July the committee reported a draft of articles, which were severally afterwards debated and amended until the 15th November, 1777, when they were adopted. These articles were then proposed to the legislatures of the several States, with a request that if approved by them they would authorize their delegates to ratify the same in Congress, and, which being done, to become conclusive. It was not until the 21st of March, 1781, as already observed, that they were ratified by the last State and carried into effect.

"On the 4th July, 1776, independence was declared by an act which arrested the attention of the civilized world and will bear the test of time. For force and condensation of matter, strength of reason, sublimity of sentiment and expression, it is believed that no document of equal merit exists. It looked to everything, and with a reach, perspicuity, and energy of mind which seemed to be master of everything.

"Thus it appears, in addition to the very important charge of managing the war, that Congress had under consideration at the same time the Declaration of Independence, the adoption of a confederation for the States, and the propriety of instituting State governments, with the nature of those governments, respecting which it had been consulted by the conventions of several of the Colonies. So great a trust was never reposed before in a body thus constituted, and I am authorized to add, looking to the great result, that never were duties more ably or faithfully performed.

"The distinguished characteristic of this movement is that although the connection which had existed between the people of the several Colonies before their dismemberment from the parent county was not only not dissolved but increased by that event, even before the adoption of the Articles of Confederation, yet the preservation and augmentation of that tie were the result of a new creation, and proceeded altogether from the people of each Colony, into whose hands the whole power passed exclusively when wrested from the Crown. To the same cause the greater change which has since occurred by the adoption of the Constitution is to be traced.

"The establishment of our institutions forms the most important epoch that history hath recorded. They extend unexampled felicity to the whole body of our fellow citizens, and are the admiration of other nations. To preserve and hand them down in their utmost purity to the remotest ages will require the existence and practice of virtues and talents equal to those which were displayed in acquiring them. It is ardently hoped and confidently believed that these will not be wanting."

Mr. SHEPPARD obtained the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the absence of the following Senators, who are in attendance upon an important hearing before the Judiciary Committee: The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Texas will proceed.

TEXAS BICENTENNIAL AND PAN AMERICAN EXPOSITION.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, on this the eightieth anniversary of the battle of San Jacinto, where the independence of Texas was achieved, I think it appropriate to address the Senate on the subject of the Texas Bicentennial and Pan American Exposition which is to be held at San Antonio in 1918. It will be an exposition dedicated to the history of Texas and the Southwest, to the relation of that notable history to the history of the Nation and of the world, and to the establishment of closer trade relations between the United States and the other countries of Pan America.

Mr. President, this exposition merits especial consideration from the Federal Government. It will be of national and international significance. It will reflect phases of American history and of world history that have never been fittingly commemorated. It will encourage a trade movement of untold value to this Republic. It will unite the peoples of the Western Hemisphere in a closer and more genuine fraternity. It will celebrate the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of San Antonio and epitomize the progress of that imperial area now known as Texas. It will have an educational, a patriotic, and a material meaning of such importance as to justify the active cooperation and indorsement of the Nation.

What other part of the American Union, sir, possesses a more historic, a more absorbing, a rarer interest than Texas? The land it embraces was known to Europeans nearly a century before Jamestown and Plymouth Rock came into being. It was part of a Province of the first European government on the Western Hemisphere. Only three decades after the first voyage of Columbus the Spanish conquerors of Mexico heard such tales of wealth and splendor in the country to the north of the Rio Grande, the country now called Texas, that the palaces of the Montezumas seemed rude and poor in comparison. Nay, sir, a few years later Cabeza de Vaca, who with three comrades had survived one of the most daring journeys ever made by mortals, gave the world a written account of that perilous trip from Florida along the Gulf coast to Mexico, thus introducing to authentic annals the region now designated as Texas more than a half a hundred years before Virginia and Massachusetts began.

To understand the political origin of Texas we must turn to what was perhaps the most remarkable treaty ever executed—a treaty which justly may be termed the most gigantic real-estate transaction ever known—the treaty of Tordesillas, made between Portugal and Spain on June 7, 1494. By that treaty Portugal was to have all the lands that might be discovered thereafter east of a certain meridian connecting the Arctic Circle with the Antarctic, the meridian running 370° west of the Azores. Thus Portugal acquired a claim to Greenland, St. Helena, Brazil, Africa, Malabar, Ceylon, Arabia, Persia, India, the Malay Archipelago, while to Spain was awarded all lands discovered at that time or thereafter west of such line, including North and most of South America. It was in order to reduce to permanent possession the hemisphere thus assigned her that Spain divided the two American Continents into four great vice royalties—New Spain, New Granada, Buenos Aires, and Peru. New Spain extended from Guatemala to what is now Vancouver Island, containing four divisions—Mexico, New Galicia, Nuevo Reyno de Leon, and Provincias Internas, the latter including the territory that later became Texas and the Californias. In the New Spain, of which the present Texas was a part, the University of Mexico was established in 1553, nearly a century before Harvard, the oldest college in the United States, had its humble beginning.

The exposition of 1918 will not fail to typify the Texas and the New Spain of the sixteenth century, and will thus awaken a sense of ancient and historic unity in the two Americas. It will picture the daring expeditions of De Soto, Oñate, Coronado, Mendoza, Cabeza, and others into various portions of the trans-Rio Grande. It will portray the planting of the picturesque settlements, composed of mission, presidio, and village, from the Rio Grande Valley, through what are now New Mexico, Arizona, and California, to the Pacific coast. It will present these and other phases of American history that have been but little emphasized in the ordinary narratives of the schools.

It will recall the workings of a mysterious power that blinded Charles V and Philip II to the possibilities of Spanish expansion above the Rio Grande. Had these monarchs devoted half the energy they expended in attempting to build a European empire to the development of their New World holdings, holdings which other countries could at that time have disputed but with the greatest difficulty, it is beyond any human mind to measure the changes that would have occurred in subsequent history.

This exposition will then recall to its visitors the seventeenth century, a century that marked the advent of the English and the French in North America, to contest with each other and with Spain the title to the new continent, initiating a struggle leading in one of its fundamental phases to the founding of San Antonio and the shaping of Texas. It will recall Joliet, Marquette, and La Salle on the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes, the Fox, the Wisconsin, the Chicago, the Illinois, the Mississippi. It will recall La Salle christening the country Louisiana and claiming it for France. It will recall his hasty return to Paris to obtain from the ambitious Louis XIV a donation of ships and men with which to confirm this claim and drive the Spaniard from New Spain forever. It will recall that tragic voyage, beset by pirate and by storm, the end of which saw but a remnant of a once proud expedition pass the original destination, the mouth of the Mississippi, and reach at last a part of the Texas coast early in 1685 near Matagorda Bay. Then will be reviewed the planting of the lonely and ill-fated colony of Fort St. Louis near the head of that bay on a river they called La Vache, now known as the Lavaca. Then will be observed that little company of the doomed fighting all forms of danger, from privation and disease to massacre by savages, until the arrival of the Spaniards in 1689 to resist this intrusion found only empty, plundered houses and three dead bodies, one a woman's, on the adjoining plain. Could these lifeless lips have spoken, what tales of agony and hardship and distress they might have told? Two years before, the spirit of La Salle, who had set out to find again the Mississippi, released by the bullet of an assassin in the tangled forests of the Trinity, had flown from its earthly temple to join the brave of all the ages.

The documents and relics which the exposition of 1918 will assemble, on a scale never before attempted, supplemented by a pageantry, with a setting that only San Antonio can provide, will enable us to follow the march of events from the arrival of the Spaniard at Fort St. Louis with increasing interest. That arrival marked a distinct epoch in the history of Texas and the Southwest. The Spaniards found the colony of Fort St. Louis extinct, but they heard of Frenchmen among the Tejas Indians, a confederacy of native tribes inhabiting the section between the upper Neches and the Trinity, in what is now known as east Texas. They also saw all hope of restoring their ancient title to the country beyond the Sabine and the Red rapidly vanishing on account of the rapid spread of the English on the Atlantic coast and the advent of the French in the Mississippi Valley. They saw that even the territory between the Sabine and the Rio Grande was threatened unless prompt steps should be taken. This led to an active effort to combat further French settlement by the erection of the mission of San Francisco de los Tejas, about 45 miles southwest of the present city of Nacogdoches, Tex., among the Tejas Indians, and the change of the name of the country above the Rio Grande from New Philippines, which had been given it after the acquisition of the Philippines proper, to Tejas, or, to use the English pronunciation, Texas. Thus the name Texas came into existence, as a designation for the territory it still denotes, having developed out of the struggle between European nations for the control of American soil.

The mission of San Francisco de los Tejas, with its unsubstantial wooden buildings, lasted but three years, when it faded into the solitudes among which it had been erected. The danger of French invasion seemed to have disappeared, and the Spaniard lapsed into the old inactivity and neglect, so far as the colonization of Texas was concerned. In 1699 the French, under Iberville, began a permanent settlement at Old Biloxi, and in 1718 anchored Louisiana to France through the founding of New Orleans. For more than 20 years after the departure from east Texas the only effort of the Spanish to occupy territory in the direction of Texas was the building of the mission of San Juan Bautista and the presidio of the Rio Grande, on the Mexican side of that stream, about 55 miles below the present city of Eagle Pass. A sudden awakening was now in store.

One day in 1714 there appeared on the opposite side of the river from San Juan Bautista a band of soldier-traders led by the fearless Huchereau St. Denis. His coming sent a thrill of surprise and apprehension through all Mexico. The viceroy and his councilors shuddered as they thought how easily the expedition of this adventurous young Frenchman, who had marched in six weeks from the Sabine to the Rio Grande, could be repeated, not for trade, the guise in which he now pretended to come, but for French possession. While the Mexican authorities were making plans for the permanent occupation of Texas, an occupation which would bar the extension of the French boundary to the Rio Grande, while they were debating as to what to do with St. Denis, having placed him under virtual arrest, this chevalier of the prairies turned from his dream of territorial conquest to kneel at the feet of the lovely granddaughter of Capt. Diego Ramon, the commandant of San Juan Bautista, and deliver up his heart. This singular romance of that rugged time found a happy termination at the marriage altar.

The fear of French invasion inspired by the startling feat of St. Denis led to two expeditions, one of which reestablished in 1716 the settlements in east Texas that had been abandoned in 1693, and the other of which resulted in the founding of San Antonio in 1718. The first expedition revived the old mission of San Francisco de los Tejas, the name being changed to San Francisco de los Neches, and located five other missions in that vicinity, named as follows: Nuestra Señora de la Guadalupe, La Purísima Concepción de los Asinais, San Joseph de los Nazones, San Miguel de Linares, and Nuestra Señora de los Dolores. The second expedition was headed by Martin de Alarcón, governor of the adjoining Province of Coahuila. On an enchanting spot where two rivers, the San Antonio and the San Pedro, joined their crystal waters but a short distance from the sources of each in fountains that sprang full born from the foot of the escarpment of a vast table-land, he founded the presidio, or fort, of San Antonio de Béjar in the year 1718. Near the presidio he established the mission of San Antonio de Valero, headed by Padre Olivares. It was the chapel of this mission which more than 100 years later, under the name of the Alamo, became the scene of a martyrdom that will illuminate the annals and glorify the cause of human liberty forevermore. With the erection of this fort and mission San Antonio began an existence that has continued to the present hour, an existence which in 1918 will have spanned its second century. Let it not be forgotten that in the same year New Orleans was born, confirming the spacious reaches of Louisiana to France, just as the founding of San Antonio made certain the dominance of Spain and Mexico in Texas. In view of this noteworthy coincidence it would seem fitting that a day be set aside during the exposition in especial honor of New Orleans.

For more than 125 years San Antonio remained the military, religious, and commercial capital of Texas. Against the Indians on the west and the French to the east it presented a permanent barrier. To the original mission were soon added five others in the vicinity of San Antonio and under the protection of its presidio. Of these the mission of San José de Aguayo was established in 1720, that of San Xavier de Náxera in 1722. The other three were transplanted from east Texas in 1731. The mission of San Francisco de los Tejas of 1690, the first mission established in Texas, had its name again changed, on removal, to San Francisco de la Espada. La Purísima Concepción de los Asinais became known in its new home as La Purísima Concepción de Acuña, while San Joseph de los Nazones became San Juan Capistrano. The main buildings of some of these missions are standing to-day, the sole material remnants, with the exception of the Stone Fort at Nacogdoches, of Spanish rule in Texas, and monuments to the energy, the patience, and the genius of their erectors. They are stone structures of massive type. The church of mission Concepción de Acuña, with its Moorish dome and classic towers rising in graceful proportion above its serrated walls, presents a picture of symmetry and solidity amazing to the beholder. For 20 years the Franciscans of Querétaro, with primitive tools and untutored labor, at one of the remote outposts of civilization, in constant danger of extermination by savage foes, with the mallet in one hand and the sword in the other, slowly developed that artistic pile, which has defied the corrosions and the storms of 200 years. Of the mission San José de Aguayo, begun in 1720, named in honor of the Spanish governor of Texas, Marquis San Miguel de Aguayo, perhaps the ablest of all the Spanish governors assigned north of the Rio Grande, let Sidney Lanier, the gifted Georgian who carefully studied the mission, speak. He says:

San José Mission is the most beautiful of all, and its carving is surely "a joy forever." The hand that chiseled the wonderful façade at the main entrance of the church, the doorway, window, and pillar capitals of the smaller chapel, that now goes by the name of the Baptistry, was one of marvelous cunning. The façade is rich to repletion with the most exquisite carving. Figures of virgins and saints with drapery that looks like drapery, cherubs' heads, sacred hearts, ornate pedestals and recesses with their conchlike canopies, and cornices wonderful. The doorway, pillar and arch, is daring in its unique ornamentation—showing in its combination of form the impression of Moorish outlines. Otherwise the whole façade is rich Renaissance—figures and hearts alone with anything realistic about them. All other ornamentation is conventional, but with nothing stiff, every curve showing a free hand. The window above the archway is a simple wreath of such acanthuslike curves and concholds of surpassing workmanship. The south window of the Baptistry is considered by good judges the finest gem of architectural ornamentation existing in America to-day. Its curves and proportions are a perpetual delight to the eye, and often as the writer has seen and examined it, it is of that kind of art which does not satiate, but ever reveals some fresh beauty in line or curve.

The chapels of San Juan Capistrano and San Francisco de la Espada, Mr. President, are not so well preserved, but are of compelling interest, and like the others by some mystic charm translate the visitor from the New World to the old. The erection of the mission buildings, and the maintenance not only of these but of presidio and village for more than a century in the face of the perpetual hostility of Apaches and Comanches, the fiercest of the Indian tribes of America—a hostility so inveterate that only a few settlements outside the immediate neighborhood of San Antonio were able to preserve an existence at best perilous and uncertain—compose one of the most impressive chapters in the records of human courage, endurance, sacrifice. It is appropriate, therefore, that in 1918 San Antonio should invite the Spanish-speaking peoples to visit the scene where representatives of their own race gave such superb illustration to these attributes and to join in an exposition commemorating such achievements.

The cession of Louisiana to Spain in 1762 removed France as a contestant for territory and pushed the Spanish boundary from the Sabine to the Mississippi, where Spain found a new neighbor in England—a neighbor to be replaced only two decades later by the new Nation which the English colonists had set up as the fruit of revolution—the United States of North America. Spain saw the first evidence of a new peril when, in 1800, 11 citizens of the United States were marched through the streets of San Antonio in chains, the survivors of an armed expedition into Texas led by Philip Nolan, who had been killed and his followers destroyed or captured. In the same year Louisiana was redelivered to France to be sold by Napoleon to the United States in 1803. So Spain again faced the United States, and this time at the Sabine instead of the Mississippi. From the first, friction arose as to the boundary, the United States later reviving the French claim that the rightful western border of Louisiana was the Rio Grande. From that time forward San Antonio, responding to the trend of events, took on a new and busier and more important life. The missions had been secularized and practically discontinued. New settlers were thronging in—Spaniards, Creoles, Mexicans, Frenchmen, Americans, Indians of both pure and mixed extraction. The city was beginning to develop that cosmopolitan character which to-day so emphatically distinguishes it—practically every race being now represented within its limits. Hundreds of troops were permanently quartered there—a recognition of the military and strategic value of the place, a value recognized to-day by the United States in maintaining at San Antonio one of the largest army posts in the Republic. Already its wonderful climate, health laden beyond description, its mild and sunny winters, its uniform and delightful temperature, had begun to attract people from all parts of the world. It is little wonder, therefore, that it has become to-day, nearly 120 years later, one of the notable tourist centers of the Nation, its hotels having an equipment and a hospitality that make them one of its most attractive features.

Shortly after the Louisiana Purchase uneasiness over the boundary quarrel caused the number of Spanish troops in Texas to be rapidly increased. The rumor of an invasion by Aaron Burr added to the excitement. A Spanish force crossed the Sabine and invaded American soil, but returned after a brief period to its own side of the river. There on the Sabine the Spanish and American armies confronted one another, the former under Gov. Cordero, of Texas, the latter under Gov. Wilkinson, commander in chief of the armed forces of the United States. An agreement was reached regarding the boundary, a neutral ground defined, and both armies retired. Then began the Mexican revolution against Spain, originated by Hidalgo in 1811. The example of the United States was spreading over the American hemisphere. San Antonio experienced a bloody introduction to the revolution when there appeared on a pole near the river between the Alamo and the main plaza the severed head of Col. Delgado, who had been one of her most prominent citizens and an adherent of Hidalgo. Bloody was to be the retribution and bloodier still the counter retribution. Bernardo Gutierrez, another follower of Hidalgo, escaping from Mexico after the execution of his chief, organized at Natchitoches, La., near the frontier, in confederation with Magee, an officer in the United States Army, who had resigned to take up this work, a band of Americans, rebel Mexicans, and Indians for the invasion of Texas. Driving the Spaniards from Nacogdoches and other Texas points, the invaders, numbering probably 1,200 men, defeated the Spanish army of probably 2,500 at the Battle of Rosillo, near San Antonio, with terrific slaughter, and two days later took the city itself. The city was given over to plunder and the spoils apportioned among the invaders. Then Capt. Delgado demanded vengeance on Gov. Salcedo and others for the murder of his father. He was put in charge of Gov. Salcedo and his staff, together with Gov. Herrara, of Nuevo Leon, and ex-Gov. Cordero, ostensibly to take them as prisoners to New Orleans. A mile and a half below the city Delgado and his company halted and deliberately cut the throats of his prisoners with ordinary camp knives. At this the best elements among the American officers and men, who had been moved by a sincere desire to aid in the revolution, withdrew to the United States, disclaiming further connection with the enterprise. For four months this crowd of adventurers held the city in a state of lawlessness and disorder. With wonderful coolness and skill they rallied from the surprise occasioned by the unexpected approach of Don Elisondo's army of 3,000 royalists from Mexico, which they defeated, administering a loss of over a thousand, while their own casualties were but 94. A few weeks later they were themselves defeated by another royalist force under Gen. Arredondo and practically cut to pieces, only 93 Americans finally getting back to the United States. A severe retaliation for the murder of Salcedo and his companions was then exacted. Seventy or eighty prisoners were set in turns by tens on a log laid across a huge grave, into which the victims fell as they were shot. In San Antonio 300 citizens were confined for a night in a single house, 18 dying from suffocation. Another Black Hole horror was thus registered. Four hundred women of republican families were imprisoned and compelled to cook for the royalist army. The work of plunder and destruction was carried from San Antonio to Nacogdoches and was so complete that these two communities, with the rest of Texas, were temporarily depopulated.

Then came the invasion of east Texas in 1819 by an expedition under James Long, of Natchez, a former officer in the United States Army. He set up a provisional government at Nacogdoches; but, while absent at Galveston Island to seek the aid of the celebrated pirate, Jean Lafitte, his settlement was broken up and his men scattered by the Spanish troops.

The success of the Mexican revolution in 1821 put an end to these filibustering expeditions. The new and independent Republic of Mexico looked with favor at first on immigration from the United States, and an influx of American settlers into Texas began. The pioneers in the work of American colonization were Moses Austin and his son Stephen. It was due principally to them that a plan was conceived and executed which accomplished in a comparatively few years what Spain had failed to bring about for 300 years, namely, the planting of a permanent and extensive agricultural population in Texas. As a result of their labors and the permanent American occupation came the revolution of 1836, the annexation of Texas, and the acquisition of California, Utah—where on Ensign Peak the pioneers of that great State lifted for the first time in that section the American flag—Arizona, Nevada, New Mexico, and part of Wyoming, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Colorado. It has been given to few men, working, as did the Austins, in the quietude of private life, far from halls of state and fields of battle, to set in motion events of such momentous consequence.

It was at San Antonio that the project of American colonization was initiated. Moses Austin arrived there in 1820 to interview Gov. Martinez, having ridden horseback 800 miles from Missouri through an almost trackless wilderness. Angrily ordered away at first, he finally succeeded, with the invaluable aid of Baron de Bastrop, in obtaining the sanction of the governor and his council, or ayuntamiento. It was from San Antonio that Stephen Austin, in 1822, undertook that perilous ride on horseback of 1,200 miles to the City of Mexico, with only one companion, to obtain, after difficulties and delays which only his own invincible patience could have survived, the approval of the central authorities.

It was in San Antonio that the Bowie brothers, Rezin P. and James, organized in 1831 an expedition to search for the silver mines reputed to be near the site of the San Saba mission, during which expedition occurred the Indian fight that made the prowess of the Bowies forever memorable.

It was in San Antonio that Sam Houston appeared in 1833, accompanied by James Bowie, to arrange with the Comanche chiefs for a consultation looking to a treaty of peace with the American colonists.

It was in San Antonio, in October, 1834, that the first revolutionary meeting was held in Texas to protest against the dictatorship of Santa Anna and the overthrow of the Mexican Federal constitution of 1824.

It was in San Antonio in December, 1835, that the Texan army of 300, after five days' fighting of the most desperate character, hand to hand and from house to house, using crowbars and picks to dig loopholes in the thick stone walls, compelled the capitulation of Gen. Cos with his force of 1,300. The Texans, under Burleson and Bowie and Fannin, had been fired with resistless enthusiasm for the assault by the ringing appeal of Col. Benjamin R. Milam, who set their spirits ablaze with the cry, "Who will go with old Ben Milam into San Antonio?"

It was in San Antonio that about three months later occurred the world-famous tragedy of the Alamo. The victory of December had apparently driven the usurper from the province, and only a small garrison was left to guard San Antonio. Late in February Santa Anna himself with an army of about 2,000 fell suddenly upon the city. The little body of 183 Texans, led by Travis and Bowie and David Crockett, retired within the walls of the Alamo, a stone rectangle 190 feet long and 122 feet wide, with the old church of the original mission of Valero in the southeast corner for quarters and magazine. The next day Travis sent out a call for help that has been pronounced "the most heroic document among American historical records." It was as follows:

COMMANDANCY OF THE ALAMO,
Bejar, February 24, 1836.

To the people of Texas and all Americans in the world:

Fellow citizens and compatriots, I am besieged by a thousand or more of the Mexicans under Santa Anna. I have sustained a continual bombardment and cannonade for 24 hours, and have not lost a man. The enemy has demanded a surrender at discretion, otherwise the garrison are to be put to the sword if the fort is taken. I have answered the demand with a cannon shot, and our flag still waves proudly from the walls. I shall never surrender or retreat. Then I call on you in the name of liberty, of patriotism, and everything dear to the American character to come to our aid with all dispatch. The enemy is receiving reinforcements daily, and will no doubt increase to three or four thousand in four or five days. If this call is neglected, I am determined to sustain myself as long as possible and die like a soldier who never forgets what is due to his own honor and that of his country. Victory or death.

WILLIAM BARRET TRAVIS,
Lieutenant Colonel Commandant.

Another pathetic document relating to this siege is the diary kept by David Crockett until the day before the Alamo was taken. I make the following partial quotations:

March 1: The enemy's forces have been increasing in number daily, notwithstanding they have already lost about 300 men in the several assaults they have made upon us. * * *

March 2: This day the delegates meet in general convention at the town of Washington to frame our Declaration of Independence. That the sacred instrument may never be trampled on by the children of those who have freely shed their blood to establish it is the sincere wish of David Crockett. * * * Some imagine independence to be a natural charter, to exercise without restraint, and to their fullest extent, all the energies, both physical and mental, with which they have been endowed, and for their individual aggrandisement alone without regard to the rights of others, provided they extend to all the same privilege and freedom of action. Such independence is the worst of tyranny.

March 3: We have given over all hopes of receiving assistance from Goliad or Refugio. Col. Travis harangued the garrison and concluded by exhorting them in case the enemy should carry the fort to fight to the last gasp, and render their victory even more serious to them than to us. This was followed by three cheers.

March 4: Shells have been falling into the fort like hail during the day, but without effect. About dusk, in the evening we observed a man running toward the fort pursued by * * * Mexican cavalry. The bee-hunter immediately knew him to be the old pirate who had gone to Goliad and calling to the two hunters he sallied out of the fort to the relief of the old man who was hard pressed. I followed close after. * * * We dashed among them and a bloody conflict ensued. They were about 20 in number and they stood their ground. After the fight had continued about five minutes a detachment was seen issuing from the fort to our relief, and the Mexicans scampered off leaving eight of their comrades dead upon the field. But we did not escape unscathed, for both the pirate and the bee hunter were mortally wounded and I received a saber cut across the forehead. The old man died, without speaking, as soon as we entered the fort. We bore my young friend to his bed, dressed his wounds, and I watched beside him. He lay without complaint or manifestation of pain until about midnight when he spoke and I asked him if he wanted anything. "Nothing," he replied, but drew a sigh that seemed to rend his heart, as he added: "Poor Kate of Nacogdoches!" His eyes were filled with tears as he continued: "Her words were prophetic, Colonel." And then he sang in a low voice that resembled the sweet notes of his own devoted Kate:

But toom cam' the saddle, all bluidy to see,
And hame cam' the steed, but hame never cam' he.

He spoke no more and a few minutes after died. Poor Kate, who will tell this to thee?

March 5: * * * No time for memorandums now. Go ahead! Liberty and independence forever.

Mr. President, it is doubtful whether in the range of human literature a parallel may be found for this rarest and most tragic of memoirs. The fact that Crockett could pause amid such turbulence and despair, surrounded by the last agonies of expiring valor, the breath of the tomb on his brow, and with such calmness, such self-mastery, such precision and charm, such tenderness and sympathy, such insight into the philosophy of liberty, reduce such observations to manuscript, is a tribute of itself that can never be equaled or approached.

The siege of the Alamo lasted from February 23 to March 6, 1836. About three days before the end Col. Travis drew a line on the ground with the point of his sword. He invited every man who had resolved to stay and die to step across the line, giving all who might so desire the privilege of endeavoring to escape. Immediately Tapley Holland stepped across, followed by every man in the fort but one, who fled. Col. Bowie was ill, but asked his comrades to lift his cot across the line, and others who were ill did the same. On the morning of March 6, 1836, came the crowning catastrophe. Overwhelming the little band at last, the besiegers, thousands strong, swarmed over the parapets and into the fort. One by one the remaining Texans died, fighting to the last.

Thus was consecrated in the blood of patriots the new Texas, whose independence had been proclaimed a few days before at Washington, on the Brazos. The news of this slaughter and of a similar massacre at Goliad some three weeks later filled the Texans with such determination and fury that on April 21, at San Jacinto, 80 years ago to-day, their revolutionary army of 800, untrained, half-equipped, and poorly supplied, defeated the flower of Santa Anna's troops, a force of 1,400, in a single charge. The nature of the victory will be better understood when it is known that of the enemy 630 were killed, 208 wounded, 730 captured. Less than 60 escaped, Santa Anna himself being among the prisoners. The Texans had 2 killed and 23 wounded. It was one of the most signal triumphs in the records of battle. The power of the dictator was broken and Texas assumed its place among the nations of the world.

Twice during the decade in which Texas maintained an existence as a separate Republic San Antonio was occupied by Mexican armies, which, however, soon found their positions untenable and retired.

With annexation to the United States in 1845 began a development for San Antonio and for all Texas that has each year assumed a more rapid and comprehensive sweep.

To-day San Antonio has a population nearly six times as large as that of the entire Texas Province in 1836, a population rated by the census of last year at 115,000, now much beyond that number. It combines all the features of a modern and progressive city with an Old World flavor, rendering it doubly impressive and unique. It is a distributing center for a large part of Spanish America. One-fifth of its people is still Mexican and Spanish. Many of these trace their forbears to the San Antonio of departed centuries, and are united by ties of blood and business to nearly every part of Central and South America, or mother Spain herself. Texas, with an area more than a fourth larger than the German Empire, is fifth in population among American Commonwealths, coming next after New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, and Ohio. It is the first State in cotton, cotton seed, cattle, mules, pecans, mohair, butter on farms, cotton-gin machinery, and winter vegetables. It is first in railway mileage, in the number of farms, cottonseed-oil mills, cotton compresses, and cotton gins. It is first in the size of ranches and farms. It is second in number of newspapers, in the growth and manufacture of rice, in quicksilver and asphalt, in length of coast line. It is capable of the widest and most diverse agricultural and industrial expansion.

With characteristic energy and happy foresight, San Antonio has determined to celebrate in 1918 the two hundredth anniversary of her birth by holding in conjunction with the State of Texas an exposition dedicated to her own history, to the history of Texas and the Southwest, and to closer economic and social relations between the United States and the other nations of Pan America. It is the first time that the people of San Antonio and of Texas have attempted a movement of this kind.

Expositions are the mirrors of progress. They possess an educational, patriotic, and material value, defying measure. Practically every other section of the Union has epitomized its own development and its relation to the Republic in expositions that have proved of lasting benefit.

Certainly no other section and no other city have a history more fundamentally related to that of the Nation and of the world, more replete with dramatic interest, more illustrative of the possibilities of human genius and achievement, of the versatility of human fortune, than the Southwest and San Antonio. American settlement in Texas and San Antonio meant the extension of the boundaries of liberty, of the jurisdiction of American institutions, of the field of American ideals to the Rio Grande and the Pacific. And the great States that were carved from the territory acquired by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, following the Mexican War, the direct result of the annexation of Texas to the Union, will be particularly requested to take part in this exposition. Finally, the part played by Spain and Spanish institutions in the history of San Antonio and of Texas and the fact that San Antonio is already one of the great commercial gateways to Spanish America will make this enterprise a peculiarly advantageous occasion for the extension of the Nation's commerce with the Spanish-American countries. These countries will feel more at home at San Antonio than anywhere else north of the Rio Grande.

The European war offers the United States an unrivaled opportunity for the cultivation of a more intimate association with the nations to the south. It is expected that at this exposition will be displayed not only the products of Texas and the rest of the United States but those of every country in Spanish America. Thus will be shown what we have to sell to them and what they have to sell to us. Thus a constructive Pan Americanism will be inaugurated, the result of which will be enormously beneficial to all concerned. The United States has, therefore, both a patriotic and material interest in this exposition, and should accord it active cooperation and indorsement.

We shall not ask the General Government for an appropriation with which to carry on this exposition. We do ask, however, that the Congress authorize the President to invite the other nations of Pan America to participate, and that the United States itself take part and make exhibits showing its own resources and products. We shall also ask that the Government aid in entertaining the delegates which the Latin American countries send to San Antonio as their special representatives at this exposition.

San Antonio and Texas have adopted this method of portraying their history, their progress, and possibilities not only to Latin America but to this Nation and to the world. We can not but believe that this project will meet the heartiest sympathy of the American Congress—that Congress will emulate the example of the President in according the warmest approval to this aspiration of the people of Texas, the State that Spain failed to settle during a possession of 300 years, the State which a power more than mortal must have preserved for the American citizen, the American Union, and the American flag.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it may be of interest to the Senator from Texas and to other Senators to know that a lineal descendant of that remarkable man to whose memory and achievements the Senator from Texas has paid such a beautiful tribute, David Crockett, is an employee of the Senate. Mr. John W. Crockett, an honored citizen of Arkansas, is the great grandson of Davy Crockett, and is the clerk of the Senate Committee on Commerce. He has had the pleasure of hearing the very able address of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am glad to have this information from my able friend, the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. It may also be of interest to refer here to the fact that Stephen Austin was a circuit judge in the Territory of Arkansas during the greater part of 1819 and 1820, and that he located the land on which his brother-in-law, James Bryan, marked out the city of Little Rock, now the capital of the State of Arkansas and the home of its distinguished senior Senator [Mr. CLARKE]. It was at Little Rock that Stephen Austin and his father, Moses, met in 1820 to make plans for the colonization of Texas. The histories of Texas and Arkansas are intimately interlinked.

RESTORATION OF PEACE IN EUROPE.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I introduced yesterday Senate resolution 172, regarding the restoration of peace in Europe and gave notice that I would address the Senate upon the resolution to-day. I ask leave to postpone the intended remarks and give notice that I shall address the Senate upon this subject next Monday.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that following the address of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] on Monday, April 24, 1916, I shall submit some remarks on Senate joint resolution No. 1, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage.

GOOD ROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that in order to promote agriculture, afford better facilities for rural transportation and marketing farm products, and encourage the development of a general system of improved highways, the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall in certain cases aid the States in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads which may be used in the transportation of interstate commerce, military supplies, or postal matter.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall cast my vote against this bill, whose passage may not be at all jeopardized thereby. I shall also recognize the public character of the object it is designed to subserve, and will not pause to challenge its constitutionality. The power of Congress to establish post roads may be sufficient to sustain the bill, and precedents can doubtless be found to support it if support be needed. Nevertheless, I am impressed with the criticisms of the bill by the senior Senator from California regarding its validity, some of which I think are not easily refuted.

The resulting benefit to the country at large which the advocates of the bill predict may also be conceded, even though the necessity for Federal appropriations for road construction be questioned. My opposition to the bill is grounded upon the sole proposition that we can not afford at this time to inaugurate, equip, and finance a national bureau for the construction of public highways, nor to devote the public revenue to any other than absolutely necessary demands.

Mr. President, the Democratic denunciation at Baltimore of Republican profligacy in expenditures has been recalled and repeated so often since the inauguration of Mr. Wilson that it has become stale and wearisome. I have so frequently referred to it upon this floor that I shrink from doing so again. Yet I am compelled to reassert that if it was justified when declared it is doubly justified now.

Mr. President, I have learned many things since my State honored me with a seat in the Senate. I have learned that partisanship disappears here when we look beyond our shore lines and confront problems of international concern. I have learned, too, that it disappears when we look toward the National Treasury. The compelling reason I have also learned. It is that the people are in each situation behind us, and are also without the domain of partisanship. All for each and each for all is the motto and unity the watchword.

Mr. President, there is no doubt of the reckless extravagance of previous Republican administrations. There is no doubt whatever that this one has followed the example and bettered the instruction. And there is no doubt that the next administration will be more extravagant than this one, through the constantly accelerating force of the pressure behind it. This has been so, and it will so continue until the people shall discontinue their demands for Federal appropriations and measure the merits of their representatives by their success or failure in securing them. And I confess with some reluctance that I perceive no present symptoms of any such reform.

Republican administrations were recklessly extravagant, and Democrats helped to make them so. This Democratic administration is recklessly extravagant and Republicans have helped to make it so. Behind both parties stands the hungry American public—men, women, and children—with arms outstretched and hands extended toward Washington, vociferating demands for appropriations, and Republicans and Democrats are fain to do its bidding. Let the parties refrain from mutual and farcical recriminations regarding public expenditures if they can not join in a well-directed effort to save the people from themselves. Let us discourage instead of encourage the ever-expanding range of demands upon the national revenues and endeavor to convince our constituents that we are in very truth trustees of a great public trust of which they are the beneficiaries, and should administer the trust as all others should be administered.

Mr. President, the tendency to look to the National Government for financial relief for all financial ills had its origin partly in the vicious policy of protection, whereby one class of the people were directed by law to enrich themselves by taking the property of their neighbors and partly to the desire to escape direct taxation for local purposes by shifting the burden to the national revenues. If the manufacturer by national authority may put his hand in the pocket of the consumer of his product and transfer its contents to himself, why should not the Government also pay the consumer according to his needs and afterwards according to his desires? And if the suggestions fall on willing ears, timed to catch the views and impulses of those who can mar as they have made, what wonder that suggestion is transformed into action? And action, once begun, bequeathed from bleeding sire to son, ripening into precedent, is making Uncle Sam the paymaster for everything which by any processes of refined reasoning can be tortured into a public purpose.

Every appropriation that has been made has encouraged applications for a dozen others, until the introduction of bills for relief has become a steady occupation, and each district and nearly every city have engaged in a scramble for aid from the National Treasury. I think it is safe to assert that 90 per cent of the bills introduced in the Senate and House are money bills, and fully 10 per cent of these refer to subjects which, once receiving favorable action, become permanent charges, requiring annual appropriations. I think, too, that the number of these bills enacted into law is constantly increasing, due to the tendency to which I have referred and to the inevitable system of logrolling, the inclusion of a number of bills for local relief into omnibus bills covering them all and commanding support as a whole, and always receiving it, so that each gets his own. Pork bills, as the public has determined to call them, are thus multiplying as well, and the term is quite as applicable to some of the general supply bills, as to those which it is designed to describe. He who tries to stem the tide of this pernicious system of money administration incurs the dislike of his associates, the animosity of the army of money grabbers, and the reprobation of his constituency, which is apt to feel that its own demands are obviously reasonable, just, and lawful, however outrageous all others may be. It is not surprising therefore that Senators and Members are reluctant to oppose that which overcomes all resistance, and sooner or later sweeps them aside forever. If they can not get what their constituents demand—above all, if they oppose or only give them a lukewarm support—they must step aside for successors with fewer scruples and greater driving power. And so, Republicans content themselves with advertising Democratic profligacy, while Democrats, with like complacency, denounce Republican extravagance. Both profligacy and extravagance continue, nevertheless, and the high priests of the parties, like the old Roman Augurs, wink at each other as they thunder their platform denunciations to the listening multitudes.

Our general pension bills, the most liberal in the world, providing compensation to every man and woman who could possibly deserve it, are easily overtopped by special legislation as demanded. If one may judge from the number of private bills for pensions and for increases, nearly everyone on the rolls and everyone wanting to get on them are before the appropriate committees. Pensions are no longer stipends; they must yield adequate support. The rolls long ceased to be rolls of honor. We are placing everybody upon them. Deserters petition for the removal of their disabilities, and we remove them. They then ask for pensions, and we give them. What man in either house dares vote against these committee bills or question the expediency much less the merits of the committee reports? Which party opposes a motion to take up these bills and consider them out of their order? I am painfully conscious of the result to myself of so much as propounding these queries, since it will be assumed that none but an enemy of the old soldier would have the temerity to ask them. They add hundreds of thousands to our annual disbursements, but the legislation is good politics. None of us would stoop to buying votes with our own money, but to use the public moneys to that end is not unusual, and therefore permissible.

Let me here say that the pension bills are, in my opinion, quite as commendable, if not more so, as those of which communities in the mass are the beneficiaries. Our river and harbor bills, our public building bills, which devote millions annually to the so-called improvement of petty streams and to the construction of stately public buildnigs in the little villages and crossroads hamlets of the land, are perhaps the most conspicuous although not the sole examples of the way in which the public revenues are squandered at the behest of communities and to obtain or perpetuate their political allegiance. And so of Army posts, which once established very naturally and properly clamor for maintenance and expansion.

I was much impressed with one of the dialogues which served to enliven one of the soliloquies of this discussion, wherein the junior Senator from Virginia directed attention to the lack of needed public buildings in Washington and the consequent housing of so many departments and bureaus in leased structures and apartments, for which the Government pays an annual rental of nearly $700,000, the Government rentals being also higher than those to private persons for similar accommodations. The Senator deplored this condition and recounted his unsuccessful efforts to rectify it. But he did not refer to the real cause of this situation. It lies in the fact that we are so busy in providing public structures for Sundance and Milldew, for Persepolis and Rising Sun, that we have no time to consider and no money to squander upon needed public buildings here. Moreover, some of Uncle Sam's Washington landlords have influence in the political world and would lose a good thing if we provided the Government with appropriate housings. But we can easily build bridges—aqueduct, memorial, and suspension—over the Potomac and into Virginia, and national highways in the other direction, and just as easily comfort ourselves with the delusion that the public needs imperatively demand them.

How much money do we intend to appropriate for the approaching fiscal year, exclusive of the usual supply bills? Does any Senator know? Has he sought to ascertain? Does he know anything about it?

We have recently passed two bills for what, I think, are very essential purposes and which must carry ultimate appropriations of $41,000,000. On April 18 the Senate Calendar contained measures favorably reported on and which will probably pass. These carry ultimate appropriations of $121,500,000, all outside of the ordinary expenditures. The House Calendar will probably disclose a much larger aggregate sum. Does any Representative know how much that body proposes to add to the annual budget of expenditure? Has he cared to investigate the subject?

Mr. President, the cry of preparedness is wrapped in a golden atmosphere of monetary possibilities. It has just enough of patriotism about it to make it pleasing to the eye and delightful to the ear. Its seductive syllables have arrested the attention and quickened the hopes of everyone who would save his country by drawing something from its Treasury. From the ponderous Steel Trust down to the most obscure promoter in the land, and embracing everything within the two extremes, the call for preparedness has found a ready response. Everything that has heretofore been used in war or in peace, everything else that the imagination can conjure into material form, from cannon to cradles, from battleships to nursing bottles, has volunteered for the occasion. They are in the training camps, and will soon be in the trenches, preparing to besiege Congress and march through its portals into the National Treasury. Men who view with terror the awful spectacle of The Battle Cry of Peace rush frantically to their typewriter and prepare bills for construction, destruction, erection, and demolition, all in the interest of defense and through the medium of appropriations. We are beset with schemes and devices which will keep us out of war, which will make our success certain in the event of war, which will preserve peace with honor and prevent peace with dishonor. Let us prepare while money is in the Treasury and prepare also to make the supply perennial.

Mr. President, if one-half of these assaults actual and contemplated upon the Treasury were successful, our people could make money by buying its security from other nations. We would save vastly by the process. I am not apprehensive of extreme results from this new avenue of approach to the public crib, yet I have no doubt that, pursuing our present methods of financial legislation, much additional money will be devoted to the demands of localities which can not very effectually subserve a military end. This, too, will become for the most part a permanent burden, tending to enlarge as the years accumulate.

And, Mr. President, the most conservative among us know that our inevitable Army and Navy increases will add from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 per annum to our fixed expenditures, a sum to provide which added taxation is inevitable. How that money shall be raised is the problem of the majority. Taxation is always unpopular. None of our military and naval advisers have suggested any plan of revenue, but are not at all anxious that any plan should include them. Is this the time to commit the Nation to a system of public road building of which the sum of $75,000,000 provided by this bill is but the faint beginning?

We can not delude ourselves with the notion that this bill is or will be the last word upon the subject. It is the entering wedge. We propose to act conjointly with the States, which must contract for and assume their proportion of expenditure. But the States, or some of them, will surely assert before very long that the enterprise is national in scope and character; that the States are unjustly burdened with a financial responsibility for the development and maintenance of a continental project, and that all their resources are demanded for the payment of purely State obligations. The challenge will be heard all over the land. All the Commonwealths will join in the movement, and the road system of the country will become a part of the Federal administration upkeep and extension. This will mean, not a paltry $75,000,000 but many times that amount, an obligation which can not be avoided, but ever increasing in its exactions. This may be the better method for the States and the people. If so let us frankly recognize it and then inquire whether on the threshold of the most lavish appropriations ever made by any nation in times of peace, we should now take up this work. What man of affairs, what nation but ours would even seriously consider such a fatuous proposition?

Moreover, Mr. President, we must remember that the administration of this bill will call into being a small and always growing army of Government engineers, inspectors, overseers, gang bosses, workmen, accountants, and office holders scattered like locusts over the face of the land drawing salaries and doing little else. Once called into existence they become immortal. We may create but we can not recall a public official. There he is a thing of beauty and a joy forever. And this bill is so framed as to require the creation of two sets of officers to perform the same duties, the one State the other National. They may clash but they will not resign. The law will not execute itself. The Federal Government can not execute that of the State, the State can not perform that of the Nation. They must cooperate. This is wasteful, extravagant, and inefficient, but it is the way we propose to do business if this bill shall become a law.

The House has passed two other measures, one for rivers and harbors, the other for flood prevention, carrying approximately a hundred millions in appropriations. Others will be launched in due season. Senators, do we not realize that revenue must be provided for these appropriations; that there is a limit to the burdens of taxation, and that the very interests clamoring for these expenditures will be the first to rend us when the day of reckoning comes?

Vast as our general supply bills are, we are compelled with every new session to supplement them with deficiency bills—some urgent, others when convenient. We have committees on expenditures in the various departments, which never meet. We neither know nor care how the public moneys are expended. I make no charges, even by indirection, although it is somewhat remarkable that we deem our duties at an end when we have voted the public moneys, and take it for granted that they are properly disbursed.

Economy in public affairs is the trite expression of a very salutary maxim. Both parties repeat it like parrots, or rather like children who are taken with catchy phrases, without comprehending their import. Economy in public affairs is dead everywhere. Nation, State, and city have turned it down. Our aggregate public debt may not be as large as that of England or Germany, but it is appalling. Our children must arrange for its liquidation. We have mortgaged them beyond redemption. They are helpless unless their sense of injustice shall become stronger than their sense of obligation and they shall refuse to perfom what others have imposed upon them. We declare that we will economize some time somewhere. Why not now? Why not here? There must be a commencement, and I am very sure that the people, informed of our purpose and the occasion for it, will commend and support us. They never fail to approve good public service when they perceive it to be courageous and genuine. They will follow when leaders exhibit the qualities of leadership and when they lead in the right direction. And leadership—genuine, disinterested, capable leadership—was never needed at the Nation's Capital more than it is now.

Mr. President, the most deplorable aspect of our political condition is the tendency, aye, the willingness, of the States to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. Their sovereignty they barter away for appropriations to be expended within their boundaries upon objects of purely State concern. Their duties, so necessary to the independence and welfare of their citizens, they delegate to the Nation for money rather than assume the burden of their exercise. Their rights they willingly surrender in exchange for the Nation's gold. Time was when every reserved right was zealously cherished and respected; when every local duty was performed with ardent alacrity; when the Federal Government was confined to the sphere of its delegated authority. But our material development and the accumulation of enormous wealth has weakened the moral fiber of our sisterhood of sovereignties as it has changed the hearts and the spiritual natures of man. The Government has become a thing from which we may derive support and material advantage. We were created for it and it must care for us. We belong to it and it must therefore support us. It is paternal, protective, nourishing; no longer a means to an end, but an end in itself. This may be due to a law of political evolution from whose operation we can not escape, but if so the conceptions of the fathers were profoundly wrong.

Our late colleague, the distinguished Senator from Georgia, often spoke of himself as an ambassador from his State. I am prone to believe that this conception of a Senator's position is more accurate than it should be. We are, generally speaking, United States Senators when, and only when, we act upon or consider external problems. We are, generally speaking, Senators from our respective States when we act upon or consider affairs of domestic concern. We are more interested in what we can secure for our immediate constituencies from the Federal Government than we are in protecting and safeguarding the latter from the exactions of those who send us here. This means that we are becoming less and less the guardians and representatives of national authority and more and more the agents and attorneys of our respective constituencies. No man can serve two masters. Many have tried to do this and all have failed. What the country needs is Senators and Representatives whose first duty is to the Nation; whose vision reaches beyond their own localities and is bounded by the horizon of the Republic; whose fealty to the Federal Government is their strongest impulse; who place the general welfare, the national interests, the national affairs above and beyond all others; who serve their States by serving the whole people; who are neither ambassadors nor delegates, but everywhere and at all times the trustees and depositaries of a legislative function created and designed to subserve the East, the West, the North, and the South alike, each and all the equal and inseparable constituents of the same Republic. When this conception of duty shall have become the standard by which our actions and our policies are measured the Treasury will cease to be a grab bag for greedy schemes of greedy communities for public extravagance and private relief, and the money of the people, cheerfully paid through taxation for public purposes, will be wisely appropriated and honestly expended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Are there any amendments pending to the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the committee reported as a substitute.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I call for a quorum. I know the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] desires to speak, and also the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], and I am going to speak myself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that when a quorum appears I shall renew my request, perhaps in another form, for consent to vote upon the bill at a stated time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Owen	Sutherland
Bankhead	Hollis	Page	Swanson
Borah	Husting	Phelan	Taggart
Broussard	Johnson, Me.	Pittman	Thomas
Burleigh	Johnson, S. Dak.	Pomerene	Thompson
Chamberlain	Jones	Reed	Tillman
Chilton	Kenyon	Robinson	Townsend
Clapp	Lane	Saulsbury	Underwood
Culberson	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Cummins	Lippitt	Sheppard	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lodge	Simmons	Warren
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Harding	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.
Hardwick	Overman	Smoot

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to renew my request to fix a time that the Senate shall vote on the bill and amendments. Inasmuch as my suggestion of 5 o'clock this evening was objected to, I am going to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to agree to vote on the bill and amendments not later than 8 o'clock this evening.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this bill is of very great importance; it carries an enormous appropriation; is has been discussed one day. There are a number of Senators on this side who desire to discuss it. I know the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has amendments which he wishes to offer and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] has an amendment. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] desires to speak and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] desires to speak. The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] told me that he wishes to speak, and I should like to say a little myself. I do not think it is possible to agree to-day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I suggest that not later than 12 o'clock this evening——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I object. I can not agree to any agreement for a vote to-day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator from Massachusetts objects I wish to suggest to the Senator from Alabama if he will make a request to vote on Monday, say, at 5 o'clock on Monday, I think very likely it will be agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will make that request. I will ask that not later than 5 o'clock on Monday next the Senate shall vote on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the hour indicated by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. At 5 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think this is too soon to undertake to fix a time for taking a vote on the bill. It is a bill of enormous importance. It is committing this country to a policy which is going to cost hundreds of millions, in my opinion, and I think we ought to have at least two or three days to consider it. I do not feel ready to agree to a time now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, it is my present purpose to vote for this bill if it assumes a form that will commend itself to me, and I apprehend it will, but I think the Senator from Alabama is not wise in undertaking to get an agreement at the present time. I have a few inconsequential amendments myself that I want to offer to the bill and I may have a few words to say in support of them.

In fact, Mr. President, as I suggested the other day, I think we ought to know something about what the program is to be for this session before we continue to legislate by unanimous consent. If we are to be kept here, as I said, until July, we might as well remain here until December. I have noticed that in another place where our program of legislation seems to be made out for the Senate there are enough bills to keep us here certainly until harvest time. I think we had better look that over pretty carefully before we conclude to rush bills through at an inordinate speed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. Can the Senator suggest a time when he would be willing to have the vote taken?

Mr. LODGE. No; Mr. President. I said that I think this is too soon. The bill has been up only one day. I am not willing to make any agreement at this time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator is mistaken. The bill has been before the Senate for three days.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware that it had been under discussion for three days.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With to-day it is.

Mr. LODGE. There have been several other things done in the last three days.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, of course we are in a situation where we can not help ourselves. I am going to ask the friends of the bill to stay in session to-night until we, perhaps, may be able to reach some sort of an agreement as to when a vote shall be taken.

Mr. GALLINGER. As one friend of the bill I will not stay in session to-night if I can prevent it; and I suggest to my good friend from Alabama that he is forcing this measure at too great a speed. I do not think he would gain anything by undertaking to hold us in session to-night.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I appreciate what the Senator says. He has suggested on one or two occasions that he would like to know what the program is. I will state and state very frankly to the Senate the difficulty that we are in. When the bill was taken up for consideration it was agreed by the steering committee and the Senator who has charge of the rural-credits bill that I should have three days in the Senate for the purpose of considering the bill, and if during the three days we were unable to get a vote on it then I agreed to lay it aside and give the right of way to the rural-credits bill.

Now, that is the situation we are in. If the bill is displaced owing to the continuous objection that is made, while I have no disposition to hurry it as far as I am concerned, I do not know when we will be able to get the consideration of the bill again in the Senate. That is the reason why I insist, as far as I can, that we shall have some disposition made of the bill during the three days.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator at what time did he consent to lay the bill aside?

Mr. BANKHEAD. At the end of this calendar day.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Of course, the Senator knows it is impossible to pass it to-night in that short length of time; but I wish to say that this bill is one of very great importance to the American people.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, it is also known by the Senate that to-morrow is to be devoted to the consideration of the conference report on the sugar bill, and of course we would have no time to-morrow, even if I should get the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was about to remark, Mr. President, that so far as my very limited influence goes I am going to insist that some legislation on this subject shall be enacted by this Congress, whether it be to-day or to-morrow or next week. It is a matter in which the people of the United States are very greatly interested. I do not know of any measure that would contribute more to the material well-being of that class of the American people, whose labor feeds and clothes the world, than legislation which tends to encourage and promote public-road building.

I shall have something to say on the bill a little bit later, but I do not care this afternoon to discuss at length the bill. I hope it may not lose its place to-day, but I do not think any special advantage will be gained by remaining in session to-night. The bill can not be passed until the Senate has an opportunity to discuss it, and loaf around it, and think on it, and consume time about it, as is the rule of procedure in the Senate. I see no necessity for trying to press it to final passage at this time, unless we had two or three days ahead of us. I want it understood that I am very much interested in the measure, and I think Congress ought to enact this measure, or a measure similar to this, before this session adjourns. Failure to do so will be falling far short of meeting what I regard an important duty.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, of course I have the greatest respect for the arrangements made by the steering committee of the Democratic Party, and I realize their power; but it is not to be pretended, of course, that their arrangements bind the Senate of the United States. Though I dislike extremely to interfere in any way with any agreements that have been made, I think the rest of us in the Senate have some rights still left—not many, but some.

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] that there is not the slightest danger of this bill failing to pass. Any bill that takes as much money out of the Treasury as this bill proposes to do and distributes it to local interests and to different States, and for local purposes, never fails. It is certain to pass; there is no trouble about that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am in hopes that the Senator from Massachusetts is a prophet now.

Mr. LODGE. I did not catch the Senator's remark.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I say I am in hopes the Senator is speaking the words of prophecy. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. LODGE. If I may quote something that happened to me when I was a new Member in the other House—more years ago than I care to define—I asked Mr. Hitt, of Illinois, when the river and harbor bill was brought in, if the bill would pass. He said, "Pass! Why, this is the one bill that is certain to pass; it is made to pass." The bills that are "made to pass," with great local appropriations in them to be taken out of the United States Treasury, always pass. There is no danger whatever to this bill; but there are some of us who would like to offer our feeble objections to it, and to point out what seem to us defects in the measure. There are several Senators also who desire to offer amendments to the bill, and I do not think we ought to be cut off from that privilege because some agreement has been made about another bill under a program of which we know nothing. All we know is that there are certain measures that must be passed to carry on the Government—the great appropriation bills and bills for additional taxation. Those bills must pass; but those bills seem to be pushed to one side, in order to get through a number of bills that are "made to pass."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything in reference to this bill, for I wished to conserve time and give the bill an opportunity to get through to-day; but as it appears that it will not have the opportunity to pass the Senate to-day I wish to make a statement, in order that the RECORD may show that I favor the passage of the bill.

I think this is a good bill. It is well drawn, and it properly distributes the appropriations and the burdens between the local communities, the States, and the Federal Government. I do not think, however, that is the main problem that confronts the country. I believe in the State governments exercising those rights and powers which belong to them and that have not been delegated to the Federal Government, and I do not believe in the Central Government interfering with those powers.

On the other hand, the States, when this Government was organized, delegated certain powers to the Central Government at Washington. I believe that, so far as the exercise of those powers is concerned, this Government should be a virile, forceful Government; that it is just as much in violation of the rights of the individual States for the Federal Government to refuse to exercise in the interest of the American people a power that has been delegated to it by the States as it is an infringement of the rights of the States for the Federal Government to go within the jurisdiction of the several States and attempt to exercise powers that belong to the States.

There was a clear delegation of power when the Federal Constitution was adopted in the clause which authorized the Federal Government to establish post offices and post roads. If anyone should assume to say that the States of this Union should exercise the authority to carry on a postal system, or that the States of this Union should bear the burden of carrying on a postal system, the proposition would be repudiated at once; and yet the same clause that authorizes the Federal Government to establish post offices also gives it the authority to establish post roads.

That authority was recognized in the very beginning of the Government. In the early days of the Government one of the great questions that confronted the Congress of the United States was the establishment of Federal post roads. In fact, large appropriations for that time were made to build roads extending across the country, one running from the State of Maryland out to the Mississippi River through the Central Western States. So there can be no question that the Federal Government has the right to establish post roads, and that it has exercised that right in the past.

It is true that the invention of the steam engine and the building of railroads diverted the attention of the American people and of the Government from the necessity of having good post roads; the power was not exercised for many years by the Federal Government, and the interest in Congress languished in reference to this question.

I believe, Mr. President, that transportation is the key that unlocks the door of commerce, and that outside of the liberty of the American people there is no matter that is of such vital interest to them as a successful commerce. We have spent a great deal of money in this country in the regulation of railroads, a great deal of money in endeavoring to secure equitable and just rates of transportation on railroads. Why? Because it was in the interest of commerce and the development of commerce for the American people between the several States. If you destroy the facilities of commerce you destroy local development and local industry. If you facilitate the distribution of commerce you build up local industry and local development.

It has been shown that there is more commerce moved on local roads than there is nation-wide commerce. A great deal of the commerce that is moved on the local roads is moved over dirt roads. It has been stated in publications by the Agricultural Department some years ago that the average cost of hauling a ton of freight a mile on the average dirt road in the United States was 25 cents a ton. On good, hard macadam roads the cost can be reduced below 8 cents a ton. Therefore to encourage the building of hard roads for the transportation of the freight of the country is of vital importance to the people of the United States.

It has been said here in debate that the States themselves are building good roads; that there is no necessity for the Federal Government to intervene; that there is no requirement for Federal aid. Well, that may be true in some of the great, rich States in America; but even in those States it has been found that the State must grant aid, because there are poor communities in those States that can not bear the burden of carrying the roads through those communities, and they must have the aid of the State in order that the roads may reach the marts to which commerce is going.

The same is true as to the Nation. There are many States and many communities in which, without aid from the National Government or the State governments, it would be impossible for them to construct roads. If your roads are not going to be continuous and go through poor communities as well as rich ones, they will be of little value.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the Senator not to interrupt me until I finish this thought.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If what I have stated is true, there is a very good reason for the passage of this bill or some other bill that will grant national aid for road building.

The whole history of the building of roads in the civilized world has demonstrated the fact that there has never been a great system of roads built in any country until the government of that country stood behind it in some way. In England for more than a century they attempted to develop their roads through local effort, but it was not until Parliament itself made supplemental appropriations—which, I am informed, now in most cases reach half of the cost of the road—that a great system of turnpikes was built. The same is true in France. The greatest system of good roads in the world is now in the Republic of France. It is true that in France the National Government does not appropriate for local roads, but the National Government carries the greater part of the burden for the national highways extending through that Republic.

The need for Government aid is equally apparent here today. If the Government of the United States makes an appropriation and holds it out to the States and the local communities that by giving State aid and local aid they can secure a part of the money to build these great highways, local communities will bid for the opportunity to get them. It will arouse a public sentiment. It is not the mere number of dollars expended that will be valuable, but you will awaken a public sentiment in each community that it may be served and aided with this Government appropriation instead of some other community. You will build up a sentiment, and it is the only way in which you can build up a sentiment that ultimately will build throughout all of the States in the Union a system of highways that can serve the interests of the people.

I do not intend to make any extended remarks to-day, Mr. President. I wish merely to register my approval of this bill and to state in a few sentences why I believe it should be passed now.

So far as the statement that was made a few moments ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is concerned, in reference to the great public bills that must be passed, the revenue bills and appropriation bills to carry on the Government, he is eminently correct; but to-day we have none of those bills on the calendar; there are none now waiting here for consideration. They will come from the other end of the Capitol; and when they do come they will have to be given consideration and bills of this kind will have to be pushed aside; but now, when they are not here, when they are not knocking at our door for consideration, I think the Government of the United States, acting through this Congress, will be neglecting its duty to the American people if it does not insist on the exercise of its constitutional power, which it has neglected in the past, by pushing this bill—one of the few bills now before the Congress of the United States which is intended not for the help of the great and the wealthy or strong corporations of great power, but for the upbuilding of local communities and for the aid of the men who, in the end, bear the great burdens of our Government and make our country, both in times of war and in times of peace, a possibility as a Republic.

This bill, if it becomes a law, will afford the men who live on the farm in many of the States of this Union an opportunity to live happy lives instead of hard lives; it will enable them readily to find profitable markets for the products of their labor and their soil; whereas to-day, by reason of their isolated condition on impassable roads, they are required to struggle in poverty and distress. I hope, if this bill can not be considered to-day, if the Senate of the United States is unprepared to continue the consideration of this bill, that an opportunity at some time when it will not be sidetracked for the great Government supply bills, will be given for its full and careful consideration, and its enactment into law before this session of Congress adjourns.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a good many years ago, when I was a Member of the House of Representatives, I introduced a bill appropriating $25,000,000 per annum out of the Federal Treasury to aid the States in the construction of good roads. The time was not then ripe for the legislation. Even at that time a great many things were said about the constitutionality of legislation such as this.

There are two bases upon which Federal jurisdiction for building good roads may constitutionally rest. One is the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution. Very early in our history the Congress of the United States, at that time containing very many members of the then recent Constitutional Convention, passed an appropriation to construct the Cumberland Road, as it was called, which was intended to go from tidewater on the Atlantic to the Ohio River; and as strict a constructionist as John C. Calhoun took the position that the Federal Government had a right to build that road. James Madison, Jefferson, and a great many of the early fathers of Democracy also took the position that there was a Federal jurisdiction. Subsequently the Democratic Party, becoming somewhat more strict in its construction of the Constitution, took the position—under Andrew Jackson's presidency, I believe—that the constitutional right did not exist, although Mr. Monroe prior to that vetoed one good-roads bill, but upon grounds which were not at variance with the position taken by the earlier fathers. That is one of the two bases to rest Federal constitutional authority upon. The other is upon the post office and post roads clause of the Constitution.

It is a curiosity of political literature that under the clause of the Constitution which gives to Congress the right to "establish post offices and post roads" it was very early contended that the right to construct a post office flowed necessarily from the right to establish it; that it not merely meant that the Government could rent a house for the purpose of keeping a post office in it and putting a postmaster there, but that the Federal Government could build the post office; and yet, although the language of the Constitution was "to establish post offices and post roads," both being in the same clause and running pari passu, a great many people who thus contended for the right to build or construct a post office denied the right to construct a post road.

This bill, Mr. President, so far as I have been able to examine it, contains nothing except provisions to improve the post roads and post routes; so that the constitutional power is undoubted, undeniable, obvious, plain, and palpable.

Now, having gotten the authority, I want to say just a few words about the connection between good roads and civilization. From the dawn of time every nation that ever reached anything like world power or ever approximated it or ever developed a civilization of its own was a country that was signalized in its time, in comparison with others, by the existence of good roads within its area. In the very early days the Assyrian Empire and the Persian Empire were celebrated amongst other peoples for their comparatively good roads. Babylonians and Assyrians went so far as to raise their roads in the Mesopotamian Valley, and to build them upon what we now call "levees." Everybody knows the history of good roads in the Roman Empire, and everybody knows that a great part of the weakness of Greece and of the Grecian or Macedonian Empire in Asia arose from the fact that they did not have good roads. Rome built good roads everywhere; and it was an old saying that "every road led to Rome."

There was a road that went all the way from Rome to Colonia, the Roman colony, the modern Cologne. I have myself walked afoot, not having money enough to ride at the time while traveling in Europe, over what is called the Koblenzer Strasse, which practically begins at Cologne, I think, but runs, at any rate, from Bonn along up to Coblenz, on the Rhine. That road has been kept in repair from time to time, but it is substantially the old Roman road.

I might refer to the old Appian Way, in Italy, and to a great many other roads in what was called the Provincia, in France, or ancient Gaul, now modern Provence, in southern France. The Romans built splendid roads everywhere very early in the history of their possession of southern Gaul, even before they had taken possession of middle and northern Gaul. So that wherever there has ever been any people who ever proximated a civilization, a self-developed civilization, a characteristic civilization of any sort, good roads have accompanied that civilization.

Good roads are all the more connected with civilization in modern times, because over them the children go to good schools; whereas in the old time that was one use for a modern good road that did then not exist. In the main, in the old times the roads were constructed for the purpose of enabling the armed forces in the empire to have ready access to the provinces and to be able to meet enemies upon the border. All the roads of Rome were strategic roads, and commerce grew up upon the road, so that the road was the cause of the commerce rather than the existence of the commerce the cause of the construction of the road. But with us we have not only the strategic military reason, which is national, the interstate-commerce reason, which is national, the post-road reason, which is Federal, but the other reason which I have mentioned, which is educational. In addition to that, we have the economic reason, which was so fully dwelt upon by the Senator from Alabama that I shall not dwell upon it any more. It is true that there can be no interstate commerce of any great power unless there be good roads for a local commerce forming connecting links upon which the interstate commerce is founded, nor can there be any great international commerce except for the intrastate commerce of the various countries which form the family of nations.

I wanted to say these few words in general commendation of the purposes of the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I just want to ask the Senator from Alabama a question or two upon a point raised in a letter which I have received.

I have a letter calling attention to the language on page 11 of the bill from lines 19 to 22, and also the language on page 12 commencing in line 13 and ending after the word "span," in line 15. The letter says this, and I will just ask the Senator about it:

> The proposed bill, as amended by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, in section 6, page 11, commencing at line 19, contains the following:
> "The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof."
> In the same section, on page 12, commencing at line 13, it is stated:
> "Nor shall any such payment be in excess of $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span."
> While it is true that there might not be possible a misinterpretation applied to the language, still, in order that there may be no possible meaning read into the bill other than what is intended, we are constrained to suggest that in order to make secure the meaning beyond the possibility of doubt, that the last above quoted lines be eliminated entirely, and that in lieu of the first above quoted language there be inserted in its place, commencing at line 19, page 11, section 6, the following, namely:
> "The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside as the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project a sum not exceeding $10,000 per mile, and which shall not exceed 50 per centum of the total estimated cost thereof, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet clear span."

That is the amendment they suggest; and then they say this:

> We wish to avoid a possible limitation of $10,000 per mile for the construction of roads under this bill, by the terms of which the Government will share in its cost.

I wanted to ask the Senator from Alabama whether he fears that there could be any construction of that sort of the language of the bill? As I understand the bill, it simply provides that no matter what the cost of the road may be, whether $25,000, $30,000, or $40,000 a mile, the National Government can contribute up to $10,000 a mile, but not beyond that; that anything beyond that the State would have to provide for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is the way I construe it.

Mr. JONES. I do not believe, myself, that there is any doubt in regard to the construction of the bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES. But this letter came from some very responsible people, and I wanted to get the Senator's view about it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think there is a particle of doubt but that the Senator's construction is correct.

Mr. JONES. And that there is nothing in the bill that would prevent the State authorities, acting with the Secretary of Agriculture, from adopting the plan or project where the cost per mile would be more than even $20,000?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, I think not.

Mr. JONES. There is just simply a limitation upon the amount which the Federal Government contributes toward it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is it.

Mr. JONES. All right.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the question as to the constitutionality of this bill has been raised, but I have never had any doubt about the power of the Federal Government to aid in the construction of public highways. I think it is fair to say that this authority will be conceded by most of those who have investigated the subject.

As a matter of policy I am also in favor of Federal aid. There is much force in the statement that if we are to rely wholly upon the local authorities the day when we can have improved highways to the centers of population is going to be long deferred. At the same time I believe that this country is so large, the road mileage so enormous, the interests of the various localities so great, that the larger part of this work must be done by the State and other local authorities.

My belief is that while we can not or ought not to set any particular limit as to the amount in dollars and cents which the Federal Government will spend, whatever of aid we do give should be upon such terms and conditions that it will encourage to the maximum the local authorities to make these improvements. As the Congress, we are interested not only in having good roads but in increasing the mileage of good roads, and I fear that if we should seek to make the entire improvement, or even to pay one-half the cost of an improvement, we would not be encouraging the local authorities to the same extent that we would if we should reduce the proportion of the cost which the Federal Government would invest in these several improvements.

I very much regretted that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] did not carry, because I believe that if this Government should pay only 25 per cent of the cost of permanently improved roads at the end of 10 years we would have more mileage of permanently improved highways than we will have if the Federal funds are so distributed as to pay 50 per cent of that cost; and at the proper time I propose to offer an amendment, in view of the fact that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska failed, to change the 50 per cent limit to a 33⅓ per cent limit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator a question, so that he may consider it, if it is entitled to consideration. Is the argument of the Senator from Ohio from the standpoint that the counties and the States will not expend 3 or 5 or 10 times as much money, perhaps, upon their own account without any contribution on the part of the United States; or does he think that they are going to rely entirely upon the contribution made by the United States, and only put up their proportionate part of that?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very glad to say that many of the States, including my own, during the last four or five years have gone ahead regardless of any Federal aid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true.

Mr. POMERENE. But there are localities that will not go on with these improvements unless they get a certain amount of encouragement; and my belief is that if we are going to go to the extent of furnishing one-half of the cost of an improvement, to that extent we are going to discourage permanent improvements.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will pardon another suggestion——

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator, then, is proceeding on the theory that there are States that will content themselves with making an appropriation equal to that made by the Federal Government for the improvement of the roads, and there will stop, and they will not go any further than that, and that they will not make any appropriation outside of that. Is that the theory?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my thought, in brief is this: That, if I may use the word, we will tempt States to build more miles of road if we limit the proportion of the funds furnished by the Federal Government to 25 per cent of the cost than we will if we increase the limit to 50 per cent. That is my judgment. It is purely a problematical question. No one can say definitely that this is going to be the result or that is going to be the result. I am simply giving my individual judgment in this matter.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me just one moment——

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to make a suggestion. I have the honor of representing in this Chamber, in part, a State that is not classed among the rich States of America. Our population is largely rural.

Mr. POMERENE. It is rich in its Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is very kind of the Senator from Ohio. I am glad he said that, whether he meant it or not.

Mr. POMERENE. I certainly meant it, otherwise I should not have said it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It makes my soul blossom out like a cauliflower. But I want to say to the Senator that whereas under the terms of this bill the State of Mississippi will receive $91,000 the first year, one small county in that State, with a little city of 5,000 people, has recently issued bonds, I am advised, to the amount of a half million dollars to build roads. I relate that fact in order that the Senator may know that the States are not going to limit their appropriations or their disbursements proportionate to the amount of money that the Federal Government gives; but there are remote counties where the people are not able to pay the expense and far away from the railroads, most sparsely settled, where the States will use the money contributed by the General Government for the construction of a road. Whatever this Congress may do, it is not going to put a damper upon their enthusiasm in road building at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, my thought is that if this Government were to give $100,000 to the State of Mississippi or to the State of Ohio, with a condition attached that they should build 25 miles of permanently improved highways, there would be 25 miles built. If it was to be expended upon 10 miles, the chances are that there would be 10 miles, and 10 miles only, built. Now, that is all I care to say upon that subject; but there is another thought I had in mind which I wish to call to the attention of the committee, and I think the Senator from Washington has referred somewhat to it, though I was not able to hear him distinctly.

A limitation of $10,000 per mile in cost is placed in the bill. In my own State we are building many highways and paving them with a vitrified shale street paving brick. The cost, as I was informed a few years ago, of these roads for a width of about 14 feet amounts to about $15,000 per mile. I am not quite sure that I understand the phraseology; but if this bill is to go through with the 50 per cent limitation it may be that these appropriations would not be available for the State of Ohio on these roads which cost in excess of $10,000 a mile. If that is true, I feel that there ought to be some modification of the bill in that behalf, so that every State may get the benefit of the funds intended for it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. JONES. The point that was made in the letter I read from a moment ago and submitted to the Senator from Alabama was that there was some ambiguity in the language of the bill. The correspondent was afraid that under the language of the bill the United States would contribute $10,000 per mile, and that if the road cost more than, say, $20,000 a mile, it could not be built.

Mr. POMERENE. With Federal aid.

Mr. JONES. With Federal aid. My understanding of the language of the bill is that the United States contributes up to $10,000 a mile toward the construction of the road—that is the maximum contribution per mile—and that if the road should cost $25,000 per mile, then the State would have to put up the additional amount; but that the mere fact that it costs $25,000 a mile would not prevent its being taken up by the Government and the State under the terms of the bill, and in that the chairman of the committee concurs. Of course, if there is any doubt with reference to that, I think it ought to be made perfectly clear; and that is what my correspondent desired.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the construction which the Senator from Washington has placed upon this language is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think that construction was not right. I have received many letters, as no doubt many other Senators have, from brick manufacturers who are very much interested in this question; and when I first began to receive these letters I replied and stated my view of it—that the provision in this bill, of course, limited the national appropriation to $10,000 a mile, but if the community, the State or the county, wanted to build a road that cost $30,000 a mile, there is nothing at all in this bill to prevent them from putting up $20,000 as against the $10,000 that the Government puts up. Recently I have received a number of letters from these gentlemen saying that they quite concur in my view of it. They thought that was the proper construction of the law.

Mr. POMERENE. The question has been raised and discussed very seriously by some of my correspondents.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; no doubt.

Mr. POMERENE. And I am quite sure that the sentiment in my own State is such now that road building is going to go on whether they get Federal aid or not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is going on everywhere.

Mr. POMERENE. But I am heartily in sympathy with the purpose of this bill, and I am very glad to say that I think this is one of the best framed bills on this subject that I have seen.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. There is another feature, however, in which, it seems to me, the bill ought to be modified, and when I say this I recognize the fact that the language of the bill pretty well conserves the public funds. But we are interested in permanent road building. I am personally opposed to taking Federal funds to fill mudholes, as has been the object of some bills that have been before the Senate for consideration in the past. My thought is that this language should be further limited—it may be in general terms—so as to define the character and extent of the permanent improvement which is to be made before Federal funds will be available therefor. For instance, it may be a macadamized road. In the State of Massachusetts they have some peculiar rock, which they oil, and that forms practically a macadam. In different sections of the country there are different classes of material, and many of them high-class materials, but it seems to me that under the phraseology of this bill we are conferring absolutely upon the Secretary of Agriculture the authority to say the kind and character of improvement to which these funds may be applied. It might be, as I construe this language, that even if it were a mere scraping of the earth to the center of the highway and making a gutter on either side, that would be a roadway to which the Secretary of Agriculture could apply Federal aid. If that is true, I think it is going further than we ought to go.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio further yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We discussed that very question very thoroughly, and we conferred more than once with the Secretary of Agriculture and the representatives of the Good Roads Division of the Agricultural Department, and we were unable to devise any plan or to use any language that we thought would be more easily understood than the language embodied in the bill.

In the first place, the State highway commission, or the road authorities of the State, must select the route for the road to be constructed under the provisions of this bill. They must make the plans for the road. They must declare what the material is to be, and how it shall be constructed. That is the first requirement. Then, after that is done, it is submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture for his approval. I do not think the Federal Government ought to appropriate money and turn it over to a State simply to be used as the State might care to use it for the construction of inferior roads or the repair of roads or anything of that sort. But when these plans and specifications and estimated costs are submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture by the road authorities of the State highway commission, where they have one, and where they have no State highway commission by the recognized road authorities of the State, and the Secretary of Agriculture passes upon them, I hardly think he would approve a plan that was not proper and that would not result in the construction of a reasonably good road, at least. And certainly, Mr. President, under the provisions of the bill none of this money can be appropriated or used for repairs of any sort. That is absolutely excluded from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I appreciate that fact, and I think it is one of the very favorable points in the bill; but let me ask the Senator whether he does not agree with me that these appropriations should be limited to what might be classed as permanent improvements?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That would depend upon what the Senator thought were permanent improvements.

Mr. POMERENE. Very true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If he thinks a macadam road is the only permanent improvement that can be made, I can not agree with him.

Mr. POMERENE. No; I simply gave that by way of illustration. There are many other kinds of road improvements which may be of a permanent and lasting character. But let me ask the Senator whether he does not feel that under the language of this bill, if the improvement intended to be made was simply scraping the earth up toward the middle of the highway and perhaps rolling it afterwards and leaving a gutter on either side, the Secretary of Agriculture would be justified in applying these Federal funds to an improvement of that kind?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think so, Mr. President. In the first place, I do not think any State highway commission or the road authorities in any State will agree to appropriate their money for one-half of the cost of the improvement of such a road as the Senator suggests. In my State, and in nearly every other State, there are gravel roads, what we call sand and clay roads, and in a number of places, of course, there are surfaced roads or macadam roads; but that all depends upon the conditions and the requirements of commerce and the necessity for it. Of course the Senator understands that we can not build surfaced roads all over the country; and he does not expect that, and he says so.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator and I perhaps are not very far apart in this matter, if I understand him correctly; but the difference between us is this: The Senator from Alabama is willing to leave to the Secretary of Agriculture the entire authority upon this subject.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. POMERENE. Let us see what the language of the bill is.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This thing must originate with the State authorities.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am willing to leave it to them to initiate—that is my point—believing that they would not come to the Secretary of Agriculture with the suggestion that he appropriate half the money to build a road unless it is a properly built road, because they are going to spend their money upon the same project.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the fact that the Senator entertains that high degree of faith in the State authorities, what objection is there to placing in the bill a limitation which will more carefully define their authority?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to suggest the language that he could employ in this bill to meet his views? Will he suggest it?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is apparent that this bill is not going to pass to-day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that.

Mr. POMERENE. And I wanted to get the views of the Senator, because I think I shall prepare an amendment along this line. It is true that under the plan of this bill the specifications and surveys and plans and estimates are to be furnished by the State authorities; but there is nothing placing any limitation upon the kind of plans, the kind of specifications, the kind of materials, or the character of the improvement which may be the subject of Federal aid; and the Secretary of Agriculture has these plans and specifications submitted to him under this language:

> That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its State highway department, submit to the Secretary of Agriculture project statements setting forth proposed construction of any rural post road or roads therein.

And he can approve them, and under the language of this bill every project for even a clay road might be approved by him, and this money could be expended for that purpose and for no other, if he wanted to be arbitrary about it. I do not believe he would be, but it seems to me there should be some further limitation defining the general character of the highways which might receive these appropriations from the Federal Government. Under the language of the bill he would be well within his authority if he decided to apply all the money to improvements of an inferior grade.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator from Ohio think it possible that the State highway commission and the Secretary of Agriculture would possibly agree upon the expenditure of money in the way that he has expressed fear that they might, for some temporary makeshift or unsubstantial kind of a road? If the Senator will permit me a moment further, you will have to trust somebody. There must be some latitude. Some discretion must be vested in somebody in order to make the law workable at all. I think that, in discussing this question all the way through, Senators make a mistake in indulging the presumption that the State authorities are not going to do their duty just as every other officer ordinarily does his duty. The Congress has not a corner on all the honesty, patriotism, and good judgment in America. Some of those good qualities are possessed outside of the sacred precincts of the National Halls of State.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have enough faith in human nature to believe that if we would turn a portion of this money over to the State authorities without any limitation, without any security, they would be true to their trust. I would trust 90 per cent of the State, county, city, and township treasurers without any bond or security whatever, but I would regard it as most unwise legislation to say that because those men are honest we should not have any security from anyone.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I quite agree with the Senator, and if it would not disturb him I should like to make this suggestion: There is no provision in the bill, to my mind, which compels the State authorities to do what is proper for a good surface road, but after it has been built by the State and the Government, then the maintenance of the road devolves exclusively upon the State. Therefore when they make their plans and specifications and contract to build their road it is to their interest, of course, to see that the road is properly constructed, so that the maintenance will be as light as possible in the future.

Mr. POMERENE. That is an exceptionally good provision in the bill, but I still think it should go further and define in general terms the kind of road on which Federal funds may be expended so as to encourage to the utmost permanent road building.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him just there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. POMERENE. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama if he has not finished his statement.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to state that the committee having charge of the bill are perfectly willing to accept any amendment that will improve it and make it a better bill than it is. We are not particular as to the language of the bill; we want the best bill we can get, and if the Senator is not satisfied with the provision of the bill as it is, let him prepare his amendment and we will consider it, and if it is an improvement we will be glad to accept it.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought it opportune to bring this subject up, so that all of us could consider it. I have no particular plan in mind, but I do think there should be some limitation upon this language.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that it would not be wise to make the rule as to the material to be used in the construction of the roads inflexible, because there are certain materials that can be had with very much less cost, making practically as good a road as other materials that are remote. You have to take all those questions into consideration, and that is one reason why I said that great latitude ought to be given the road commission in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, so that the question of topography, the formation of the soil, and all those things of vital concern may be taken into consideration. If you tie the hands of the commission and make the rule inflexible, you will find the law will be very difficult of operation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am not insisting on an inflexible rule. It would be wholly wrong to attempt to say that the roadways shall have a certain kind of material upon them. But I do want to make it perfectly clear to the State authorities and to the Secretary of Agriculture, who is clothed with this vast power, that it is the purpose of Congress only to encourage permanent road building; and if among us we can agree upon some language which will embrace that thought I shall be perfectly happy, and feel we have done a real public service.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I feel that the objection of the Senator from Ohio is hardly justified. I think it would be almost impossible to define just what character of roads you shall have in various sections. New Jersey has done a very great deal of road building, and there are various varities. We have in some sections that which is known as the Telford paving. Telford paving is a sort of macadam. They first lay over the roadbed, after grading it, a great big angular stone, and then smaller stones are joined in and driven down with hammers, and it is rolled and finally surfaced down. Macadam is simply rolling the road over into good form and then sprinkling it with various grades of metal, as they call it, various grades of stone, the pieces becoming smaller and smaller until a fine dressing is had.

In some other sections we have built what is known as the Amesite, which is a marvelous road. Then we have what is known as the Tarvia Road, which is very good. In the southern part of the State those roads are very necessary, and they, too, withstand the rigid wear in the populous northern end of our State. When you go down to the southern end of our State, they resort to seashore pebbles and shells, which make a splendid road. The climate is not as rigid in the southern part as in the northern part, and the traffic is infinitely less. They make a splendid road of that. Then in some other parts they make roads of clay and gravel, and when it is oiled it makes a perfect road.

So it would seem impossible, to my mind, to define just how this money shall be expended, but we should trust it to a good engineer—a State or county engineer—and as I think of our own engineer, Col. Stevens, in the State of New Jersey, and of our State department, and think of the various county engineers, it seems to me it would be impossible to get men better fitted and more adapted to their splendid calling than the men we have. We have no monopoly of that, for that same condition exists in Georgia, or in South Carolina, or in North Carolina, and in every other State.

I feel that we have got to be reasonably liberal and that we must trust to the judgment of these men. It seems to me that we can trust the State engineer and the Secretary of Agriculture, whoever he may be, to bring about the best results.

That we have to give State aid, it seems to me, no one will question. I know the argument that you can not appropriate money constitutionally is all very well, but we do appropriate for the Panama Canal, we appropriate for railroads, and for a million other things, and I believe we are justified in doing it. I believe the great fathers of our Republic—Thomas Jefferson and the rest, all the way along—would have stood by Congress in making appropriations for the betterment of the highways and the betterment of the privileges of the people in commingling with each other and coming in contact by means of good roadways.

I believe we shall enhance the happiness of our fellow men, that we will bring sections far apart closer together and make homes in the country more popular than they are to-day. We will break up the crowding and congregating in the great cities of our country and encourage the love of country life more perhaps by good roads and better means of communication than in any other way.

Mr. President, I have felt a good deal about this bill. Men from my own State have said to me, "I pray you will not stand for a measure that will take public money and send it to South Carolina, or Alabama, or North Carolina, for New Jersey has been very lavish in her expenditures for roads." I have said to them, "My friends, we have spent lavishly in New Jersey on roads and we have splendid roads; I think we have something like 4,000 or more miles of road; but we have 10,000 miles more of road yet to complete. We have done liberally and we paid for it, but that is no reason why the people of New Jersey should not be willing to pay their share of the great public funds that may go to aid road building throughout the country." I do not feel that I was elected as a Senator only to stand for New Jersey, but that I was elected for a broader, a greater, and a grander purpose, and that was to advance the welfare of my fellow men, whether men in South Carolina, Arkansas, or Texas, I care not, and I have answered all my critics and friends in that way.

I am on the committee from which this road bill emanated, and, as I said, I have given it a great deal of attention. I am very practical in my habits; very practical in my tastes. My life has been one of a practical nature. I have built and paid for many miles of road through my own place. I have built a Telford road, the most expensive, of the class I have just described. I have spent many thousands of dollars in fixing macadam roads. I have built some short sections of brick roads. I know what good roads mean. I know the splendid result they will bring to the country. It will come back a hundredfold to the Treasury of the United States by making happier and better the people of the United States. It will facilitate social intercourse, trade, and commerce. Every dollar that the United States will spend will be a blessing to our country and a monument to our splendid progress. I feel that this bill is about as near perfect as the measure can be made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to discuss briefly the bill and to discuss some things in connection with it which I think have not been dwelt upon as yet, which may not appeal to all Members of the body as being important, yet which appeal, I know, to a good many people of the country as being about the most important consideration in connection with the project. I refer in particular to the cost of the project as it is laid out by the bill and the sources from which the funds must come.

I should dislike very much to assume a narrow or provincial attitude in a discussion of this subject and to confine my consideration of it merely to its effect upon the taxpayers of the State of New York. Yet that State occupies such a peculiar position in the Union, particularly with respect to Federal appropriations and the method by which the money is to be spent and the purposes for which it is to be spent, that I think I am justified in calling the attention of the Senate to this particular feature of the case.

I need not remind my colleagues of the position of the State of New York with respect to its wealth and its population. It is well known that the State is the most populous and the most wealthy, and it is the best able to carry heavy burdens of taxation probably of any of the States.

I think I am correct in saying that the people of New York are not lacking in public spirit; that they are not lacking in enterprise; that they have as intense a desire as the people of any State to see the country developed from ocean to ocean; and that they are more than willing to bear their full share of the burdens of Federal taxation. In fact, I have heard little complaint from any of them when they have been called upon, as they are being called upon to-day, to bear more than their full share of Federal taxation.

In order that their situation may be understood a little more clearly, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the burdens which of necessity must be borne by the State of New York, due principally to its geographical position and also to the burdens which the people of the State have voluntarily undertaken and are pushing through with vigor and with success, as it turns out, not so much for their own benefit as for the benefit of the entire United States.

It so happens that nearly the entire immigration that comes into this country comes into the port of New York, and all the enormous influx of immigrants who are bound for America and not for the State of New York in particular have a most profound effect upon the activities of the State government. Many of them have led unfortunate and terribly hard lives in the places from which they have come, and when they land on our shores find it exceedingly difficult to survive in the competition of business and to carry the burdens which this modern industrial system of ours imposes upon those who are heavily laden. They are peculiarly susceptible to an inability to maintain themselves. It has devolved upon the government of the State of New York to advance much further in its efforts and in its expenditure of money in order to obviate the conditions which arise from this peculiar condition than it has upon any other State in the Union.

It is partly due to this situation, with the enormous foreign-born population which is constantly crowding into the State of New York, that the institutions of the State now house 40,000 inmates, a considerable percentage of whom are foreign born. Those institutions are costing the people of New York millions and millions of dollars, a burden which they are bearing with the utmost cheerfulness, and which, I want to remind my colleagues, is being borne only by the taxpayers of New York for the people of the United States as a part of the national burden.

The people of the State have a great ambition to see the commerce of the country expanded and internal improvements extended far and wide, and of their own volition by a popular vote on a series of referendums since the year 1904 the people of New York have pledged themselves to spend something over $150,000,000 for the building of the so-called system of barge canals. They do not contend, nor will any other American citizen contend, that that expenditure is solely for the benefit of the people of New York. As a matter of fact much the greater proportion of that benefit will be for people outside of the State of New York, but the taxpayers of New York have undertaken this obligation freely and willingly by their own vote expressed in a referendum. The capital expenditures in this respect will exceed $150,000,000, and when the interest is paid up to the time of the maturity of the bonds the sum will approach $200,000,000, a burden assumed by the people of that State.

The State has assumed other burdens. I call the attention of the Senate to these things because I do think that there are some differences in the degrees of enterprise among the different States of the country, just as there is a difference in degrees of enterprise among the different communities inside of a given State.

In addition to the canal situation, in addition to the enormous sums that are carried by the people of the State in support of its institutions, we have gone ahead and invested outside of the sums invested by the cities of the State $25,000,000 in purely military facilities, and no Senator and no one outside of this body will ever contend that that sum has been invested and spent for the purpose solely of protecting the State of New York. In fact, I happen to know the spirit which has been back of that expenditure. The appropriations which have gone through the legislature were actuated by the idea that it is done as a part of the defense of the country, and to-day the State is spending $2,000,000 a year of its own volition, with the approval of the taxpayers, for the maintenance of these military efforts.

One could go on for some time describing the extraordinary expenditures of that great State, expenditures made in the interest of the United States; and when we come to this question of roads I think the matter may be emphasized even more sharply. Back in 1903 or 1904, I think it was, the people of the State of New York decided that they would systematically embark upon the building of a great system of State highways, and by a popular referendum the people agreed to bond themselves for $50,000,000. Since that time another referendum has been held and $50,000,000 more have been pledged by the people and the taxpayers of that State.

Now, we have adopted a dual system of building highways, one known as the State trunk-line system, under which a given mileage of road especially selected as being of trunk-line importance is segregated on a plan or map arranged by the State engineer and the State authorities; and those roads are built solely and entirely from moneys appropriated from the treasury of the State.

We have another system of State highways known as the county highways. Those roads are built according to suggestions made by the supervisors of the county in conference with the State highway commission. The roads are agreed upon by the State authority and the county authority. The State, as I remember it now, puts in 50 cents on the dollar, the county 35 cents on the dollar, and the township 15 cents on the dollar.

The result is that in addition to the $100,000,000 that the State itself is pledged to spend from its own treasury, about $50,000,000 more is coming out of the counties and the towns. All this is done by bond issues, and when the interest is paid upon the bonds it is safe to say the total assessment on the taxpayers of the State of New York, if the plan is not extended another mile beyond the present indications, will be $200,000,000.

The total mileage of permanently improved highways of the State of New York at present approximates 7,000 miles. It is more expensive for us to build a permanent highway than it is for the people living farther south on account of the severity of the winters which drive the frost far deep into the ground and make it necessary that the permanent highways shall have deep foundations in order to withstand the reaction and the upheaval which takes place every spring when the frost is coming out of the ground. The result is that our macadam roads have to be built 12 inches of crushed stone rolled down to 8 inches. When we do not build macadam, we build them out of solid concrete 8 inches thick, and we are even building brick paved roads, as described by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE.]

The money that we are spending runs all the way from $8,000 a mile to $20,000 a mile. The history of the last 12 years shows that to maintain those roads it is necessary to expend an average of $1,000 per mile per year. The people of New York have undertaken that burden. The taxation as a result of the issue of those bonds, followed as it must be by the collection of a sinking fund and the payment of interest every year, is spread all over the State of New York and within a comparatively short period. As the result of this burden the people of that State will have a complete system of roads built, owing to their own enterprise, with money out of their own pockets, without ever asking a penny of assistance from any other community in the country.

Now, this bill confronts the taxpayers of that State as constituting a burden additional to the ones I have described with respect to the canal system, with respect to the State institutions, with respect to the military resources; and it would seem at first glance, and I think I can not be successfully contradicted, that as a result of their own enterprise in pledging millions of millions of dollars out of the pockets of the people of the State of New York they are to be penalized. Their own enterprise has gotten them apparently into a situation where now having provided for their own necessities without the slightest insinuation that they needed or ought to have help from anywhere else, they are called upon under this bill to contribute an amount which according to the closest calculation I can make will approximate 25 per cent of the total cost of the roads that are to be built by the Federal Government under the bill.

Mr. President, the people of New York are public spirited. They do not mind carrying their share of this burden. They are not, as I take it, instinctively or theoretically or on principle opposed to Federal aid being extended to highways in other parts of the country, and in extending assistance to other communities that find it difficult to establish permanent improvements within their borders on account of their comparative poverty or their lack of resources as yet undeveloped; but when they think of the money that they are to contribute under this bill they can not help thinking of the system of taxation imposed upon them by the Federal Government and under which they are led to suspect that they pay more than their share.

I have found it very difficult and in fact almost impossible in the very short time at my disposal to gather figures which would show what proportion of the Federal taxes are paid by the citizens of New York. I think no one will deny that the taxes paid by the citizens of that State to the Federal Government are above and beyond the proportionate wealth of the State. New York, I may say, is not alone in this situation. There are six or eight other States in the same position, comparatively speaking. But I have one figure in mind, and I think this point should be taken into consideration by the Senate and by the country, for it has to do with the peculiar methods of taxation which have been adopted in recent years, and in particular by the present administration. It is the assessment of taxes upon special and selected lines of business, apparently in such a way that the people of one portion of the country shall carry the overwhelmingly greater portion of the burden. Neither am I, nor so far as I know are any of my constituents, opposed to the imposition of an income tax. For myself I believe very thoroughly in the principle contained in the proposal and the imposition of an income tax. But surely, my colleagues, there is something strange in a law such as that which requires the taxpayers of the State of New York to contribute approximately 40 per cent of all the money paid into the Federal Treasury under the individual income-tax law and which relieves 8 or 10 States south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi to the extent of requiring them to pay, so far as my information goes, something less than 7 per cent of the entire amount.

We have been hearing proposals at various times during this session looking toward the imposition of new and special taxes, and it is a matter of genuine concern to the people of this great State to know how far this policy is going—the imposition of taxes upon especially selected lines of business, such as was proposed in the annual message of the President at the convening of Congress—how far this policy of apparently siphoning money from one portion of the country a thousand or two thousand miles away and spending it in some other portion.

In my humble judgment, in view of what might be termed the provincial outlook upon this matter—and I may be accused of being narrowminded in this respect, but I think these things should be called to the attention of the Senate—in addition to this consideration, there is growing up in the United States, if I am not very much mistaken, a spirit which leads men to think that the Government owes them a living and that they owe the Government next to nothing. There is growing up a spirit in the smaller communities of the country which leads those communities to think that if they can only reach Washington they can get all the money they want for purposes which they desire, to be spent within their own boundaries without taxing themselves. That is true in the Nation at large, and it is true, in my judgment, within the separate States. It is becoming a habit of mind. It is an indication of an old but well-known human weakness—a desire to get something for nothing.

We see bill after bill introduced into Congress for the spending of vast sums of money out of the Federal Treasury for purposes which could, at least in part and I think in great measure, be met by the communities themselves. As one bill passes there is an excuse for another. The procession gets longer and longer. The political influence, the demands of the people to get something from the Federal Government, a thousand miles away from their own scene of activities, grows day by day. The momentum is getting now so that I think Senators will agree with me that it has become exceedingly difficult to resist it. This bill, as I look upon it, is a part and parcel of this new public thought. In my judgment, it is an unhealthy tendency. It atrophies community enterprise; it leads people in communities to shift the burden of responsibility, which should rest upon them as citizens of the community, to some other and far-distant piece of machinery, impersonal in its nature, invisible to them, but apparently endowed with untold wealth, and, therefore, a source of supply which should always be taken into consideration and used to the limit.

Mr. President, I have stated something of the burdens of a great State, and I have endeavored in a very halting and inadequate way to express my thoughts of this tendency toward undue centralization of responsibility and the tendency of to-day, apparently the effort of to-day, evidenced in so many quarters, for people to regard the Government as something that owes them everything and to regard themselves as persons who do not owe the Government anything.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have received quite a number of communications from my State requesting me to support the Bankhead roads bill, and I wish that I could see my way clear to vote for it in its present form. I hope to be able to vote for it in some form.

I am wondering, however, if those who have written me and those who would like to have this bill enacted into law have fully considered its effects. If the people of my State were able to ascertain from a careful reading of the bill and a computation of the expenses involved that for every dollar received from the Federal Government in the State of North Dakota as a gift, the people of North Dakota would pay back to the Government for the building of roads in other States from $3 to $5, I wonder if they would then insist that I should vote to support the bill.

Mr. President, a wise Trojan once said: "Beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts." I wish that the people of my State and of the other Northern States, at least, would stop and consider this wise advice given many years ago.

One of the most dangerous, because the most enticing, baits that is ever thrown out to the people is the bait of Government appropriations, an assumed gift to the people. If we could always get the people to understand fully that the Government can give them nothing unless it first takes it from them, we would have less difficulty in securing their approval of our course in opposing "pork-barrel" legislation. I shall attempt very briefly to apply these suggestion to the present road bill, and I shall try to ascertain whether the State of North Dakota, which I in part represent, will in fact be benefited by this gift from the Federal Government.

By the terms of the bill the Federal Government is to furnish one half and the State the other half of the money required to construct any road in the State. Now, I make this declaration, which can easily be demonstrated, that for every thousand dollars which the State of North Dakota would receive under this bill to assist it in building roads, the people of the State of North Dakota would pay more than $2,000 to build roads in other States.

Let us look at the conditions as they are. We will take the Great Red River Valley as a basis for the discussion, because the conditions there are to a great extent applicable throughout the State.

Suppose we wish to build a good highway from Pembina or Cavalier at the northern end of the valley down through Grafton, Grand Forks, Hillsboro, Fargo to Wahpeton, at the southern end of the valley. Here is a deep alluvial soil without any rock foundation, without even a hard clay foundation, and no road material outside of the black earth itself for hundreds of miles. On account of the enormous expense of building a macadamized road, such a road would be entirely out of the question. Not even the State itself could put up a half or a quarter of the fund necessary to build such a road, and such a road must be built on a solid foundation. At my end of the valley you would have to go down a little over 1,100 feet in order to get that foundation. The road therefore would have to be purely a dirt road. The original cost of building such a road is not great. As a matter of fact those roads are nearly all now practically constructed. The only thing to do is to keep the dirt thrown up to the center and keep it smoothed down and ditched on both sides so that the rainfall will immediately run off and not soak in. The only way we can maintain this road is by going over it with a harrow and king drag after every important rain, because the soil is of such nature that no matter what the care, any considerable rainfall will saturate the road, and the first auto that goes over it will cut deep furrows. We have not been able yet to build a road in the valley that would stand up under these heavy machines after a hard rain. The ruts plowed by the autos will fill with water during the next rain unless they are immediately attended to. What is true of the valley is true to a great extent of the other sections of the State.

Now, just let us recall that there is a public road on every section line throughout the State. That means that we have about 100,000 miles of public roads in the State of North Dakota, a line sufficient to go around the earth four times; and every one of these roads is used to a more or less extent, although all are not open and kept in shape. So far, in the history of the State, the townships and the counties have taken care of the public roads. Except for a short time after these rains the roads of our State are in tolerably good shape, and nothing short of an enormous expense, so great that the State could not afford to indulge in the luxury, would make a road in the State that would withstand the rain. The principal expense of these roads is in keeping them in shape and not in the original construction. The money appropriated under the provisions of this bill by the Federal Government, in the first instance, is for the construction of the road.

Now, let us compare this with the process of road construction, we will say, in Virginia or any of the Southern States. The cost per mile of building roads through these States is great, but the rock foundation is there, the stone is there, the sand and the material for making a macadamized road is there. When the road is completed you will have a highway which will not be materially affected by any character of rain. So while the construction of a road in my State might cost from $200 to $250 per mile, the construction of a road in Virginia will cost $10,000 per mile, or about forty times as much. Now, remembering we still pay our proportionate share, not only in Virginia but over a vast section of the United States where roads have never been constructed, we can easily see that for a very little benefit in assisting to build a road in my State, which will not be a substantial one and which will not meet every condition of weather, our people will be called upon to pay ten times as much as they receive to build the more expensive roads and the better roads in other States; in other words, for a little assistance in building a dirt road in my State the people of my State will be called upon to build macadamized roads all over the South.

Nor is that all, Mr. President. Every State in the Union has its own peculiar wealth, its own peculiar assets which can be taxed for the purpose of the support of the State and the Nation. In North Dakota we have nothing but agriculture. In Minnesota you have agriculture, iron ore, and timber wealth. Colorado has its wealth of mines. California has mines, fruits, and tourist crops. Virginia has its oil and its vast coal mines. Other sections have their great cities, with their fabulous wealth. A road built through my State might be built through a section where the land would average $40 per acre or from $40 down to $10 per acre. A road put through Virginia might pass through the coal land and oil district, which might be worth $10,000 per acre. It might be built into cities whose wealth could well afford to be taxed to support that road. So that the section of country worth $10,000 per acre would call upon another section of the country worth $10 per acre to pay half the expense of building its roads.

Nor is this all. In the Northern States the principal roads, the great highways, have all been constructed without any Government aid whatever. The people have gone down into their pockets for hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars to construct their highways without Government aid. They are now by the terms of this bill invited to build the original highways in the other States that have never taxed themselves for such purpose.

An illustration of this will be found in the fact that until within the past few months there has never been a passable road from Washington to Mount Vernon, where lie the remains of the Father of our Country, a distance of only about 21 miles, I believe.

Again, every road built in the North has been free to anybody upon the face of the earth who has occasion to use it. If I should drive from here to Winchester over one of your roads I would find that it would cost me in tolls at the several tollgates I must pass through about 5 cents per mile, so that the roads running through this section of the country have not been built by a tax laid upon the State itself. They have been built by private corporations, and the whole country is paying in tolls for the investment.

In the State of North Dakota the license fee for running an auto over the roads of the State is, I think, $2 per year. In Maryland it is from $20 to $40 per year, and as there are hundreds of thousands of these machines running over the Maryland roads, even though they may not pass into the State three times a year, they are building, or assisting in the building, of the roads of that State.

Can not anyone see at a glance how unequal, how unjust will be the operation of this bill? Can any one of the States which have already built their roads, or those States which may build theirs in the future, such as our prairie States, fail to see that for every dollar they obtain from the Federal Government for their locality they will be paying out hundreds of dollars to build the roads of other sections of the country? I can not see how it is possible to formulate a public-roads bill that will be fair to all of the States, and yet I wish that it might be done, for I believe that it would be well to have national aid for public highways; but I want any plan that is devised to be fair and just to all the people.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. Referring to the amount that the State of North Dakota would get in the first year under the operations of this bill if it becomes a law—namely, $78,400—I should like to ask the Senator if he has figured out how much of the $5,000,000 to be contributed by the Federal Government during the first year will be paid by the State of North Dakota during that first year?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it would be a waste of time to figure out the exact amount that would be paid in the first year——

Mr. STERLING. Well——

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me finish the sentence—because before we get through with this matter we will be voting $500,000,000 for the construction of national highways; and remember that, while under this bill my State might receive $78,400, while it would receive, we will say, for a mile of road construction $200 or $250, the Government would be paying $10,000 a mile for a road in another State, and North Dakota would be paying her proportion of the amount for those roads.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. STERLING. It hardly seems quite fair for the Senator to conclude, because we have here provided for a five-year period in which Federal appropriations shall be made aggregating $75,000,000, that we are going on indefinitely increasing the amount that is to be appropriated by the Federal Government for this purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. Then, Mr. President, we ought to stop now, because the amount the Senator has named will not be a drop in the bucket to measure the necessities for public roads.

Mr. STERLING. I thought it a very practical suggestion, Mr. President to consider the amount each State will receive during the five-year period of the bill, and then ascertain how much each State will have to contribute to the amount which is to be appropriated by the Federal Government. Hence my question. I did not know—I asked the question for information—but that the Senator had made an estimate as to what his State would contribute to the fund.

Mr. McCUMBER. No one can know that, Mr. President, without first making an estimate of the entire cost, and then it would be necessary to make an estimate of all Federal taxes paid by the people of the State. As we could only ascertain those paid through internal-revenue exactions, it being impossible to make an estimate as to what we might be paying in the way of customs duties, and so forth, it would be impossible to tell just what the exact proportion of the State would be.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator allow me to make a further inquiry and suggestion?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator perhaps knows, at least in a general way, something of the Federal taxes collected in his own State.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. STERLING. And the Senator would hardly suppose, from his knowledge of the resources of the State and the Federal taxes collected therein, that the State would contribute anything like $78,000 the first year. Receiving $78,000 the first year, the State would contribute nothing like $78,000 to make up the $5,000,000 appropriated the first year by the General Government, would it?

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the State have to take that $78,000?

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not think it does under this bill; but I am assuming that it does take it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Assume now for a moment that it does not take it, let us see where we will be. Suppose that the State takes $5,000, instead of $78,000, or suppose it takes nothing: it will still have to pay its proportion of the expense of building a $10,000 per mile road in Virginia.

Mr. STERLING. I am not contending otherwise than that. Whether the State avails itself of the benefits of this bill or not, it would still have to contribute to the Federal appropriation.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; and, therefore, it is unjust; and the only way that the State could possibly get even would be by taxing its people to the limit in order to make up the other half. It is like an insurance proposition where one has to wait until he dies before collection can be made.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from North Dakota is overlooking the fact that the basis of this distribution of Federal money is not upon the quality or the cost of the roads. The distribution is based, first, on the area of the State; second, on population; and, third, on road mileage. Now, I take it that as to two of those matters, in area and in number of roads, the State of North Dakota has an advantage over the State of Virginia, and that Virginia would only excel North Dakota in one matter, and that is in the matter of population. According to the Senator's statement—and I have no doubt it is correct—as to the number of roads in North Dakota, that State undoubtedly has many more miles of road than has Virginia, and North Dakota certainly has a much larger territory, so that it would get its proportion, not upon the basis of the cost of the road, but on those three other foundations; and, if the State of North Dakota sees fit to build a cheaper character of road than Virginia builds, the result would be that North Dakota would get much more mileage and Virginia would get much less.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is assuming, Mr. President, of course, that the matter stops right here, and that we will not go any further than we are going now, and it is assuming several other important matters, one of the most important of which is that we will not stop there, and we can not stop there, but we will, when we have started a project to build a road across the Allegheny Mountains, for instance, complete it, and we will complete it whatever the cost may be, the same as we completed the Panama Canal, without reference to its cost. If it is a Government road and has the object of reaching from one section of the country to another, it is going to be completed, and completed with Government funds. This bill is simply an entering wedge into an enormous project, and, as I have said before, the only way that we can possibly keep even and make the people of other States pay for a portion of our roads is to see that we vote enough taxation upon our own people to insure our getting a certain proportion of the money.

Again, suppose that our State, after looking the matter over carefully, and after ascertaining that the only roads the Government could build in our State would be dirt roads, while in other States it would build macadamized roads, should come to the same conclusion that I have arrived at, and should not desire to take advantage of the Government offer, or should desire to take advantage of only a small portion of the money it might be entitled to. It can not disengage itself from the responsibility of helping to build the other roads of the country by failing to take advantage of the offer of the Federal Government. As I have stated, the condition is something analogous to life insurance. You have got to die before you can get your capital invested, or even a portion of it. The State that expends the greatest amount of money will secure from the Government the greatest amount, and the other States can not even pay unless they are able and willing to call for the same amount.

A bill which appealed to me was introduced some years ago, I think it was the Bourne bill, for the construction of public highways. It provided for a loan to the State at 2 or 3 per cent interest. Then the State could accept just such portion of the loan as it should see fit, and if it did not take any it would not be compelled to pay interest on bonds issued for other States. Under this system provided for in this bill it is paying its equivalent of interest in taxes. The present conditions of the several States in reference to wealth, population, size, and character of soil, number of miles of roads, and so forth, are so different that it is an impossibility to enact a bill of this kind without most gross injustice to some of the States. And further than this, Mr. President, this bill in its operation and final result will be but another pork-barrel proposition, more disgraceful and less beneficial than the rivers and harbors proposition has ever been.

There has been some discussion as to the proper title of this bill. We all know the purpose of the bill; and as the title should always clearly indicate the purpose of the bill, we are all a little delicate about giving it its proper title. The committee has attempted to mislead itself in the matter of its title, which is, of course, perfectly innocent so long as it does not mislead the Senate or the country. But the title should be amended, and it should be amended so as to express definitely and clearly the real purpose and intentment of the bill. To meet that I suggest the following:

A bill to compel the people, who have taxed themselves to excess to build roads in their own States, to proceed to tax themselves to the limit to build roads for the people of other States who have failed to build their own roads.

Mr. President, we know that is the purpose of the bill. Why not be straight and honest in the matter and give it a title that corresponds to its only purpose? If every one of the States of the Union had paid as much attention to the question of public roads within its borders and had put in as much money as New York and Pennsylvania and Ohio and Indiana and all of these Northern States have done, there would then be no call for this legislation. We would have a sufficient number of miles of good roads, the best roads we could construct throughout the United States, for all practical purposes. So the real purpose is to reach those sections of the country that never have taxed themselves to build their roads and compel the other sections of the country, which have built their own roads, to build the other ones.

Senators may think this is fair. It does not seem to me to be just, however, and I believe the great majority of the people of my State, notwithstanding the bait that is thrown out to them that something is going to be given to them by the Federal Government, will realize that there is such an injustice in the bill that I ought not to vote for it in its present form.

I intend to offer some amendments to the bill that will make it more just, at least, before I can vote for it. I do wish to see good highways all over the country. I travel by automobile considerably in my own State, and in the spring of the year and after the rains I have appreciated the difficulty of traveling over those roads; but I say frankly that up to the present time we have not discovered any method except the macadam method—which is too expensive in my State—of constructing a road that will be lasting and will be safe to travel over with machines during the entire year.

We are perfectly willing to be taxed to pay for our proportion of the roads according to the benefits that we receive from the bill, but we do not wish to tax our people to build good roads for other States, at enormous expense, while we will have dirt roads which we can not use except during a small portion of the year.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to ask him another question before he takes his seat?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. One thing that prompts the question is that my State is similarly situated to that of the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. In some respects it is quite similarly situated; in others, the road situation is not the same.

Mr. STERLING. As to the conditions under which roads shall be built, I think they are very much the same.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me correct the Senator. I do not think they have anything in South Dakota—at least, very little—that corresponds to the soil and the difficulty of building roads in the Red River Valley.

Mr. STERLING. Well, it may be; but outside of the Red River Valley, and perhaps outside of what is known as the Black Hills country in our own State, the conditions are very much the same.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very similar.

Mr. STERLING. Now, I note that for the five years for which these appropriations are to be made, the State of North Dakota will have $1,176,000. Suppose it is thought desirable by the highway commission of North Dakota that roads be constructed costing $2,000,000, or something a little in excess of $2,000,000, just double the sum that you would get under all these five-year appropriations, would it not be most acceptable to the State if the General Government contributed the one-half of the $2,000,000 worth of roads that were constructed there, the State of North Dakota not having to pay nearly so much for each of the five years as it would receive from the Federal Government?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; Mr. President, it might help out a State if it can get something for nothing, but this brings us right back to the first proposition. The Government has first got to get its money from the people before it can give it back to the people, and that is a little simple philosophy that no character of argument can escape.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; but the Government will not get back from the State of North Dakota nor from the State of South Dakota nearly as much as it gives to these two States.

Mr. McCUMBER. If it did not, then it is an unjust expense to the people of some other State.

Mr. STERLING. Oh, no, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why, Mr. President, there can be no such thing as getting money without somebody paying it. I can not understand the philosophy that will say that every one of the States will get more than it pays. Where are they going to get it from? They must get it from the States. Therefore the people of some State will have to pay more than their share if the people of my State get more money than they put up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question before he takes his seat. How many miles of macadam road have been built in North Dakota?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not one mile; and there will not be one mile of macadam road built in the State, so far as I know.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	Norris	Smith, S. C.
Bankhead	Harding	Oliver	Smoot
Borah	Hollis	Overman	Sterling
Brandegee	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Swanson
Broussard	Jones	Poindexter	Thomas
Burleigh	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thompson
Chamberlain	Kern	Ransdell	Tillman
Chilton	Lane	Robinson	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Shafroth	Wadsworth
Colt	McCumber	Sheppard	Warren
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Gore	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have been requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] on official business. He is paired with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have several amendments to offer not of great consequence. I hope the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will listen to the amendments that I am going to offer; and if he thinks they ought not to be considered to-day, I will have them go over and be printed.

I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "or might be" and to substitute therefor the words "now or may hereafter be," so that, if amended, it will read:

That for the purpose of this act the term "rural post road" shall be construed to mean any public road over which the United States mails are now or may hereafter be transported.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "construction," in line 6, page 7, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a colon and add the following proviso:

Provided, That all roads constructed under the provisions of this act shall be free from tolls of all kinds.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I send to the desk another amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, page 7, after the word "improvement," it is proposed to add the words "of roads constructed under the provisions of this act."

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill says:

The term "construction" shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement.

I propose to add the words "of roads constructed under the provisions of this act."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the effect of the amendment just offered by the Senator would be to confine the operation of this act to new roads. Is that the intention of the Senator from Alabama? I think that will be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the improvement of the roads is to be "of roads constructed under the provisions of this act," so that they shall not take old, worn-out roads and receive this stipend from the Government and throw some dirt on those roads and say they have improved them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask to have the Secretary state the amendment, so as to see how the bill will read as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 19, it is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee so as to read as follows:

The term "construction" shall be construed to include reconstruction and improvement of roads constructed under the provisions of this act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that the effect of that would be to limit the work of improvement of roads or reconstruction of roads to roads which are constructed in the first place under this act?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think so.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; I had more particular reference to the improvement of roads rather than the reconstruction of roads. However, let that amendment go over and be printed, Mr. President.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that there is not very much danger, I think, of the kind of improvement he has mentioned, in the case of old roads, because, I think, the bill provides in all cases for projects to be submitted to and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; that is true.

Mr. WORKS. And it provides that plans and specifications must be supplied, and they must be approved by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is true.

Mr. WORKS. I think there is very little danger of the situation arising that the Senator is trying to meet.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just let the amendment be printed, Mr. President.

Then I suggest that the article "a" be stricken out, in line 22, after the word "good," so that it will read "as good condition" instead of "as good a condition."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the article "a," so that, if amended, it will read:

In practically as good condition as when it was first built.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. On page 10, line 11, the bill reads:

That within 60 days after the final passage of this act.

I move to strike out the words "final passage" and substitute the word "approval," so that it will read "after the approval of this act."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have the Secretary read the first few lines of section 8 as that section has been amended. I think an amendment has been made to that section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not been amended.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has not been amended? I thought the provision about renting buildings in the city of Washington had been stricken out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was agreed to, Mr. President, but the Senate did not vote on it. I accepted it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The RECORD discloses that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] said that at the proper time he would offer an amendment to strike out, on page 13, line 21, the word "in" and insert the words "outside of," and in line 22, page 13, to strike out the words "and elsewhere," so that the clause as amended shall read:

To rent such buildings outside of the city of Washington.

But it has not been offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I made that inquiry for the reason that the other day there was rather a heated discussion as to the rentals that were being paid in the city of Washington. I have taken the trouble to make a compilation, which will be found in the Journal of the American Institute of Architects for February, 1916, a recent publication, from which it appears that we are paying rentals in the city of Washington in one instance only one-half of 1 per cent on a small building, while in other instances the rentals run up to 15 per cent, 14 per cent, 11 per cent, and 10 per cent——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On the valuation?

Mr. GALLINGER. On the valuation—and 12 per cent, the average being 8.73 per cent, which is not so very high. I thought that if we are going to provide here for renting more buildings we might limit it, but I will forego that for the present.

In line 21, page 13, where it reads "to rent such buildings in the city of Washington," I think the word "such" should be stricken out, because there is no provision for renting.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not a great stickler for the civil service. I always believed in the original civil-service act of 1883, but the manner in which it was enlarged, by Executive order and otherwise, and the manner in which it has been administered—perhaps not more by one administration than by another—has led me to have rather a contempt for the act. Young men and women are being called from their homes to the capitals of the different States for examinations. They pass. Their names are sent to Washington. They are placed on an eligible list, so called, but they never are reached for appointment. In my own State I will not venture to say how many such young men and women have been flattered with the idea that they were going to get a Government position, but it never has materialized.

Now, it seems to me that whenever we can properly do so we ought to provide that the clerical help particularly shall be taken from these eligible lists. It is not fair to ask our young people to spend five or ten dollars apiece, more or less, in going from their homes to the place of examination, passing the examination and being certified, but never appointed, while we allow those who are in charge of certain work for the Government to go outside and appoint young men and women who have never taken an examination.

It occurred to me that here is an instance—it will not amount to very much—where we might at least give our approval to the principles of the civil-service law. While I am not going to make a speech about it, and I am not going to wrangle over it, I suggest to the chairman of the committee that after the word "elsewhere," in line 22, page 13, there should be inserted the words "to be taken from the eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission."

The provision is that they shall "employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons." It is mere clerical work, and here are these long lists in the hands of the Civil Service Commission. Boys and girls are waiting to be appointed. Some of them become worthless because they are waiting to be appointed. They think they will not take any other employment because they imagine they are going to get a Government position, but they never get it; and we have passed at this session half a dozen bills which I might enumerate, whereby probably more than 100 employees of that kind have been taken from outside, and the civil-service lists have been entirely neglected.

I think the Senator from Alabama ought to be willing to have that amendment go in the bill. It will go to conference, anyway.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator as a general proposition if he intends to have this provision apply only to the clerks. The Senator will understand that some of these appointees have got to be experts along certain lines. We might not be able to get them from the general list.

Mr. GALLINGER. The language is, "to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington." I feel sure that on those civil-service registers there must be men and women competent to perform all the duties that are required here. In the Agricultural Department they have an Office of Public Roads and Rural Engineering, and they have experts there to pass upon all these matters.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator does not think his amendment would apply to engineers?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. With that understanding, I have no objection to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment. Where does the Senator propose to insert it?

Mr. GALLINGER. After the word "elsewhere," in line 21, page 13, I move to insert "to be taken from the eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission."

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I attempted yesterday, I think, to comment upon that particular provision of the bill, and I was told by the chairman that it had been stricken out.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it has not.

Mr. WORKS. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the Senator must have misunderstood me. I did not know that he was talking about this particular provision of the bill. I thought it was some other provision.

Mr. WORKS. It was that provision of the bill which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to employ such assistants as he might need.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator will recall, it was the provision of the bill which authorized him to rent buildings in the city of Washington which I said had been stricken out.

Mr. WORKS. It was all included in that portion of it. I was not commenting alone upon the renting of buildings, but upon the employment of persons also.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I certainly did not intend to say that the whole provision had been stricken out. It was only that in reference to renting buildings.

Mr. WORKS. Then I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I misunderstood the Senator from California.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Secretary state the amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 21, after the word "elsewhere," it is proposed to insert "to be taken from the eligible lists of the Civil Service Commission."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. In line 1, page 13, the word "that" should be inserted after the word "department," to make better language of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 1, after the word "department," insert "that," so as to read:

State highway department, that such roads be not properly maintained by the State or any subdivision thereof.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. LODGE. It ought to be "are" instead of "be."

Mr. GALLINGER. That is better. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, who always helps us out when we get in difficulties about proper language, is a wise one. He said that the word "be," in the second line, should be "are," so as to read "that such roads are not properly maintained."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, this bill has one very grave defect. I do not know who prepared it, but the punctuation is very bad. However, I am not going through with it for the purpose of correcting the numerous instances of bad punctuation. Manifestly the comma after the word "that," in line 18, should be taken out, so as to read "that out of the appropriations."

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendments suggested will be made to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all that I propose to suggest today. These are inconsequential amendments, but I think they improve the bill somewhat. I do not know that I shall say another word on the bill. The people of my State spend a great deal of money on public roads. Only two or three years ago the legislature appropriated a sufficient amount of money to build three highways from the Massachusetts line to the White Mountains. I think the appropriation was $1,000,000 at one time. We have tried to keep our roads in good repair, and next to Massachusetts, and perhaps New York and possibly one or two other States, I think our roads will favorably compare with those of any other State. But while the bill will not do much, and perhaps not anything, for New Hampshire, our people are so anxious to have good roads that whatever has come to me from the State has been to suggest that I ought to vote for the bill. My present intention is to vote for it, and I have no idea that I shall change my mind in that respect.

I shall not defer the consideration of it beyond insisting, as I did this morning, that we ought not to be too precipitate in considering it, because there are some pretty valid objections against it which have been urged by Senators, and doubtless other Senators will present their adverse views on the measure. But that will not do any harm. If the bill is a good one, it will not be halted or harmed by adverse criticism. So I will cooperate with the Senator from Alabama in all proper ways in getting the measure to a vote after it has had fair and full consideration.

Mr. LODGE. Before the Senator sits down I want to call his attention to section 7, where he put in the word "that." I had not read the rest of section 7. I thought that certainly it ought to read "roads are," but I see it relates to the future.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; it does.

Mr. LODGE (reading)—

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to withhold apportionment of funds to any State in which roads constructed under the provisions of this act have not, in his judgment, been properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof, if within six months after he has given notice in writing to the State highway department that such roads be not properly maintained by the State or any subdivision thereof.

Mr. GALLINGER. "Be" is a better word.

Mr. LODGE. I suggest to leave out the word "that" and make it read "shall not be."

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; let that amendment be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I desire to have an amendment read at the desk on which I wish to make some remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 13, strike out the semicolon after the word "thereof" and insert a comma and add the words "for a period of not less than 10 years from approved completion of construction."

Mr. GALLINGER. So that it will read——

The SECRETARY. So that it will read—

nor until an agreement shall have been made with the Secretary of Agriculture, to his satisfaction, that the rural post road or roads so to be constructed under such project will be properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof, for a period of not less than 10 years from approved completion of construction.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think there is any objection to that amendment. I am willing to accept it.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee. I am not anxious to address the Senate on this subject in particular, but I desired to make this offer of an amendment and to call the attention of the Senate to what I believe to be the most important phase of the Federal aid to the good-roads movement in this country. I have been not a little impressed by the opposition suggested by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], and I recognize the force of some of the arguments offered by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. I am sure I can understand the feelings expressed by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

In a small way we have been through all this in Ohio. The good-roads movement struck the Buckeye State a great many years ago. The county in which I live has expended on its own account approximately $5,000,000 for the construction of roads at our own direct expense. We joined in voting a State levy giving State aid to the construction of improved roads in the counties in Ohio, notably those which had no improved roads. So we have had this principle applied in a smaller way in our State.

I do not object to the bill on that account, Mr. President; but I think Senators, so far as I have been permitted to hear the debate, have overlooked the big question. It is not that of securing funds with which to construct these improved roads. It is not the relative contribution of the State and the relative acquisition of Federal aid by the State.

The biggest problem in improved roads to-day, Senators, is the maintenance thereof. I do not hesitate to say that the greatest crime in public expenditures to-day is the wanton waste of money in the construction of roads without ample provision for their maintenance.

So I have suggested this trifling amendment to call the attention of the committee and of other Senators to the importance of Federal encouragement for the proper maintenance of roads once they are built. This $75,000,000 in Federal aid does not mean very much in the actual construction of roads. I suspect the State of Ohio will spend that much money itself in less time than the bill provides for this appropriation. I am sure that it will.

If the Federal Government really wants to make a contribution to the good-roads fund, it can do nothing better than fix a policy of Federal aid that is based on a guarantee of maintenance. Much of this good-roads talk is of rather a far-fetched character, so far as the name is concerned. I do not hesitate to say to the distinguished chairman of the committee that we are not appropriating this money to encourage the building of post roads. Out in Ohio we call them market roads, and we do not mean anything seriously by that. The truth about it is the good-roads movement is the reflection of the automobile age. We are building them because humanity is on wheels nowadays, and roads must be built to meet the new requirements.

I have seen roads constructed costing from ten to sixteen thousand dollars per mile which were unfit to drive over the third year after their construction. I tell you, Senators, that was a wanton waste of money. I do not suppose it would be appropriate here to offer some personal experience, but we have been building macadam roads so long out in our State, where we were obliged to have them to get out of the black mud, that we have learned that you can construct a very excellent road for $3,500 to $5,000 per mile and maintain it as an ideal highway if it is given only a little attention every year. It has been demonstrated in Ohio that you can take a crushed limestone road—and I am not boosting any particular sort of highway construction—and with modern road machinery dig it up and reroll it every season and maintain that road in excellent order at a cost not to exceed $100 per mile. Yet we have no fixed policy in the State providing for such a thing. So I should like, if I could, to say something in this connection in support of this measure that shall lead the Federal highway department to make use of this Federal aid in inaugurating in this country a provision for the maintenance of our improved highways, so that the people shall get something for the enormous expenditure of money which we are proposing to make.

I shall be very glad to support the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 12, lines 21 and 22, I move to strike out the words "is authorized to" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "shall."

Mr. BANKHEAD. I see no objection to that amendment, and I accept it.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to offer another amendment. On page 12, line 25, after the word "thereof," I move to strike out down to and including the word "thereof" on line 3, page 13. That is only carrying out the same idea as the other amendments I have offered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the Senator propose to strike out without inserting anything?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know about that.

Mr. SWANSON. How would it read?

Mr. NORRIS. Taking the amendment that the chairman has accepted, which strikes out "authorized to" and insert "shall," providing this amendment is agreed to, it would read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture shall withhold apportionment of funds to any State in which roads constructed under the provisions of this act have not, in his judgment, been properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof.

Under the bill as it is drawn, with the language in that I propose to strike out, the Secretary of Agriculture is compelled before he can withhold that money to give them six months' notice, and then, if at the end of six months they are still not maintaining the road, he is authorized to withhold any appropriation that may come later. It might occur, and probably would very often occur, with that language left in that at the time of the distribution of the funds by the Secretary of Agriculture, although the roads were not maintained in the State, six months' notice must be given before he could withhold the contribution, and another contribution would become due and would be made, when as a matter of fact the State was doing nothing to maintain the roads that had already been built. At the same time, if this language is stricken out, I can not for the life of me see that any hardship could come to the State. If the State does not maintain the road, then there ought to be in any proper bill that is passed some method by which it can be penalized, and the only method provided in the bill is to withhold any future apportionment of funds.

Mr. MCCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question right here?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Suppose the funds have already been apportioned. Suppose the road has been built and completed, and there is no more money to come from the Government, and the State fails to make good the improvement that is required?

Mr. NORRIS. That would be at the end of the last appropriation made in the bill, which I believe is five years. There would not be any way to compel the State; it would be all over. If the State wanted to neglect it, then there would not be any way in which the Federal Government, under the bill, could penalize the State.

Mr. MCCUMBER. And if the State did neglect it, what would the Government do?

Mr. NORRIS. It would not do anything.

Mr. MCCUMBER. There is no way of compelling the Government to go ahead and keep up the road. There is no way of compelling the State to keep up the road.

Mr. NORRIS. After the time has expired, that is true. The proposition here is that if the State does not maintain the road, that has been constructed partly out of Federal funds, then no further funds will be given to that State, but as the bill is drawn they have still six months after they have neglected it, and they must have that notice before you can withhold the money. The Secretary of Agriculture must give that notice. If he fails to give the notice, although the State never did a thing toward the maintenance of the road, they would be entitled to the next apportionment of funds.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, this amendment was discussed by the subcommittee and the committee which prepared the bill. We think a State ought to have notice as to whether it has carried out its contract for maintenance, and if the Federal authorities are satisfied that that has not been properly done they ought to be given an opportunity to improve and maintain those roads to measure up to the conditions, so that they could get the money for the next distribution.

The six months' notice might be too long, but there ought to be some notice. We should not leave it absolutely to the discretion of the Federal Government to deprive the State of the fund entirely. We thought the best way was to deal fairly with the States and give them an opportunity to improve their roads, so that they could get the next apportionment. I hope a notice of some time will be given. You can make it three months or shorter, but whenever they have not complied with their contract, and the only way you have to force them to do it is to withhold the money in order to get the road improved, notice ought to be given. Then they will improve the road. The subcommittee thought that this was the best way to handle that phase of the question.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I can see the reason that impelled the committee to take that view of it, but yet we will always come to a time somewhere when the principal authority must pass on the question as to whether the State has maintained the road.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, it passes on it when gives the notice.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course it does, but suppose the notice is given, and then the State says, "Now, we have improved the road; we will maintain it"; and at the end of six months the Secretary says, "No; you have not," still the Secretary decides the proposition. We can not get away from that. The Secretary of Agriculture will decide it some time. So if that is a hardship, it is not removed by putting in a notice that must be given to the State. In the first place, there would be cooperation between the engineers on the part of the Government and the State authorities. The State authorities would know all the time whether they were keeping this road in repair, the Federal authorities would also know it, and the Secretary of Agriculture would pass on the matter.

It may be said that that is a hardship; he might be wrong; but to leave the bill as it is does not remove this hardship; it is still there; still he decides the matter. I think it is conceded that somebody must decide it, and so far as I am concerned I think the committee has it right, that the Secretary of Agriculture ought to do that; but it takes away almost everything that is left in the bill in regard to maintenance.

As I said the other day—and several other Senators reiterated it, notably the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has done so to-day—a bill which does not provide for the proper maintenance of roads when built is a criminal expenditure of public funds. The maintenance of a road once built, is just as important as is the original building of the road. Everybody concedes that; I believe that is agreed to. When we say to a State, "if you are going to get a portion of the public funds to construct a road within your boundaries, you must maintain the road," and that is defined in the bill as meaning to keep it practically in as good condition as it was when it was first made; but there is no way to penalize that State if it does not comply with its agreement, except to withhold funds from it from future apportionments. We say that even after a State has violated the law and has absolutely ignored the matter, has paid no attention to maintenance, has done nothing toward keeping the road in repair, yet before we can prevent more funds from being put into that rat hole we must say to the State, "We will give you six months' notice now," then they would start in and do something to get another apportionment, and then stop again, and so on continually. That would be possible; I do not say that that would happen; that is the extreme limit perhaps; but it would enable a State to violate the most important provision that is in this bill, and that is the provision for proper maintenance of the roads.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Nebraska seems to be mistaken, to my mind, as to what would be the effect of leaving out this notice. There has not been any bill which has been drawn and presented to Congress that required maintenance more vigorously, rigorously, and insistently than does this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. But, if the Senator will just permit me there, it is like defining a crime. If you define a crime in a statute and provide no penalty, no matter how clear the definition may be, you have not accomplished any good by it.

Mr. SWANSON. But before the project is approved the Federal Government must be satisfied that the road will be maintained, and sureties must be given.

Mr. NORRIS. What sureties?

Mr. SWANSON. An agreement must be made.

Mr. NORRIS. That is all it is—an agreement.

Mr. SWANSON. Well, it is a serious agreement of the State, which is something; but if it is not a bona fide agreement and one which the department is satisfied will be complied with, the project will not be approved. Now, to make it sure, an amendment has been inserted requiring the department to be satisfied that the maintenance will be continued for 10 years. To enforce that the money is withheld from the State if the condition is not complied with and if, according to the judgment of the Agricultural Department, the roads have not been properly maintained.

There might be a difference between the judgment of the State highway authorities and the Federal department as to whether or not a road had been maintained; and if this notice were not required, the department might, without giving notice to anybody, withhold all the money. The State may have made arrangements to improve its roads next year and may come to Washington to ascertain what can be done, whereupon the department would say, "You have forfeited your half of the funds, for you have not maintained your roads according to your agreement." To obviate that difficulty, which, it seems to me, might occur, and in order to promote improvements, we require notice to be given, so that a State can first be satisfied as to whether it is entitled to this money and make arrangements accordingly; and, second, to see that the roads are maintained or improved.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose the Secretary of Agriculture neglects to give the notice?

Mr. SWANSON. Then, this whole bill would be violated, if you presume the Federal Government is not going to discharge the duties appertaining to it.

Mr. NORRIS. Why should a Government official be required to give notice to a State official that the State official is not performing his duty?

Mr. SWANSON. He is required to give notice, because the State has agreed to maintain the roads when the Federal Government furnishes it the money.

Mr. NORRIS. Exactly; and when the State fails to maintain a road that has been built partially through Federal aid, it has lost all right to future contributions from the Federal Government under this bill.

Mr. SWANSON. But I think the State should be given notice and have an opportunity to correct its failure.

Mr. NORRIS. The opportunity has existed ever since the road was built. Of course, I agree with the Senator from Virginia that changing the time would vastly improve the bill. At the same time it seems to me that the language ought to be stricken out entirely.

Mr. SWANSON. I think we should change the notice to three months.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree that that would be better.

Mr. LIPPITT. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me?

Mr. SWANSON. I agree to the amendment fixing the time at three months.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I do not know who has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Did the Senator from Rhode Island propound a question to me?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not want to interrupt any of the private conversation between Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. I beg pardon. My attention was diverted, and I did not hear the question, if the Senator asked me one.

Mr. LIPPITT. I did not get the attention of the Senator. The Senator was discussing just now the question of substituting three months for six months in line 25, at the bottom of page 12, as the time in which a State is to be able to put its roads in a condition of being properly maintained. I should like to say to the Senate that it seems to me that if the roads of any State are in such shape that they have to be reconstructed or put into a condition of proper maintenance, three months would be an utterly insufficient time, probably, to accomplish such a result. When a macadam road, for instance, has gone to pieces, it is not easy nor is it a rapid matter to reconstruct that road.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is true, especially if it be a very inclement season.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was about to add the suggestion which the Senator from Michigan has made, that in my section of the country and in many other parts of the United States there is a very limited time in the year when roads can be reconstructed, and there is only a limited amount of road machinery, stone crushers, and the other paraphernalia, and they might be employed in various other ways.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me?

Mr. LIPPITT. I thought the Senator from Nebraska was yielding to me. If I have the floor, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator from Rhode Island has the floor. I am making no claim to it; I was through. I want to ask the Senator if he thinks six months' notice would be long enough?

Mr. LIPPITT. I do not think it would be any too long.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think we ought to require the State to maintain the roads after they have been built?

Mr. LIPPITT. I absolutely do.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the Senator ought to favor striking all this out, ought he not? If we give them notice, how much notice should we give them?

Mr. LIPPITT. I think if we are to give them notice, they ought to have six months; but I am not at all sure that I do not agree with the Senator's idea that the provision should be entirely stricken out. Of course if it is going to be stricken out and if the Senator is going to substitute the word "shall" for the words "is authorized" in line 21——

Mr. NORRIS. That has been done.

Mr. LIPPITT. He should also make the same amendment in lines 3 and 4, on page 13. It is not consistent to say to the Secretary of Agriculture in one place that "he shall" and in another that "he is authorized."

Mr. NORRIS. In the second place, to which the Senator refers, merely temporary authority is granted, and although I would have no objection to the same amendment being made there, I will not offer the amendment, for I can see a difference between that provision and the provision which I have moved to amend.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I did not take the floor to discuss the general features of the bill, but simply to call attention particularly to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska in regard to three months' notice instead of six months' notice. However, so far as the bill itself goes, it is of very great importance to the State which I in part represent here. It is of such great importance that I do not feel that I have yet had sufficient opportunity to give the bill proper consideration. It has only been brought to my attention within the last two or three days. I have not been able to devote all my time during that period to its consideration, and I find so many things in it that are of very great importance to Rhode Island that I certainly hope it will not be rushed to final passage to-day or within a day or two.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We do not count upon that.

Mr. LIPPITT. Very well. Then, in a very brief way I should like to say that the matter which has been brought up by the junior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] in regard to the method of payment for this work as affecting his State is also of very great importance to the State of Rhode Island. We are not as large a State as is New York, but the effect of the present method of raising funds for the National Government becomes proportionately, as compared with other States, a very great burden upon the State of Rhode Island.

We have also spent very large sums of money in proportion to our size upon our highway system. We have already constructed in Rhode Island a large mileage of very expensive highways, and we are finding great difficulty with the problem of maintenance. We find that is becoming a very expensive thing to keep the roads in the condition in which they should be maintained.

I also find in the bill provisions in regard to population. I refer particularly to section 2, in which exceptions are made, excluding streets and roads in a place having a population of 2,500 or more. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill what is meant by "a place."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I do not know what the situation is in Rhode Island, although I presume it is the same there as it is elsewhere in the country; but there are a great many little villages and small towns which have been incorporated for school and other purposes. Under the provisions of this bill none of the money appropriated can be expended in an incorporated city where they have a system of streets, but in a place, such as indicated by the bill, where the houses are more than 200 feet apart, it was thought that that rule really ought not to apply. A small village, containing only a few hundred people, incorporated for school or other purposes, may have no funds with which to build roads, and may never have, and if you stop the construction of the road at the line of that incorporated village, the result will be that you will have a hiatus through the town of a half mile or a mile which will absolutely destroy the value of the road for almost every purpose. That provision was inserted to enable the funds to be applied to a situation like that in order that a road might be constructed through or along the streets of an incorporated village where the houses were 200 feet apart. The supposition was, of course, that where there was a dense population and the houses were close together they would be able, perhaps, to construct their own roads.

Mr. LIPPITT. Perhaps I have failed to grasp the real significance of the language. I have read it over two or three times without being satisfied in my own mind exactly what it does mean. In the first place, it says "in a place having a population"——

Mr. SWANSON. To what portion of the bill does the Senator refer?

Mr. LIPPITT. Section 2, on page 7.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Perhaps we might say "town" or "village," instead of "place," but the purpose of the provision is as I have indicated.

Mr. LIPPITT. I will ask Senators to remember that Rhode Island is the most thickly settled State in the Union, and I was just wondering whether the provision would not exclude the whole of Rhode Island from the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think it would admit the whole of Rhode Island under the construction which I give to it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, I have a letter from the chairman of the Highway Commission of Massachusetts, in which he says that the provisions of the House bill would practically cut out all of New England from the benefits of the bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator does not refer to the pending bill?

Mr. LODGE. No; the writer of the letter refers to the House bill. He says:

> This cutting out would be done if the bill were worded to say that the money was to be spent outside of any incorporated town or city. I think the same result would be accomplished if they use the word "borough, village," etc., because, as you know, and they do not, the geographical limits of our cities and towns are all within the incorporated town or city, and all the roads are under their jurisdiction unless they are State highways.
> In the bill that the highway officials recommended I got them to put in the clause that the money might be spent inside of an incorporated village or town of more than 2,000 inhabitants, provided the houses averaged more than 200 feet apart, that being our definition of "thickly settled" in the automobile law. I think that will enable us to spend some of the money in the New England States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was the purpose of it when we put in the provision.

Mr. LODGE. The bill uses the word "place" instead of "incorporated village or town," and reads "having a population of 2,500 or more."

Mr. LIPPITT. It seems to me that the idea sought to be conveyed might be made more definite.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this provision was inserted to meet the conditions in New England; and I understand it meets the approval of the highway commissions of the different States of New England. If it does not meet the conditions which it is sought to cover, the Senator can offer an amendment to take care of any situation which he has in mind.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Rhode Island will allow me, I will state that that is purely an academic question, because the amount of money that the New England States will get under this bill would be so small that there is not much use talking about it.

Mr. LIPPITT. I beg to differ from the Senator from Pennsylvania; it is not an academic question at all. The amount of money that New England and Pennsylvania will be taxed for this bill will be the same in either case.

Mr. OLIVER. I am speaking of the amount they will receive, and not the amount they will contribute.

Mr. LIPPITT. They might as well get a little something out of it, and not have the bill so drawn that they will have to do all the paying and absolutely be unable to receive a dollar in return, under the language of the bill. I did not really understand from the language what was meant.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The purpose was the one I have indicated.

Mr. LIPPITT. After the explanation I will examine the language a little more carefully, because I think it can be improved somewhat by being made clearer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think the Senator had better be careful about using the word "town." The word "town" in New England is synonymous with township in the Western States; indeed in New Hampshire in the town, which is an area covering six or seven miles square, there are half a dozen villages in many cases, each village having perhaps as large a population as is named in the bill. So that if you use the word "town" it might exclude the entire area from any benefit.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senators who are interested in it, if they prefer some other language, may offer an amendment, and we will have no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island can look into it, but if a change is made I fear the result I have stated.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, as I understand the intent of this language is that in figuring the proportion of this fund any particular State may have, all roads may be included where the houses are not closer than 200 feet to each other.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is correct.

Mr. LIPPITT. If that is so, I do not see why it is necessary to put in anything about this place having a certain population. It seems to me that all you have to do is to say that the money can be expended anywhere where the houses are not closer than 200 feet to each other.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, to fully express my opinion about this matter, I will say that this provision in the bill was insisted upon by the State highway commissions of the New England States for their protection, as the Senator from Massachusetts has indicated in the letters he has just read.

Mr. LIPPITT. I am in sympathy with that desire. I only wanted to be sure that the language accomplishes the intention.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator can examine it, and if he does not think that fully covers the ground the way it is——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the change that has been made in the bill from what is recommended by the highway officials raised it from two thousand to twenty-five hundred or more. That enlarges the scope.

Mr. SWANSON. It enlarges it by five hundred.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We thought that was better.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; that raises the limitation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. We have used the word "place," which is, of course, very general, but, I dare say, it will cover what is needed. Of course, it means an incorporated town, village, city, or anything of that sort, and I suppose it would be interpreted——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Down in Alabama we would say "town or village."

Mr. LODGE. In Massachusetts a village is part of a town.

Mr. SWANSON. We thought the word "place" could be so construed as to meet the conditions except in New England, so as to mean boroughs, cities, or incorporations.

Mr. LODGE. That is it; any place that is occupied by 2,500 people, whether under a borough government or otherwise.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not make any difference about the government.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just so it is a place.

Mr. LODGE. I think that covers it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to this fact: The Senator has just signified that he would be satisfied with the amendment suggested by the Senator from Ohio that would provide for the care of the roads by the State, after they had been completed, for a period of 10 years. Does the Senator recognize that that is imposing a limitation and not granting an extension of the duty to care for these roads, and would the Senator wish so to limit the operation of the bill?

If the amendment suggested should be agreed to, then all the duty of the State is to maintain the road and keep it in shape for a period of 10 years. Under the bill as it is drawn, it is the duty of the State to maintain it at all times and under all conditions.

What I was going especially to call the Senator's attention to was this: On page 12, which relates to the duty of the State to maintain the road, it reads:

> Nor until an agreement shall have been made with the Secretary of Agriculture, to his satisfaction, that the rural post road or roads so to be constructed under such project will be properly maintained by the State.

The Senator will see that that is without any limitation whatever.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that. I do not think the amendment——

Mr. McCUMBER. And that is what it ought to be, in my opinion, if we are going to put the money into it; but I am going to ask the Senator if he would have any objection to changing the word "agreement" to "guarantee"?

Mr. BANKHEAD. None in the world.

Mr. McCUMBER. "Agreement" is rather broad, and possibly an agreement might be made which would depend entirely upon the good faith of the State to maintain its agreement. If we should say "nor until a guarantee shall have been made with the Secretary to maintain these roads," I think we would at least have gotten it in better shape than we had it before.

Mr. SWANSON. What does the Senator mean to imply by "guarantee"? Some Secretary might construe it to mean that you would have to put up bonds and security and sureties.

Mr. LODGE. That would be a very good thing.

Mr. McCUMBER. I would leave that with the Secretary of Agriculture. I think he would have a written guarantee passed by the legislature of the State, or an agreement whereby they guarantee to maintain the road for an indefinite time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think there is very much difference in the two terms.

Mr. LIPPITT. "Agreement" is the best.

Mr. LODGE. This agreement may be purely verbal.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is a verbal agreement made with the governor——

Mr. SWANSON. Say "satisfactory agreement."

Mr. LIPPITT. That is implied.

Mr. LODGE. You have got that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The main reason why I would change the word "agreement" to "guarantee" is that we ought not to put in the limitation suggested by the Senator from Ohio, a 10-year limitation.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that if the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, which, I understand, now reads "for a period of 10 years," were made "for a period of not less than 10 years," it would accomplish the object of the Senator from Ohio and remove the objection of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; because then you would have it so much weaker. If it is not less than 10 years, that places it within the authority of the State to make an agreement that will last not less than 10 years, while we wish the agreement to be for all time.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, while the Senator from North Dakota is on his feet, may I ask him a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HARDING. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that after maintenance is established for a period of 10 years it is essentially made permanent?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, I do not think that would necessarily follow; and certainly if it would follow, there is no objection to making it specific.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems that the amendment I have offered, to strike out the language indicated in the amendment, does not meet with the views of the Senator in charge of the bill. I desire, therefore, to withdraw that amendment and to offer an amendment to strike out "six" and insert "three," in line 25, page 12, so that it will read "three months" instead of "six months."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Three months for what—repairs?

Mr. NORRIS. To give notice for repairs. I understand that is satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator where that amendment would come in?

Mr. NORRIS. On line 25, page 12, I move to strike out "six" and insert "three."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I would not like to accept that amendment. I do not think it is a proper one. I do not think the States ought to be just hopped down upon without sufficient notice to improve their roads. I feel that six months is as little time as should be given.

Mr. NORRIS. I understood from that the Senator from Virginia said that it would be satisfactory to the committee. If that is not satisfactory, I want my original amendment to stand and to have a vote on it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I just want to suggest to the Senator, if the chairman please, that possibly it might necessitate the action of the State legislature in many instances to raise the money or otherwise to complete the work, and therefore I do not believe six months is any too long.

Mr. NORRIS. The facts are that there ought to be no notice, in my judgment, because this comes long after the first road has been constructed. Let us see how it would operate.

When the first apportionment of funds was to be brought about there would be no road constructed, of course, that had been partially paid for by Federal funds, and then we would build a road in some State partially paid for out of the Federal Treasury. Now, the State has agreed to maintain that road in practically as good condition as it is in when it is completed, but the State violates its agreement. It does not do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, perhaps the State has not recognized that it has not kept its agreement. It may feel that it has kept it, that it has properly maintained the road. It is a question of difference of opinion between the Secretary of Agriculture and his supervising engineer, on the one hand, and the engineer of the State highway department on the other hand.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senate would get that idea right in its mind. It seems to me the Senator is opposing this motion now on the ground that there might be a disagreement between the Federal authorities and the State authorities as to whether the State had maintained the highway. That is true; there might be that kind of a disagreement; there might be an honest one. But if we permit it to remain in the bill just as it is that disagreement is just as likely to occur then as though it went out of it, because at the end of six months, when notice has been given, the State authorities may say, "Why, we have complied with our agreement and we have kept this road properly in repair."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then the Secretary of War is authorized to withhold all future appropriations if they do.

Mr. NORRIS. And the Secretary of Agriculture could say then: "You have not, and I withhold the appropriation." So, as far as that part is concerned, this amendment does not change it one way or the other. That condition may still be brought about just as well with the language that I want to strike out in the bill as though it were out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I just want to ask the Senator one further question. Does he believe that three months' notice is sufficient time to permit the State authorities to put their roads in such condition as would meet the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture after notice has been given?

Mr. NORRIS. It depends upon the condition of the road at the time he went there. It may be that six months' notice would not be enough. Perhaps it would take two years' time; but if you do that you may just as well strike out of the bill everything that is in it about maintenance and say: "We will build these roads and require no agreement about maintenance." If you require an agreement for maintenance and then say that when that agreement is violated you have got to give so much time and they can get the money anyway, you might just as well leave it out at the beginning.

It strikes me that we ought to get away from this idea that there may be a disagreement between the State authorities and the Federal authorities. Let me emphasize that point. The language of this amendment has nothing to do with that. It will be just the same whether this amendment is voted up or voted down. If we want to assume that the Secretary of Agriculture will say to the States before any notice is given, "You have not maintained the road properly"—if you are going to assume that he is going to be unfair or that there is an honest disagreement, then it is just as reasonable to assume that after he has given the notice and the six months have expired that same disagreement is just as likely to exist then as though no notice were given; and if it exists then, the Secretary will withhold future contributions.

The danger is that during the six months that must elapse after the notice is given another contribution of Federal funds will be made to a State that does not maintain the roads that have already been built; and thus the money is gone, and there is no help for it. There is not any way then in which to get the money back. You have permitted the State to violate the agreement; you have permitted the State to get the money without maintaining the highway. If the law is emphatic, as it seems to me it ought to be, it is no hardship on anybody to say: "If you do not maintain this road, you can not have the next contribution." That is what the law means, and, in fact, that is what it says; but you evade the law by compelling the Secretary of Agriculture to give six months' notice before he can withhold the money.

If that were left just in that way, without any notice, and it came time to parcel out the funds for another year, it would be the duty of the Secretary of Agriculture to withhold the funds from any State that had not maintained the road during the preceding year. If you leave it in, he will give them the money and the six months' notice besides, and they could go on that year and not maintain it and get the money, and when the next apportionment came around he would give another six months' notice, and before that expired another apportionment would be made, and thus on to the end of the five years with absolutely no maintenance on the part of the State, and all the money gone out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. OLIVER obtained the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not yield.

I think the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is entirely right in his contention. If the States are to receive money under this legislation, they ought to receive it under the agreement and with the distinct understanding that they are from the very beginning to maintain the roads that are constructed under the provisions of this proposed legislation. Therefore I think that the Secretary of Agriculture, immediately he discovers that a State is not maintaining any of the roads that are constructed by virtue of this legislation, should notify the State authorities that they will not get any further apportionment for additional road building until they arrange properly to maintain the roads already built, and let the burden be upon the State to arrange from the very beginning for properly maintaining its roads.

As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, it is to omit, on line 25, page 12, everything after the word "thereof." Am I correct?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Then I would suggest, as an amendment to that amendment, that in place of the words so omitted something like the following be added:

But upon satisfactory evidence that such failure of maintenance no longer exists, he may resume the contributions to which the State would be entitled under the provisions of this act.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am very glad to accept that and modify my amendment accordingly. I think myself that improves it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, let us see how it reads.

Mr. OLIVER. I suggest that that part of the bill be read with the addition that has been suggested, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 25, after the word "thereof," it is proposed to insert:

But upon satisfactory evidence that such failure of maintenance no longer exists, he may resume the contributions to which the State would be entitled under the provisions of this act.

So that, as amended, it will read:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall withhold apportionment of funds to any State in which roads constructed under the provisions of this act have not, in his judgment, been properly maintained by the State, or any subdivision thereof, but upon satisfactory evidence that such failure of maintenance no longer exists he may resume the contributions to which the State would be entitled under the provisions of this act.

Mr. NORRIS. And then strike out the language that is——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want to understand this proposition. Do I understand that the motion of the Senator from Nebraska to strike out notice has gone out of the bill?

Mr. NORRIS. Oh, no. I have made a motion to strike out, commencing after the word "thereof," in line 25, page 12, down to and including the word "thereof," in line 3, page 13.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I have accepted and modified my amendment by including, upon the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], the insertion of the words that have been read instead of that language.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then the Senator's proposition is to accept the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania in lieu of his own?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I add it to mine.

Mr. LIPPITT. It is a motion to strike out and insert.

Mr. NORRIS. I move to strike out and insert.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, in doing that the Senator strikes out the six months' notice.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I strike out the same language. I have only modified my motion by including the language suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] in lieu of that which I seek to strike out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, we could not accept an amendment like that, because in that case you would strike out the notice entirely. We do not give them any notice.

Mr. OLIVER. They ought not to get any notice. They ought to maintain the road.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word. I hope this amendment will not prevail. I think there is a reason, and a very sound reason, for the six months' notice. The highway authorities in the States, I think we may presume, will follow out the requirements and the spirit of this law. But it may be that now and then we will have a highway commission or highway authorities within a State who are delinquent in the performance of their duty toward the maintenance of a road. The real parties interested in the road are not the officials or a commission, but they are the people, and in order that the people themselves may be protected this notice should be given, so that in case of a delinquency on the part of the highway commission in a State the people on receipt of the notice could stir the commission to action, and thus the people themselves will be protected by reason of this notice.

Mr. President, I think this is safely guarded. On page 13, beginning in line 3, there is this provision:

The Secretary of Agriculture is also authorized temporarily to decline to issue warrants under this act upon failure on the part of any State, or its State highway department, to comply with the provisions of this act or upon breach of agreement made with him pursuant to this act.

That will protect the Federal Government. It will prevent the payment of any money by the Secretary of Agriculture to the State until the road is properly maintained. The effect of the notice will be to inform the public that the State authorities have not been doing their duty, and they in turn will urge the necessary action on the part of the authorities.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator from South Dakota takes his seat——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have been in session six hours. The heat is very severe. I do not think the few of us who have attended diligently and tried to forward the legislation ought to be kept here any longer to-day. I will ask the Senator from Alabama if he is ready to adjourn?

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me just a moment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment offered by the committee, and I ask that it be printed, and printed in the RECORD.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table and be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

That in order to establish, construct, improve, and maintain public roads that are now or may hereafter be needed for use as post roads, military roads, or for interstate commerce, there be, and hereby is, created a fund to be known as the United States highway fund. Said fund shall be raised in the manner herein provided; but the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to receive and place to the credit of said fund any money that may be contributed from other sources, and to expend the same upon the order of the United States highway commission or in accordance with the conditions of the contribution.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of providing money for the United States highway fund the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue and sell, on and after July 1, 1918, at par with accrued interest, coupon or registered bonds of the United States, in such form as he may prescribe and in denominations of $20 or multiples of that sum, said bonds to be payable in coin 50 years from date of issue, and to bear interest, payable in coin semiannually, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, the total amount of said bonds not to exceed $500,000,000, and the issue and sale of same not to exceed such amounts as may be necessary from time to time to enable the Treasurer of the United States to make payments from the United States highway fund to the several States in accordance with the provisions of this act. Bonds issued under authority of this act, or the income therefrom, shall not be subject to taxation of any kind for any purpose. Bonds authorized by this section shall be first offered at par as a popular loan, under such regulations, prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, as will give opportunity to the citizens of the United States to participate in the subscriptions to such loan; and in allotting said bonds the several subscriptions of individuals shall be first accepted, and the subscriptions for the lowest amounts shall be first allotted. Any portion of any issue of said bonds not subscribed for as above provided may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury, at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one twenty-fifth of 1 per cent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

SEC. 3. That before any State shall be entitled to take advantage of the provisions of this act it shall establish by law a State highway commission, which said commission shall have general supervision of road construction and improvement in that State and of the expenditure of money received from the United States highway fund, subject only to the provisions of this act and of State laws not inconsistent herewith. It shall be the duty of each State highway commission annually, on or before the 1st day of January, to make to the governor of the State in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations, including a statement of receipts and expenditures, copies of which said report shall be sent to the Treasurer of the United States and to the United States Highway Commission.

SEC. 4. That the United States highway fund shall be apportioned and credited to the several States in the following manner: The United States Highway Commission, hereinafter created, shall ascertain in the most practicable manner from the best information available the total land area, the population according to the last Federal census, the total assessed valuation of all taxable property, and the total mileage of public roads in each of the several States, and shall compute the percentage of the total of each of these four items possessed by each State. They shall then compute the average of the four percentages for each State, and this average shall be the per cent of the $500,000,000 United States highway fund that shall be apportioned and credited to each State. Said commission shall notify the Treasurer of the United States of the result of their ascertainment and computation, which shall be made as of a date to be fixed by the commission. Such fund so apportioned shall be paid to the States only in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 5. That whenever any State, through its duly authorized agents, shall apply for any part of its share of the United States highway fund, but not exceeding 20 per cent thereof in any year, and shall deposit with the Treasurer of the United States its bonds for such amount payable in 50 years and bearing interest, payable semianually, at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue and sell, at par and accrued interest, in the manner prescribed in section 2, United States highway bonds to the amount that may be necessary to pay to said State the amount of money applied for, and upon the sale of said bonds shall pay over the proceeds to the custodian of the public funds of the State: Provided, That the bonds of any State shall not be accepted if the total amount of bonds of such State, including the bonds issued to take advantage of the provisions of this act, shall exceed 10 per cent of the amount of the assessed valuation of all taxable property in such State: Provided further, That any State desiring to do so may deposit with the Treasury of the United States its 4 per cent bonds maturing in not less than 20 years, or may redeem its 50-year bonds at any time after 20 years from date of issue, but upon redemption of such bonds, whatever the period for which issued such State shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in addition to the balance due on the principal after deducting the accumulated sinking fund, a premium of 2 per cent on such balance due on bonds redeemed, together with accrued interest. When the Treasurer of the United States shall receive any payment of interest on State bonds deposited in the manner above provided he shall devote three-fourths thereof to the payment of the interest due on the corresponding United States highway bonds, and one-fourth, herein designated as a sinking fund, he shall deposit in the Treasury of the United States to be used from time to time for the redemption of United States highway bonds as provided herein. The Treasurer of the United States shall keep an account with each State that shall deposit bonds and receive funds under the provisions of this act, and shall credit said State with interest compounded annually at the rate of 3 per cent per annum on the sinking funds paid in. Money received upon the principal of State bonds shall also be credited to the sinking fund, but no interest credit shall be allowed the State thereon. At the time of the maturity of the bonds deposited by any State, if all payments have been made when due, the Treasurer of the United States shall cancel said bonds and return them to the State issuing the same. Whenever and each time the sinking-fund accumulation shall amount to $1,000,000, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall, and he is hereby, directed to go into the open market and purchase, at par if possible, $1,000,000 par value of the United States highway bonds. If unable to purchase all or any at par then he is authorized and directed to pay such premium as necessary determined by competition after public notice of not less than 30 days, but not exceeding a premium of 2 per cent and accrued interest. If he be unable thus to secure the full amount of bonds necessary to comply with this provision, then he is authorized and directed to call at par, plus premium of 2 per cent and accrued interest, such bonds, determined by drawing of bond numbers from among the largest denominations outstanding, as will make up the $1,000,000 purchase. These bonds thus purchased out of the sinking-fund accumulation shall be retained in the United States Treasury, being stamped by the United States Treasurer "Nonnegotiable," but "kept alive," in order that the United States Government may receive for the sinking fund the benefit of the interest payments on the bonds thus purchased.

SEC. 6. That on the 1st day of February of each year, after the year 1918, the Treasurer of the United States shall pay to the custodian of the public funds of each State, from any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount of money equal to one-half the amount such State has expended out of its own funds for the maintenance of public roads during the preceding calendar year, but in no case to exceed 2½ per cent of the amount of State bonds said State has deposited with the Treasurer of the United States under the provisions of this act. The money so paid shall be expended by said State only in the maintenance of public roads. The Treasurer of the United States shall withhold the payment of moneys to any State under the provisions of this section in the event that such State shall default in payment of any interest or principal due.

Whenever the United States Highway Commission shall certify to the Treasurer of the United States that any portion of the amount expended by any State for the maintenance of public roads, during the preceding calendar year, has not been expended with reasonable effectiveness, one-half of such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such State: Provided, That if any State shall fail to issue bonds as provided in section 5 hereof, it shall nevertheless be entitled, during the period such failure to issue bonds shall continue, subject to all the conditions and limitations set forth in this section, to receive the maintenance fund provided for in this section; but in no case shall such maintenance fund exceed the amount which such State would have been entitled to receive if it had issued the bonds authorized by section 5 hereof.

SEC. 7. That there is hereby created a United States Highway Commission, to be composed of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the chairman and ranking minority member of the House Committee on Roads, the Director of the Office of Public Roads, and a United States Army engineer to be detailed from time to time by the Secretary of War. Such commission shall have only an advisory voice in the expenditure of the United States highway fund in the several States. It shall have its head office in the District of Columbia, but may create highway divisions, never exceeding in number one for each State, and may maintain a division office in charge of a United States highway engineer in each division. Said commission shall have power to employ such clerical and expert assistance as may be provided for by appropriations made by Congress from time to time, and may require the assistance and cooperation of the officers and employees of any department in its work.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide for Federal aid to good roads, to permit the several States to utilize the superior credit of the United States in raising road-construction funds, to aid the States in maintenance of roads, and to create a national highway commission."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 4876) to provide for the increase in the number of cadets at the United States Military Academy, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HAY, Mr. DENT, and Mr. KAHN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill (H. R. 12193); which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PHELAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to make a survey and location of a public highway within the Sequoia National Forest, State of California, intended to be proposed by him to the Agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 12717), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR PORTO RICO.

Mr. GRONNA submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1217) to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 173) which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to report to Congress at the earliest practicable date, not later than December 4, 1916:

First. Specific plans for improvement of the harbors and connecting channels which, in his judgment, after consultation had with the Secretary of the Navy, will best provide adequate facilities for operations of the fleet for defense of the harbors of Portland, Me.; Boston, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; New London, New Haven, and Bridgeport, Conn.; New York, N. Y.; Norfolk, Va.; Savannah and Brunswick, Ga.; Charleston, S. C.; New Orleans, La.; Galveston, Tex.; San Diego and San Francisco, Cal.; and Seattle, Wash.

Second. The feasible extensions requisite to make existing approved projects for improvement of the aforementioned harbors available for the purposes stated in the foregoing paragraph.

Third. The cost of each such several improvement, calculated upon the basis of completion thereof, under contract, within five years.

Fourth. The percentage, not exceeding 30 per cent, of the cost of each such improvement which, in the judgment of the Secretary of War, should be contributed by the several cities or State governments, in consideration of the completion within five years of the improvement recommended by the Secretary of War.

Fifth. The replies of the local authorities and State governments to the propositions to them submitted by the Secretary of War to contribute to the carrying out and the cost of such several improvements.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on April 20, 1916, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 4889. An act to renew patent No. 21053;

S. 3984. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; and

S. 4399. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In view of the fact that this is Good Friday and we have been at work since 11 o'clock, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m. Friday, April 21, 1916) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 22, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, April 21, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer.

Infinite and Eternal Spirit, all love excelling, pour out upon us of Thine inexhaustible treasures the things which shall quicken us to larger, nobler life, that we may go forward to greater victories intellectually, morally, spiritually, as individuals and as a Nation, under the spiritual leadership of Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a copy of a letter which I have this day written to the Antisaloon League of Oregon in answer to certain charges preferred against me by that organization.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter which he has written to the Antisaloon League of Oregon in answer to certain strictures which they have made upon him. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4526. An act authorizing the Arikara, Gros Ventre, and Mandan Tribes of Indians of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N. Dak., to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 3575. An act to amend section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to permit the Comptroller of the Currency to deposit upon interest the assets of insolvent national banks in other national banks of the same or of an adjacent city or town; and

H. R. 12027. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill H. R. 12455, from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. What is the bill about?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. The bill provides for the lease by the Secretary of War to the Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. of its right of way across the Government property on the Great Kanawha River improvement at Lock and Dam No. 6. The company constructed its line over the Government property and have been using it for five years, but they were notified by the Secretary of War that they would have from September next on to get the right by a bill through Congress.

The SPEAKER. Now, does it go on Government land?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes, sir. On the United States Government property along the banks of the Kanawha River.

The SPEAKER. How did the Government come to have any land along the banks of the Kanawha River?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. At Lock and Dam No. 6 they own about four or five acres along the banks of that river. This proposed arrangement does not interfere with the operation of the lock. In fact, it is of benefit to the Government property.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, as I caught the reading of the title, that the bill was properly referred in the first instance.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Let me make this statement. I thought it was, and the Committee on Military Affairs took it up and acted on it.

The SPEAKER. The easiest way to dispose of it is to withdraw temporarily the request and let the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] read it. It will save the time of the House.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I say just a word? My attention was called to that bill by the War Department, and the Chief of Engineers is decidedly of the opinion that it should have gone to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. But the trouble about it is he does not know anything about the rules of the House.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I was going to say that his opinion does not control here. But this deals with some land that was purchased by money furnished by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. What has the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to do with this thing now?

Mr. SPARKMAN. It had everything to do with it in the first place. It furnished the funds with which the land was purchased for the use of the Government in building locks and dams. They are not using this land now for that purpose, it is true, but it was bought with funds furnished through the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House of Representatives, and part of this land—although I do not know—may be used in the future for that purpose.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, let me say that the bill is entirely satisfactory to the Secretary of War, and he suggests in his report that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors act on it. It is satisfactory to both committees. It is satisfactory to the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. I know, but the Secretary of War has absolutely nothing whatever to do with where a bill shall be referred. Now, he is a very great and good man, no doubt——

Mr. GARRETT. It is perfectly evident to me that this bill was properly referred in the first instance. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I regret very much that the gentleman objects.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution and ask for its present consideration, and pending the reading of it, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that the title of the resolution be read, and a brief report accompanying it also be read.

The SPEAKER. Is it a privileged resolution?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the title of the resolution be read and that the report be read in lieu of reading the rest of the resolution.

Mr. BARNHART. I have not any objection to reading the resolution.

Mr. MANN. We can not have a vote upon the resolution without having it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (No. 98) to print as a public document the final report and testimony submitted to Congress by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

Resolved, etc., That the final report of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, including the report of Basil M. Manly, director of research and investigation, and the individual reports and statements of the several commissioners, together with all the testimony taken at its hearings, except exhibits submitted in printed form, which shall be appropriately referred to in said testimony, be printed as a Senate document under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; and that 10,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and that of the final report of said commission 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 70,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives: Provided, That the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to reprint copies of the same for sale or distribution as provided by law.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

There was no objection.

The report (H. Rept. 583) was read, as follows:

Mr. BARNHART, from the Committee on Printing, makes the following report (to accompany S. J. Res. 98):

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration the Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) providing for the printing of the final report, complete testimony, and exhibits of the Commission on Industrial Relations, reports the same back to the House with a recommendation that the resolution do pass. The resolution provides for the printing of 100,000 copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations in one volume, as originally passed by the House of Representatives, except that the binding shall be in paper instead of cloth. In addition thereto the resolution provides for the printing of 10,000 copies of the complete testimony taken by the commission at its various hearings, together with all the exhibits submitted with such testimony, except its exhibits which are in printed form. It is intended that the printed exhibits shall be referred to in the testimony by title, author, and publisher, so that they may be properly identified, and thus made available to any person who desires to obtain such printed exhibits from libraries or publishers that have copies of the same on hand.

The estimated cost of the printing proposed by this resolution is as follows:

100,000 copies final report	$9,729.88
10,000 copies complete testimony (7 volumes of 1,008 pages each)	54,978.84
10,000 copies of exhibits, except those heretofore printed (3 volumes of 1,008 pages each)	27,979.53
Total cost	92,688.25

While this committee unanimously agrees that it is a mistake to bind the report in paper, as the publication is intended as a referenee book, and will doubtless be used as such for many years to come, and ought, therefore, to be bound in cloth, representatives of the Industrial Commission and representatives of organized labor, especially interested in the prompt publication of these reports, signified their willingness before the Senate committee to have the publication bound in paper, and in order to expedite the matter it is the decision of this committee that the provisions of the resolution as it comes to the House shall stand unchanged.

The unencumbered balance of the allotment for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, is $177,268.26. The said Senate joint resolution is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the final report of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, including the report of Basil M. Manly, director of research and investigation, and the individual reports and statements of the several commissioners, together with all the testimony taken at its hearings, except exhibits submitted in printed form, which shall be appropriately referred to in said testimony, be printed as a Senate document under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; and that 10,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 2,500 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 7,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives; and that of the final report of said commission 100,000 additional copies be printed, of which 30,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 70,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives: Provided, That the superintendent of documents is hereby authorized to reprint copies of the same for sale or distribution as provided by law.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The resolution was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana how much was appropriated for the purposes of the Commission on Industrial Relations altogether?

Mr. BARNHART. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For the work done in conducting investigations throughout the country?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. There was originally appropriated, as I understand, $350,000, and afterwards an additional $100,000, this latter with the proviso that it should be used for finishing the investigation and the publication of the report, and the commission did publish 10,000 copies of its report.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But they did not receive a sufficient amount of money to complete the publication?

Mr. BARNHART. No. They did not have enough money to publish the evidence or the exhibits.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars has already been expended in conducting the investigations and in such printing as has been done?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Now this resolution provides for the expenditure of $90,000 additional?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is correct, is it?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That would make a total of $540,000 for the purposes of the commission and to complete publication of its reports?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; $540,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any reason to believe that this will be the end of the appropriations for this purpose?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, the Committee on Printing can give no assurance of what some other committee might do. The fact of the matter is, the Committee on Printing has had nothing whatever to do with the Commission on Industrial Relations, that had authority for making the expenditures, except to report this resolution for the publication of their findings.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This $90,000 comes out of the common printing fund?

Mr. BARNHART. Out of the congressional printing fund.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And reduces its availability to that extent?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman whether these 100,000 copies of the report are to be separate volumes?

Mr. BARNHART. The report itself is in one volume.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We have had a number of requests; most of the Members of Congress, I assume, have had requests, coming largely in a stereotyped form, for this publication. As originally presented to Congress, if I recollect aright, the report was so extensive that it would have required numerous volumes to comprehend everything in print?

Mr. BARNHART. Not the report. The gentleman is mistaken as to that. The report has been all the time in one volume, but the evidence as it came in here, together with the exhibits, was not classified, had not been edited, and it contained a great many references, such as whole volumes of printed books, and sometimes two or three volumes in a reference, that were made a part of the exhibits. But these have all been edited out and the publication as it appears will merely carry citations to the references that are omitted—those that have already been published and which are available in libraries and book stores.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many volumes are there of the evidence?

Mr. BARNHART. Seven; and three of the exhibits.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it the idea that they will go to the Members of Congress or to libraries, and that the single volume report shall contain index references?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, first of all, the usual number of all of these publications—1,316—will be printed, enough to supply public libraries, and so forth, as provided by law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to know what Members of Congress will now have to distribute. Will they have the seven volumes in sets, or will they have to distribute them in single volumes?

Mr. BARNHART. They will have to distribute but one volume, if they want to send out only the report of the commission; but if they want to send out the evidence, they will have to send seven volumes of 1,008 pages each; and if the exhibits, three volumes of 1,008 pages each.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How many volumes will there be available for distribution by Members of Congress?

Mr. BARNHART. There will be 10,000 copies of the testimony printed—7,500 for the House and 2,500 for the Senate—and if the gentleman will divide 7,500 by 443 he will get the number that will go to each Member of the House, the fraction over going to the superintendent of documents for sale.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We shall have so many copies of the industrial hearings. Does that mean that I shall send seven volumes of testimony and one volume of the report?

Mr. BARNHART. If they ask for the report of the commission, you would send only one volume; but if they asked for the evidence and the exhibits with the report, you would have to send the report in one volume, the evidence in seven volumes, and the exhibits in three volumes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] suggests to me that each Member will have about 170 copies of the hearings.

Mr. BARNHART. No; about 160 copies of the report and about 16 sets each of the testimony and the exhibits in addition. There will be distributed for the House 70,000 copies of the report. It will be about 160 copies to each Member, as I compute it mentally.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will be a matter of convenience for Members to know what they will have to send out. Now, if there are only 17 complete copies of the hearings it will be well to send those to the libraries, for instance.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], you say, figures that there would be 170 copies of the hearings?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But there will be a greater number of those single volume reports?

Mr. BARNHART. Well, we will have about 160 each of those, and about 16 sets each of the exhibits and evidence, as nearly as I can estimate it here.

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be about 165 copies of the individual reports.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken, and the joint resolution was passed.

On motion of Mr. BARNHART, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For silvicultural, dendrological, and other experiments and investigations independently or in cooperation with other branches of the Federal Government, with States and with individuals, to determine the best methods for the conservative management of forests and forest lands, $78,728.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the total amount of the expense and also the receipts for the past year of the Forest Service? The gentleman read it once, but I did not succeed in getting it.

Mr. LEVER. I have read that into the RECORD several times.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know the gentleman did, but there was so much confusion at the time that I did not get it.

Mr. LEVER. In round numbers, the receipts were $2,900,000 and the total expenditure in this bill, in round numbers, is $5,500,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I remember it that way. The other day, Mr. Chairman, when we were considering this bill the distinguished Speaker of the House propounded a very interesting query when he wanted to know why it was that these forests cost so much more to administer than they produced in the way of revenue. I recall that in 1907 Mr. Gifford Pinchot, then at the head of the Forest Service, appeared before a committee of the Senate and made the statement that in five years the forests would be self-sustaining. I find that during the five years following that statement, including 1907, the total cost was $23,382,000 and the total revenue $11,495,000, or, to state it in round numbers, ever since we have had these forest reserves it has cost the Nation $2 for every dollar's worth of timber that it has taken off them. I would like to know how it is going to profit this country to continue to expend twice as much in reference to these forest reserves as we receive from them, and in making that statement I include what is received in the way of rents for pasturage. The difference would be still greater if it was confined only to the forests. The distinguished Speaker said at the time that he was in favor of having a special committee to investigate this subject go to Europe and study conditions over there in relation to their forests. I think perhaps it might be well to have a special committee, but I hope if such a committee is appointed that it will go out West and study our own forests. If they will do that, they will find that practically one-half of the so-called forests have no timber on them; that they are sheep and cattle pastures. I notice in reading through the hearings that a portion of the appropriation is to be used by the Forest Service in experimenting how to economically raise cattle. We also expend quite a sum in regard to raising and pasturing sheep. I would like to know what the raising of cattle and the pasturing of sheep have to do with the national forests. Ever since I have been a Member of this House I have tried unsuccessfully to get a statement from the Forest Service as to how much of the land included in the Forest Service actually was timbered land, but I have never yet been able to receive such information, and I wonder whether the gentleman in charge of the bill has that information now so that he could give it to the House?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that about one-third of the total area is really grazing land, not forestry land at all.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is in round figures. One reason why it costs so much to run the Forest Service in proportion to the revenue received——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I would not have asked for this additional five minutes if there had not been so much confusion. One reason why it costs so much to administer the Forst Service is because of the tremendous tracts they have that ought not to be in the forest reserves. They have some 20,000,000 acres in Alaska. There is no excuse whatever for having that vast tract in the forest reserve. It is expensive to administer, and it has no trees upon it that are of any marketable value, or at least very few. Three-fourths of that forest reserve in Alaska have no merchantable timber on it whatever. It consists of glaciers and icebergs, and yet we are put to the expense annually of care for it. Take it out all through the West, and they have vast regions in these forest reserves that they administer where there is no necessity of having them at all. They are not cutting the timber.

Just let me give the House an illustration as to how these forest reserves are administered. Take it in the State of Washington, where they have 12,000,000 acres, and at the rate they have been cutting over that forest reserve it would take 35,000 years to cut over it once, and yet Washington is one of the States of which they boast of the great progress they have made in forestry. One-fifth of all of the money that is appropriated for the Agricultural Department goes to forestry. It constantly increases in expense and does not increase proportionately in revenue. To show the difference in the way we conduct the forest reserves in this country and how they do it in other countries, not going to Europe, just cross the line into British Columbia, and it will be found that they can so conduct their forest reserves that they are a source of revenue. Neither can it be argued that it can not be done in this country. Take it in my own State. The State, as I recall, has some 2,000,000 acres of timbered land, 660,000 acres of which are within the limits of the national forests and can not be used or handled, while the Government has 12,000,000 acres. Yet the State has so administered its portion of our forests that they have now, as I recall, realized on it some $60,000,000. They are a source of great wealth to the State, yet the Government can not conduct its portion of the same forest in that State so as to get more than one-half of the expense of administering it. The other day one of the departments, I think the Department of the Interior, submitted a letter in reporting on a bill that had been introduced in the Senate, similar to the one that I introduced into the House, and the Secretary gave as one of the reasons why certain portions of the public lands should not be turned back to the State that the State of Washington had so administered its forests and its other public lands that it had accumulated a great fund and made much money out of it, and for that reason the Government ought not to permit them to handle any more of the public lands, but that the Government should keep them because the State was becoming wealthy on what it had received!

So it is not necessary for us to go to Europe to find out that there is something wrong in regard to the administration of the Forest Service; and if we could have a committee appointed that would make a report, we could probably eliminate a great portion of these forest reserves that are a constant expense and of no value to the Government, we might put this Forest Service upon a paying basis, and it would be to the advantage of the Forest Service and to the whole country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not join in the criticism of the Forest Service or of the method of management of the national forests. It seems to me be an unjust criticism to say that the national forests are not a source of profit at present but are a source of expenditure over the receipts. The men who own virgin timber in the United States can not cut it all off at once. If we should cut all the mature timber in one year, the product would be valueless and we would be left exhausted, so far as timber is concerned, in the following years. Everybody who owns virgin timber that is mature does not cut it off now. While he holds it, it is a source of expense and not a source of revenue, because he has the taxes to pay, and the interest runs against the investment. One of the very reasons for the national forests is that the Government can afford to carry these forests without cutting the timber all off now, while private owners can not so well afford to carry the private forests.

We shall want timber in the future years. Our children will want timber, and it is idle to say that it is the duty of the General Government to throw upon the market all of the material timber in the national forests at the present time and leave nothing for the future. I think the national forest management are to be commended rather than to be criticized. They do cut some of the mature timber, prodded as they are by gentlemen in whose States these national forests are located. If anything, I think there has been undue haste in cutting the timber rather than in keeping it back, and if the Government should cut all the timber in the national forests it could sell, the gentlemen who now criticize their management would then be insisting that the Government was destroying the value of all the private timber lands in the United States and putting upon the market such a flood of lumber as could not be absorbed and ruining not only the prospects of the future but the ownership of the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For estimating and appraising timber and other resources on the national forests preliminary to disposal by sale or to the issue of occupancy permits, and for emergency expenses incident to their sale or use, $60,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in defense of the Forest Service and of the rate of cutting. I would not undertake to say that my distinguished friend from Illinois is not correct, but I will put against his statement some of the statements that have been made by the Forest Service itself. Now, no one, so far as I know, argues that we ought to cut all of the mature timber; but I do not know anyone who objects to cutting all the timber that is ripe and that will soon decay. The Forest Service themselves estimate that they could cut $65,000,000 worth of timber from the forest reserves in the Pacific Coast States without in any degree reducing the supply. Or, in other words, they estimate to-day that they are cutting only 7 per cent of the ripe timber, and that 93 per cent of it is rotting in the forests. Let me read some specific statements that show how rapidly they are cutting the timber in that country. I will take for my text a statement made by Mr. Gifford Pinchot in Pearson's Magazine on May 19, 1913. He says:

For the last three years the cut has averaged a little over 30,000,000 feet, and for last year it reached 37,000,000 feet—

Referring to my State of Washington——

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I am informed that the men who get the contracts for cutting the timber in the national forests are generally the men who have large timber holdings themselves, because they are the only ones who can carry on these large operations. Is that the gentleman's information?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is largely true, according to my information.

Mr. KAHN. And that naturally enhances the value of the privately owned timberland, does it not?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] sought to convey the impression that they were cutting all the timber, and sought to convey the impression that he did not want them to cut the timber in such a way as to deplete the forests. We all agree upon that theory. What we are criticizing is the fact that they let this vast quantity of timber rot in the forests. Now, what do these figures mean which I have quoted? They mean that in the most densely forested region of the world, where 150,000 feet are frequently cut from a single acre, the Forest Service annually is cutting from each acre less than 1½ feet. They mean that in the year 1912, when the Forest Service was forced to sell some fire-killed timber, they actually sold from the forests of Washington at the rate of one plank 12 inches wide, 3 feet long, and 1 inch thick from each acre. That means that in a great empire containing 23,000 square miles, a region greater than Rhode Island, greater than Delaware, greater than Connecticut, greater than New Jersey, and greater than Massachusetts, greater than all of those States combined, the Forest Service in the name of conservation is annually cutting 350 acres of timber. Or to make the calculation in another way, as I said a while ago, at the rate they are cutting the timber in my State it would take them 35,000 years to cut over it once. I wonder if my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thinks that the forests would reproduce themselves in 35,000 years. We are not contending that they should cut all of the timber that is ready for the market. We are contending that they should cut a portion of what otherwise will rot in the forests. Upon the one hand we have complaint made of the high price of lumber. We hear from the Middle West the complaint that lumber is so high that it becomes a burden upon the people to use it. And yet out on the Pacific coast there is annually rotting in the forests $65,000,000 worth of timber, according to the estimate made by the Forest Service itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with all the patience I could summon to the attacks of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] upon a former officer of the United States Government, Mr. Gifford Pinchot. I do not know anything about the quarrel of the gentleman from Washington with Mr. Pinchot. I have no interest in it. I do not know how true the charges which he makes may be, but I suspect that they are probably as true as one would expect them to be when delivered against a man who has no place on this floor and no opportunity to answer them and present the facts upon which they are based. I have no doubt that there has been and are errors of administration in the Forest Service. It is in a large measure a new service; it is very largely in the experimental stage, and we are just attempting to work out a policy which shall be pursued. The gentleman from Washington is exceedingly impatient with respect to the working out of this policy. He would like to have us go into these forests and cut down all the ripe timber and flood the market, I presume, in order that he may take the other horn of the dilemma and charge that the Forest Service was attempting to break down the lumber business of the country. I say I do not know how true the charges which he is making may be, but I do know this—that Mr. Pinchot has done as much to establish upon a sound basis the principles upon which these forests should be handled and the water power of the country administered as any man in this country. I know he has done as much as any man can do to place this policy upon sound principles, and I think he is at least entitled to the thanks of the American people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For other miscellaneous forest investigations, and for collating, digesting, recording, illustrating, and distributing the results of the experiments and investigations herein provided for, $33,140.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is undoubtedly very familiar with forests, and I have no doubt at all very familiar with the forests in Washington, with which I am not personally familiar at all, and yet everyone knows that when people are lumbering they do not go into a mature forest for the purpose of cutting down the rotting trees to make lumber out of, as suggested by my friend from Washington. You go into the forest to cut down the mature trees, and if you go into the forest with the idea of cutting down the mature trees generally throughout the country you would cut down all the forests in the land. It is not sufficient to say that all he wants is to have cut down the rotting timber and trees which may blow down or rot down. If you are going to cut the forests for lumber, you cut the mature timber in the forests and many a private owner of forests has trees which have reached the point of maturity, gone past it, which are now on the decay, and you would think that he were foolish if he started in to lumber simply the decaying trees, the ones which have gone past maturity, and leaves the mature trees. You can not lumber in that way, either in Washington or anywhere else. The policy of the Government must be either to cut off its mature trees throughout the country in its national forests or else to conserve for future generations some of the forests which it has which have already reached maturity. Many of these forests probably reached their maturity a thousand or more years ago. They have had trees decaying ever since the first tree reached the point and passed maturity. You can not cut them all off at once. We have gotten past the point generally in the country where we cut off trees for the purpose of getting rid of them so that we may cultivate the soil beneath them. That was the case in the early days in Ohio and Indiana and many of the other States, but we can not afford now to destroy all the mature timber on the land for the purpose of realizing upon that in order to destroy the forests which the Government owns and will hold for the benefit of those who come after us.

Mr. RAKER rose.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would submit a request for unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, much has been said here about going into the forests and cutting out or selecting to cut out all the matured timber. It seems to me that anyone who understands anything about timber would not state to the committee that you can go and select what they talk about as mature timber and leave the forest in any condition at all. Trees that range from a thousand to 6,000 years old and over, according to the best estimates of their age, are the best-looking, the most healthy, and the best-growing trees in the forests to-day. The pines range from 2 to 20 feet in diameter and 250 feet in height. The redwoods range from 2 to 34 feet in diameter and 380 feet in height and they are growing right along, and when you go into one of these forests you destroy everything in sight. In regard to the spruce trees, which are from 2 to 15 feet in diameter, scattered over these large territories, when they go in everything has to be swept off when the lumbering operations begin. Anyone who has been over that country realizes and knows that there are only a few places that you can select the larger trees, cut them off, and leave the smaller one growing. In the redwood country you make arrangements and then commence to cut, and you cut down everything in sight, and then after it has been cut down you set fire through it and burn up the brush before you even commence your logging.

That is what some gentlemen would have done with the forests, which simply means an absolute destruction. That privately owned timberland is being used in that way, and it will continue, although there should be some means devised to check it if possible. The Forest Service in their policy of cutting or doing all they can to have the cutting done where they have control so as to leave as many of the younger trees stand, disposing of the brush by piling it up and burning it, so that the younger trees may have a chance to grow. Those of us who can look back in California for 40 years and see what was once destroyed, can see now that by a little care and attention, by keeping out the underbrush, new trees are started. Proper logging and proper handling will help advance this good work and assist in reforesting the land.

It has been stated that the holding of the forests and holding of the timber by the Government raises the price. Now, the contrary is the result. Otherwise those who are directly interested in cutting the timber would not propose any reservations and control over this timber by the Government. The result is, from actual experience and demonstration, that the Forest Service advertises and fixes its price to-day according to the market value of timber or stumpage at that time fixed upon what is being sold by the lumbermen in that community. So it is an advantage to the Government. It does not ruthlessly slaughter the timber, and there can be no question on earth but that this Government should not destroy this remaining timber, that it should not flood the market, that it should not permit its timber to be ruthlessly destroyed simply because some individuals are holding large tracts and want large profits out of it. They are entitled to proper return for their investments. The Government should receive a like consideration and not permit a great natural resource to be destroyed or needlessly cut. There is no disposition to prevent its use by the citizens of this country to the fullest extent. Use, proper use, is what we want.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] says that he does not know whether the statements I made in regard to Mr. Gifford Pinchot were true or not. That is the trouble with gentlemen like him. They never take the pains to inform themselves and find out whether the statements are true or not. If he would investigate a little, he would not have been in doubt as to whether or not the statements were true. He belongs to that class that follows along blindly because somebody makes an assertion and never investigates to find out. What I said about Mr. Gifford Pinchot has been in the RECORD since the 2d day of June, 1913, and has been repeated several times on the floor of this House. If it is of any interest to the gentleman, I will put it in writing and give it to him, so that he can see whether or not it is true; and if he does not believe it he can ask Mr. Pinchot himself and see if it is not true. If it is not true, I hope some gentleman will find it out and have the courage to stand here on the floor and say so. And then I will bring the RECORD, and if all I have said is not true I will apologize to Mr. Pinchot and to the House and country.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to place me in the position of cutting all the ripe timber. I go back again to the report of the Forest Service. I know my friend from Illinois knows about the forestry. I wish I could say that for the Forest Service. In the report for 1914 I believe it is estimated that 5,700,000,000 feet of timber can annually be cut from the national forest reserves without decreasing their value. In other words, that is what is estimated to be the crop that ripens each year for the harvesting, and if not cut, like any other crop, is forever lost. The amount of this crop harvested for the benefit of the people, for those who are to-day protesting against the high price of timber products, is only 7 per cent of the whole.

Now, that is what I have been trying to call attention to, and I am taking the report of the Forester for my statement. He said that 5,700,000,000 feet of timber could be annually cut from the national forests without in any way depleting them; that the natural increase was that much, and if the timber was cut off there would be nothing lost; and yet they cut only 7 per cent of the annual crop. And it might be interesting for the House to know that for many years the gross value of the timber cut from our national forests, and add to it what they get for sheep pasture and cow pasture, has never amounted to a cent and a half an acre.

Now, they may think that is rapid cutting, but we have in our State two or three sawmills, any one of which will cut the entire product of the national forests on 23,000 square miles running three months of the year. And I called attention a while ago to the fact that we have a great empire out there, great as several of the New England States, and they have been cutting off that great domain at the rate of 350 acres a year.

As I said a while ago, I wonder how long my good friend from Illinois thinks it would take to reproduce the forests of my State? At the present rate of cutting it would be 35,000 years. Certainly a couple of centuries ought to be sufficient, or a thousand years, and if they cut it that fast they would be cutting thirty-five times as fast as they are now.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. BORLAND. Is not the method of cutting exercised by your private owners there destructive of the forests? Is it not exactly contrary to the methods attempted to be pursued by the national forest regulations?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. When a tree is cut it is cut, but the men out there in the lumber business know infinitely more about it than this Forestry Service ever did.

Mr. MADDEN. Early in the history of the Forestry Service it was understood by the House that that service would begin to yield an annual profit. The first year it showed an enormous loss, and then it was said that next year it would show a profit; and the next year it showed a greater loss. The next year it was said it would show a profit, and then it showed a still greater loss.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Washington be given five minutes to answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, by unanimous consent, limited the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto, and the time has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction and maintenance of roads, trails, bridges, fire lanes, telephone lines, cabins, fences, and other improvements necessary for the proper and economical administration, protection, and development of the national forest, $400,000: Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used to pay the transportation or traveling expenses of any forest officer or agent except he be traveling on business directly connected with the Forest Service and in furtherance of the works, aims, and objects specified and authorized in and by this appropriation: And provided also, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid or used for the purpose of paying for, in whole or in part, the preparation or publication of any newspaper or magazine article, but this shall not prevent the giving out to all persons without discrimination, including newspaper and magazine writers and publishers, of any facts or official information of value to the public. In all, for general expenses, $3,188,616.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. This is the road paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to know something about this Forest Service.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to have some time.

Mr. LEVER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will make it 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I want to get some information on the road proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to have any special ones designated to occupy that time?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MADDEN, desires time, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. MANN, and the gentleman from California, Mr. RAKER.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say that for a number of years promises were made that the Forest Service would show a better condition, and yet every year we have had a larger deficit to pay. We were looking toward the time when the Forest Service would show a profit, considering the promises that were made. What does the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] know about the situation now?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. From 1907 to 1912 the total cost was $22,280,000, and the revenue during that time was $11,495,000. Then, the chairman of the committee gave the figures for last year, showing probably a little better condition. I took those years because they were the years immediately following the statement made by Gifford Pinchot in 1907, that in five years they would be at least paying expenses.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] asked me about the cutting of timber in my section of the country. I want to call attention to the letter that I referred to the other day, where the Secretary of Agriculture now calls attention to the fact that it has become unprofitable for private owners to own timber in my country, and is urging that as a reason why some of these forests should be taken into the forest reserves, because private owners can not afford to carry them.

When I first came to Congress the statement made by the Forest Bureau in regard to the amount of standing timber in the United States was probably less than the amount of standing timber in the district that I then represented—the amount that they estimated in the entire United States. It has been a source of great pleasure to me to know that within the last two or three years, according to the report of the Forestry Service, the standing timber in the United States has increased something over one-third, probably doubled. Of course, that is only the doubling of the figures in the department, not an increase in the amount of timber.

If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wants to use the rest of my time, he can have it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish later to make some inquiry about these roads.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I have always been anxious to see the Forest Service made a success from a business standpoint, and I have been looking forward to a realization of the promises made by those in charge. But it seems that every year we run behind more than we did the year before, giving evidence either of bad management or lack of knowledge of the situation when the promises were originally made.

It seems to me that the time has come when a thorough investigation of this Forest Service, of its management, of the methods pursued in cutting and selling timber, in the leasing of lands for grazing purposes, and in advertising what it does in the magazines, ought to be made; and if I recall, during the consideration of this bill in the last Congress the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture promised that such an investigation would be made. I suggested that a special committee be appointed. My recollection is that the chairman of the committee thought that would be unnecessary.

I now want to inquire of the chairman of the committee, if he is on the floor, what has been done in connection with the proposed investigation? Is there any person here on the Committee on Agriculture who can inform the House or give information with respect to the condition of the Forest Service? I am waiting to hear some man on that committee tell the House whether the promises made last year have been fulfilled and whether there is any outlook for anything like an evening up of the expenses with the receipts of the department with respect to this bureau.

Mr. LEE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry, I will say that no special investigation has been made, except the extensive hearings that were had on the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Georgia recall the fact that during the consideration of the bill last year the chairman of the committee, of which he is a distinguished member, promised that such an investigation would be made and that a report would be made to the House?

Mr. LEE. I do not recall it, but I have no doubt it is true if the gentleman says so.

Mr. MADDEN. I am sorry the chairman of the committee is not on the floor.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RUBEY. I will say that the very question which the gentleman has asked has been repeatedly asked from the Forest Service, and we have been endeavoring in every possible way to find out when this service would get to be on a paying basis. We are unable absolutely to know, but we hope that within the next few years by economical administration it will be placed on a paying basis and will become self-supporting.

Mr. MADDEN. I had hoped that the Committee on Agriculture would have taken enough interest in this matter to have gone in the past summer over this Forest Service personally.

Mr. LEE. I think it will take about 10 years to put it on a paying basis. We think we can decrease the expenditures by about $200,000 a year.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture state to the House what he did during the last summer to get information so that the House might become informed with respect to the Bureau of Forestry. He promised to look into it last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the items that ought to convince the House, and even the Members from the West, that we are getting some service, some return, from these great resources that belong to this country.

There is an appropriation here of $400,000 for roads and trails through the forest lands. The only objection I can make to the item is that it is not large enough.

I want to include as a part of my statement at this time the splendid bill presented by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], House bill 10400, which will give the Government and the States the present use of some of the value in these reserves for the purpose of building roads so that the land within the reserves may be more accessible, and at the same time connect up other parts of the States and counties with proper roads through the forest reserve.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks to incorporate in his remarks House bill 10400. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10400) to provide for the advancement of funds to survey, construct, and maintain roads and trails within any State or the Territory of Alaska within which national forests are located.

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, out of any moneys in the National Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and each fiscal year thereafter up to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, in all $10,000,000, to be available until expended under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, upon request from the proper officers of the State, Territory, or county, for the survey, construction, and maintenance of roads and trails within, or only partly within, the national forests, when necessary for the use and development of resources upon which communities within and adjacent to the national forests are dependent: Provided, That the State, Territory, or county shall enter into a cooperative agreement with the Secretary of Agriculture for the survey, construction, and maintenance of such roads or trails upon a basis equitable to both the State, Territory, or county, and the United States: And provided further, That the aggregate expenditures in any State, Territory, or county shall not exceed 10 per cent of the value, as determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, of the timber and forage resources which are or will be available for income upon the national forest lands within the respective county or counties wherein the roads or trails will be constructed, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall make annual report to Congress of the amounts expended hereunder.

SEC. 2. That immediately upon the execution of any cooperative agreement hereunder the Secretary of Agriculture shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of the amount to be expended within any State, Territory, or county thereunder, and beginning with the next fiscal year and each fiscal year thereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the State or Territory within which the road or trail is to be constructed only 10 per cent of the gross receipts from the national forests in the respective county or counties in which the said roads or trails are constructed until advised by the Secretary of Agriculture that the remaining 15 per cent of the receipts to which such State or Territory would otherwise be entitled under the act of May 23, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 251, 260), is sufficient to reimburse the United States for expenditures made under all contracts in pursuance hereof for the construction and maintenance of roads and trails within such State, Territory, county or counties, and thereafter the reduction in the per cent paid to the State or Territory for the benefit of such county or counties shall no longer apply.

Mr. RAKER. This bill will permit the use of an appropriation, and then as the money is provided for use roads are to be built. Then as the timber is sold the money will be repaid from the localities from which it comes.

There is no more important enterprise that could be entered into by this Government with its property, because this is its property, and a wonderful property. It is a great resource of this country that but few of us, I believe, properly appreciate at the present time. It ought to be made accessible. While the Government retains these reserves and handles them, it ought to make them accessible to the rest of the country in which they are situated. The privately owned land is assessed and pays its taxes, and those taxes in proper proportion go to make up a fund to build proper roads, in which we are all so much interested, to the end that we may get to our cities to trade, and so that the products of the country may be brought to market and that the citizens of the United States may have the opportunity of getting the benefit of these reserves in every way. In addition to building up the roads, in addition to the fact that we are improving these forests, they are valuable in holding back the water for the purpose of making the watershed better. They prevent floods. They give us a supply of water, and if this water is properly stored it will enable us to irrigate our arid lands.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], with reference to this item which appropriates $400,000 for roads, trails, and so forth, in the national forests, does the gentleman happen to know how many miles of trails and also how many miles of roads were constructed in the last fiscal year?

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this item is fully set out in the item itself.

Mr. MANN. I know what its purpose is.

Mr. LEVER. That is to improve the national forests and make them more accessible.

Mr. MANN. How many miles of roads and trails did we build last year?

Mr. LEVER. I want to make this statement by way of preliminary: So far the Forest Service have constructed 2,000 miles of roads at a cost of about $2,000 a mile. They have constructed 22,000 miles of trails at an average cost of $53 per mile of trail. They have constructed in addition to that about 1,000 miles of fire breaks, also 330 lookout structures, little places from which forest rangers may scan the forests in search of fires.

Mr. MANN. What is the character of these roads?

Mr. LEVER. Of course, the roads that cost $2,000 a mile are fairly good country roads.

Mr. MANN. That is the average?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Are they all about alike or are there some good roads and some ordinary dirt roads or roads where they just cut out the timber?

Mr. LEVER. The character of the roads depends on the character of the country through which they run.

Mr. MANN. I understand that, and I am trying to get information as to what is the character of these roads.

Mr. LEVER. That is what I am trying to tell. A road costing $2,000 a mile, in the average situation in my country, would be a very good road, but in a mountainous country it would not be what you would call an automobile road.

Mr. MANN. I have only five minutes and I want to get information.

Mr. LEVER. What does the gentleman want to know?

Mr. MANN. How many miles of good road—macadam road—have been constructed?

Mr. LEVER. Oh, these are just dirt roads.

Mr. MANN. They have not constructed any automobile roads?

Mr. LEVER. Absolutely none.

Mr. MANN. I think they have made a mistake, and I think the gentleman is mistaken, too.

Mr. LEVER. There might be an automobile road in some show place, in some national park, or something like that, but certainly for $2,000 a mile you could not build——

Mr. MANN. No; but the $2,000 is the average per mile for all the 20,000 miles. I imagine they construct a good many roads where they just cut down the timber and leave a place through which a wagon can go. That kind of a road does not cost $2,000 a mile.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; the large majority of the roads are roads that simply open up the forest to its uses.

Mr. MANN. How many miles of roads were built?

Mr. LEVER. Twenty thousand.

Mr. MANN. In the last fiscal year?

Mr. LEVER. No; in all.

Mr. MANN. That was the gentleman's statement. I do not know whether it is correct or not.

Mr. LEVER. There have been built in the national forests about 20,500 miles of roads. Twenty-two thousand miles of trail, 20,000 miles of telephone lines, more than 1,000 miles of fire breaks——

Mr. MANN. How many miles did they build in the last fiscal year out of the $400,000 appropriation?

Mr. LEVER. I do not know how many they built the last fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman no idea?

Mr. LEVER. I have no idea.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know how this $400,000 has been spent.

Mr. LEVER. I think the general statement that I have made would show the manner in which it has been spent.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but it does not give any indication of how much for roads or how much for trails or how many miles of road were built in a year, or how many miles of trail were built in a year.

Mr. LEVER. The last report shows that 22,000 miles of trail have been constructed at a cost of $1,173,000.

Mr. MANN. That is not during the last fiscal year.

Mr. LEVER. No; that is the total.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that he could give us how much had been spent in the last fiscal year.

Mr. LEVER. I did not mean to state that, for I do not have those figures.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture more effectively to carry out the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stats., 961), entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," $15,000 of the moneys appropriated therein shall be available for the employment of agents, clerks, assistants, and other labor and for the purchase of supplies and equipment required for the purpose of said act in the city of Washington.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is proposed to appropriate $15,000 in this paragraph, and I would like to know whether the amount is in excess of appropriations made heretofore.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the appropriation was made for the purchase of land in the Appalachian and White Mountains no provision was made in the bill for clerical services in Washington in connection with purchases made. The last bill and this bill have made available out of the money formerly appropriated enough money to pay for the necessary clerical services in Washington. The $15,000 is not additional, but it takes $15,000 out of the $8,000,000 appropriated for the purchase of the land, and they use it for this clerical work in the city of Washington. The reason for this is that all expenses connected with the purchase of these lands may be paid out of the appropriation and charged thereto.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know how much was used last year?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think about this amount.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have here a statement of expenditures in the Department of Agriculture for the year ending June 30, 1915, in which it appears that the amount spent in Washington was $150, which is quite a different amount from $15,000.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know what the gentleman is reading from, but apparently it refers to a different matter. There are in the Forestry Service here in the Atlantic Building a number of employees who do work in connection with the purchase of the land—preparing maps and reports.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On page 60 in the document, under appropriations for the Weeks forestry law, I find, under the head of "Salaries," $150 only was expended on account of the Appalachian National Forest Reserve Commission.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is another item. There was a sum of $25,000 set apart for the expenses of the commission, who were authorized to visit the land and make their investigation on their own account to determine the value of the land and the propriety of their purchase. Last year there was expended for such purposes a small amount.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Going further into the appropriations, as stated in this report of the department, I find that the travel, station, and field expenses were $54.23, and $118.80 was expended for furniture. There is nothing here about an expenditure of $15,000, or anything like that sum.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know where the gentleman is reading from in that document, but I think these sums are not part of the item under discussion.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Was $15,000 actually expended?

Mr. HAWLEY. In the Atlantic Building there is a gentleman who has charge and general supervision of this work, and a number of men are employed with him, and, in my judgment, the $15,000 was expended. I had some talk with him a little while ago about the expenditures, and, while he did not give me any definite figures, I am satisfied that that amount, or nearly that much, was expended.

Mr. MANN. The items that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read relate to the expenses of the commission, and they have practically ceased, while the item in the bill relates to the expenses of administration here in Washington.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. For that work.

Mr. MANN. Connected with the administration, but not with the commission.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It seemed that attention should be called to the matter.

Mr. MANN. When the land is acquired it goes under the control of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HAWLEY. When the surveys are made in the field the field notes are written up by the men who make the estimates of the timber and the valuation of the land, these papers are sent to Washington and maps, charts, and reports are prepared from them by employees here.

Mr. MANN. These expenses are in connection with the acquirement of the land.

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes; and the $15,000 is used for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Last year at this place we carried a legislative provision authorizing the Navy Department to obtain timber and stone from the national forests and requiring a report each year of the amount in the annual estimates. Does the gentleman from South Carolina have the figures in reference to any report?

Mr. LEVER. When the Forester was before the committee he had a telegram from the forester in Alaska saying that 170,000 ties had been sold to the Navy Department, worth about $5,000. That is the only report we have had, and there was but one sale.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand that under the item of last year there was any sale about it.

Mr. LEVER. It was to make a report of how much the Navy Department took.

Mr. MANN. They were to report the quantity taken, but there was no sale about it.

Mr. LEVER. They made a report of the quantity and the value of it.

Mr. MANN. But the Navy Department was not charged with it.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Did they make a report in the estimates?

Mr. LEVER. They did not, because they had no sales up to that time.

Mr. MANN. That made no difference. It was their duty to make a report.

Mr. LEVER. And the fiscal year, I may say to the gentleman, had not closed at that time. They made a report of the only sale they had made—175,000 ties.

Mr. MANN. Why does the Navy Department buy ties?

Mr. LEVER. I do not remember. I think it was ties.

Mr. MANN. They are not engaged in the construction of railroads.

Mr. LEVER. I am speaking from recollection. I think it was ties or timber of some description—probably timber. It is in the hearings.

Mr. MANN. Where we require a report of this sort to be made they ought to make it.

Mr. LEVER. I take it that they will make it during the fiscal year.

Mr. MANN. I think they will after this conversation.

Mr. LEVER. I think they will do it, anyway.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter deposits may be received from timber purchasers in such sums as the Secretary of Agriculture may require to cover the cost to the United States of disposing of brush and other débris resulting from cutting operations in sales of national forest timber. Such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, to pay the cost of such work and to make refunds to the depositors of amounts deposited by them in excess of such cost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether in the hearings before the committee there was any statement made as to how far people had availed themselves of the privilege of building summer hotels and summer homes in the national forests under the law of last year?

Mr. LEVER. I think not. I do not recall any such statement as that before the committee. It is a new act, as the gentleman knows, and probably has not been availed of very much so far.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph is subject to the point of order, but I hope the gentleman will not make it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It involves rather an important question. This paragraph proposes to turn over to the disposition of the Secretary of Agriculture such funds as may be received from timber purchasers and to do it without a time limit, so far as the disposition of it is concerned. It reads:

Such deposits shall be covered into the Treasury and shall constitute a special fund, which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman is misunderstanding the object of this paragraph. Let me read the language:

That hereafter deposits may be received from timber purchasers—

And here is the important part of it—in such sums as the Secretary of Agriculture may require to cover the cost to the United States of disposing of brush and other débris resulting from cutting operations in sales of national forest timber.

The object of that provision is to permit the Federal Government to accept from lumber operators in the national forests a sum sufficient to cover the cleaning up of the brush and débris after the cutting has taken place, and it is done for two reasons. First, the lumber companies themselves prefer it done in this way, and, second, and more important, the department itself would rather do the work of cleaning up the débris and the brush, because they can do it under their own methods and make more certain the assurance that the brush and the like will not be a fire trap for the forests. That is the reason for it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why not have a time limit as to when the refund shall be made? Why should the money be left in the Treasury at the discretion of the Secretary indefinitely?

Mr. LEVER. The committee did not take that matter into consideration, believing, of course, the Forest Service would make use of these funds at such times as were best suited to the cleaning up.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that it is so difficult to get any money back out of the Treasury after it is once taken from the people and put there that it may be well to put limitations upon the discretion of the officers of the Government who have control over these funds.

Mr. LEVER. There might be this difficulty about the gentleman's suggestion: That if you put a time limit it might be about to expire just at the time when it would not be best suited to make the cleaning up, and thereby handicap the very purpose of the paragraph.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know of a number of instances where lumber operations have been carried on under contracts with the Forest Service and the timber operators made this kind of an agreement with the Forest Service, to pay over to them the estimated cost of cleaning up the land, as is required by the service in every contract they make. They do not want to take their employees skilled in logging operations and other men away from such logging operations. It is too expensive to them. The Forest Service employs men who are homesteaders or who may be found near by, available for short-term employment. I never have heard any complaint on the part of the operators who have advanced the money that they had any trouble in having any balance returned to them when the cleaning up was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, this discussion is on a point of order. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to make the point of order if it is satisfactorily explained. What objection would there be to an amendment, on line 5, page 43, which would provide that the money is hereby appropriated and made available for two or three years, rather than "until expended"?

Mr. HAWLEY. That would do no service to the people who put up the money, because the cleaning up of the land will, I think, undoubtedly be made during the season, and the balance of the money, whatever there may be, is never out of the hands of the men advancing it for any such period as that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When this deposit is covered into the Treasury in accordance with this paragraph is it wholly within the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture as to when it shall be paid out, or is the order of the Secretary of Agriculture always sufficient to pay it out?

Mr. LEVER. It will be under this paragraph, undoubtedly, and it would be discretionary, and the committee took the position that the Secretary would use these funds when it was most convenient or opportune in the interest of the service to use them, and to put a limitation on it either way I think would probably defeat the very purpose of the paragraph.

Mr. HAWLEY. Undoubtedly the men who take the cutting contracts would not advance the money if it is to be held indefinitely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose there is a difference between the Forestry Bureau and the contractor as to the amount?

Mr. HAWLEY. It is still in the hands of the contractor. He can do one of two things. He can either clean up the land himself, as the Forest Service requires in its contract, or he can say to them, "How much will you do it for?" and if he thinks the price asked is reasonable he can say, "Here is the amount of money."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there such a condition here as might require the contractor to come to Congress for relief?

Mr. HAWLEY. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield, I can explain the reason.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law, of course, when you put money into the Treasury it can only be paid out by appropriation. The result of that is the Department of Agriculture, if it makes a sale of timber, makes some kind of an agreement, under which either the operator is to burn the brush or pays the money over to men who do it under the direction of the Department of Agriculture in the Forest Service,

Mr. LEVER. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is. If it were not true, I would not say so. Under that there is no accounting in the Treasury Department; there is no accounting at all. They can not pay it into the Treasury because there is no way of getting it out of the Treasury and the purpose of putting this into the law is to permit the department to have this money paid and receipt given, turning it into the Treasury and paying it out on the expenses as they accrue, and then if there is any money left over, as in many cases there will be, pay it back to the man who paid it in—the excess—without coming to Congress for an appropriation; and it is to add to the efficiency of the accounting to the Government in the main.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If I understand the gentleman, the term "shall constitute a special fund" is sufficient to enable a settlement in the department?

Mr. MANN. "Which is hereby appropriated and made available until expended, as the Secretary of Agriculture may direct, to pay the costs of such work and to make refunds to the depositors of amounts deposited by them in excess of such costs." They are doing the thing now, but in an irregular way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Salaries, Bureau of Chemistry: One Chemist, who shall be chief of bureau, $5,000; 1 chief clerk, $2,500; 3 executive clerks, at $2,000 each; 8 clerks, class 4; 11 clerks, class 3; 1 clerk, $1,440; 12 clerks, class 2; 1 clerk, $1,300; 23 clerks, class 1; 12 clerks, at $1,020 each; 13 clerks, at $1,000 each; 1 clerk, $960; 34 clerks, at $900 each; 1 clerk, $840; 1 clerk, $720; 1 food and drug inspector, $2,500; 2 food and drug inspectors, at $2,250 each; 12 food and drug inspectors, at $2,000 each; 13 food and drug inspectors, at $1,800 each; 1 food and drug inspector, $1,620; 11 food and drug inspectors, at $1,600 each; 6 food and drug inspectors, at $1,400 each; 1 assistant, $1,600; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,200 each; 1 laboratory helper, $1,020; 4 laboratory helpers, at $1,000 each; 4 laboratory helpers, at $960 each; 3 laboratory helpers, at $900 each; 6 laboratory helpers, at $840 each; 2 laboratory helpers, at $780 each; 21 laboratory helpers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $720 each; 2 laboratory helpers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $660 each; 28 laboratory helpers, messenger boys, or laborers, at $600 each; 1 laboratory assistant, $1,200; 1 toolmaker, $1,200; 1 sampler, $1,200; 1 janitor, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $1,400; 1 mechanic, $1,200; 1 mechanic, $1,020; 1 mechanic, $960; 1 mechanic, $900; 2 student assistants, at $300 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; 1 skilled laborer, $1,050; 1 skilled laborer, $840; 2 messenger boys or laborers, at $540 each; 11 messenger boys or laborers, at $480 each; 3 messenger boys or laborers, at $420 each; 2 messenger boys or laborers, at $360 each; 9 charwomen, at $240 each; in all, $315,590.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. My information is there are some new stenographers and clerks provided for in this paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there are no new clerks or stenographers provided here. I see the point the gentleman is making, and that is explained by the fact that there are transfers from the lump-sum roll to the statutory roll.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There are some new food and drug inspectors.

Mr. LEVER. There is an increase in the salary of one drug inspector of $250.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is in line 19, page 43?

Mr. LEVER. Line 19, page 43; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that item.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that all debate on this close in seven minutes, and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in seven minutes. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have reserved the point of order for the purpose of making a statement for the information of my colleagues of the House. I have never, so far as I recall, opposed an appropriation for an increase in the clerical force of any one of the departments or bureaus in Washington if the service warranted it, and ordinarily I have not opposed increases in salary where they were worthily bestowed. I have had an experience with one of the bureaus, however, which has led me to believe that sometimes we may make appropriations unnecessarily, or that we could dispense with some clerks or assistants; possibly with some of the heads of bureaus, for whom special duties of an inquisitorial nature have to be found.

Recently, in order to oblige a constituent, I had occasion to visit the Bureau of Chemistry. I called at the office of the chief and was referred, because of his absence, to the next in command. I was asked if I had an appointment to see the gentleman. When the preliminaries were over and I was finally introduced into the presence of the assistant chief I started to state the object of my visit as a Representative, my constituent being with me. I noticed that certain clerks were being assembled around about me as I spoke. Then I also observed that one of these clerks was taking stenographic notes of my statement. I asked the assistant chief the reason for all this activity. "Is this man taking notes of what I say?" I asked. The reply was, "Yes." "Is it the custom of this bureau to have stenographers take down statements of Members of Congress introducing their constituents?" I inquired. He said it was; that they took down the statements of Senators also. I then informed the gentleman that this was a new experience for me and that so far as I was concerned the interview was over.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee limited this debate on this paragraph to seven minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am in the midst of a statement——

Mr. LEVER. I have no objection to the gentleman continuing for five minutes. I would like two minutes myself, however.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph may be prolonged for seven minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The reply of the gentleman for whom we are now providing money, was that they took the statements of Senators as well as of Members of the House.

Now, I bring this statement to the House. I have no special fault to find with the Secretary of Agriculture nor, in general, with the bureaus in the Department of Agriculture, because usually, so far as my business with them is concerned, they are extremely courteous and prompt. I do not recall that I have ever been treated more courteously nor with greater dispatch than in certain bureaus of this department. But this experience in the Bureau of Chemistry, I confess, was a brand new experience to me as a Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman complain of this assistant, who knew he lacked the intelligence himself to pass upon the question, but desired a stenographic report so that his principal, who is intelligent, might pass upon it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If you put it solely on the ground of intelligence, I will say that the gentleman was quite "cocky" in his attitude. He acted like a prize college student throughout the transaction. He held to his ground after the discourtesy was explained to him. He said it was the practice with respect to Members of both Houses.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Did he state what was the object?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He said the stenographer was there because it was customary.

Mr. LONGWORTH. For what purpose was the statement used?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will put the correspondence in the RECORD. Since the time is running, I will read only an extract from a letter of the Secretary in response to one from me. Mr. Secretary Houston says:

> It is by no means the universal practice to take down stenographically the statements of Members of Congress, or of other interested parties, concerning matters pending before the department. It is an invariable rule in the Bureau of Chemistry, however, to make a record of all statements made in connection with cases under the food-and-drugs act. The statements made by Members of Congress, of course, constitute an important part of the record and should receive careful consideration before final action is taken. You will appreciate that it is impossible for the officials to keep in mind all the representations that are made.

Now, what I called for was to say that my constituent, who was about to be penalized to the extent of $200 or $300 for alleged delay in completing a small contract in fitting up a chemical laboratory in New York, ought to have a fair hearing. That was the statement I had to make merely by way of introduction. I do not know whether the statement of my constituent was taken down or not, for I did not wait to hear what he said. What I objected to was that I should be treated as a witness.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Is it not probable that the department wanted to preserve some record of the statements of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to enlighten them as to their future action?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be. The bureau may have wanted light. I was there to accompany and introduce a constituent, and then to go about my business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask leave, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The following is a letter to Secretary Houston and reply thereto:

LETTER TO SECRETARY HOUSTON.

MARCH 17, 1916.

Hon. DAVID F. HOUSTON,
Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: This is an unusual letter, called forth by an occurrence rather unusual. I accompanied one of my constituents, Mr. W. S. P. Shields, a well-known Philadelphian, to the Chemistry Bureau this morning to introduce him to Dr. Alsberg so that he might be heard with respect to the assessment against him of so-called liquidated damages on a furniture contract for a chemical laboratory, which, I believe, you are constructing in New York. Dr. Alsberg was not in, so I undertook to put the matter up to Dr. Emerson, next in charge. Several of the office force were called in while I was explaining to Dr. Emerson what I had called for. I told him and them I had looked over Mr. Shields's papers and was of the opinion that the Government was as much at fault for any delay that had occurred as was Mr. Shields, and that it seemed to me the matter should be carefully considered before he was fined. I asked for him a fair hearing.

This introduction of the matter occupied but a moment or two, but I observed that what I was saying was being taken down by a stenographer, who had been called to Dr. Emerson's desk. I asked if he had been stationed there to take my statement and Dr. Emerson said that he had, adding that it was customary in matters of this kind to take stenographically what Senators and Representatives said. The proceeding was so unusual as to a Representative, it being the only experience of the kind I recall during my service of 10 years in Washington, that I told Dr. Emerson I would withdraw at once and leave Mr. Shields to do the best he could, advising him to ask for equity and justice.

Having spoken to several of my colleagues about the incident and finding them surprised to learn of this practice in the Bureau of Chemistry, I write to inquire whether it has the sanction of the department, which, I am frank to say to you, is generally most courteous in its correspondence with me.

Dr. Emerson told me I might have a copy of the stenographer's notes so far as my introduction of Mr. Shields was concerned. I will be glad if you will look them over and direct that they be forwarded to me.

Very truly, yours, J. HAMPTON MOORE.

THE SECRETARY'S REPLY.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, March 22, 1916.

Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE,
House of Pepresentatives.

DEAR MR. MOORE: I have your letter of March 17 with reference to your call at the Bureau of Chemistry in company with Mr. W. S. P. Shields regarding the assessment of liquidated damages on a contract for furniture for the New York laboratory.

It is by no mean the universal practice to take down steongraphically the statements of Members of Congress, or of other interested parties, concerning matters pending before the department. It is an invariable rule in the Bureau of Chemistry, however, to make a record of all statements made in connection with cases under the food-and-drugs act. The statements made by Members of Congress, of course, constitute an important part of the record and should receive careful consideration before final action is taken. You will appreciate that it is impossible for the officials to keep in mind all the representations that are made. A complete record serves to refresh their memory and insures consideration of all the facts presented. So far as I can ascertain, there has been no objection to this procedure in the past when it was fully explained. The same course is followed to a certain extent in other important matters in the Bureau of Chemistry and other branches of the department so that a record of all the facts may be available to the officials in arriving at a decision. The only object in reporting your statements and those of Mr. Shields was to make the record complete and to insure consideration of them in the final disposition of the matter.

In accordance with your request, I take pleasure in sending you herewith a copy of the stenographer's notes containing your statement so far as it was reported.

Very truly, yours, D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, I can understand the desire of the Secretary to protect his subordinates and therefore shall not criticize the stand he has taken in this regard. Neither do I desire to reduce or take away the salary of anyone employed in the Bureau of Chemistry. For that reason I withdrew the point of order, which doubtless would have been sustained. Secretary Houston, in answer to my request, sent me the stenographic notes, consisting of 23 lines, part of which appear to have been spoken by me and part of which appear to have been uttered by the assistant chief after my departure. As they throw no new light upon the correspondence, I shall not embarrass the stenographer by inserting them, for I am quite sure, and the notes show it, that the stenographer did not enjoy his task. I am satisfied to leave the matter as it is for the benefit of whom it may concern.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania some weeks ago called my attention to this matter about which he has been speaking.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ought to have said that it seemed to me that if any one of these bureaus have so many clerks or stenographers as to enable them to play detective on the Members of Congress, the practice ought to cease.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I took occasion to make some little investigation of the case, because I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that if the stenographers and clerks of these various departments are being used in such a way as secretly to take statements of Members of Congress, it is a bad practice. In this case the explanation of the department to me is just about what the gentleman from Pennsylvania has stated, and I presume he will publish the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture which he has on the subject.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I will publish both his letter and my letter.

Mr. LEVER. The situation is this: It seems that the gentleman from Pennsylvania and one of his constituents called at the department, as he states. The Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry was absent at the time, and the acting chief, Mr. Emerson, received these gentlemen. The gentlemen called in reference to a contract for the purchase of some supplies by the department. That whole matter was to be passed upon finally by the Solicitor of the department. Mr. Emerson's statement is that on account of the fact that the statements of these gentlemen were in reference to a matter which had to go to the Solicitor, he called in the stenographer for the purpose of making a record of the statements of the gentlemen, and making these statements a part of the testimony, with no attempt and no thought on his part at all of being rude or discourteous to the gentlemen. He did it in the natural course of his business—that is, it was a matter of evidence, as he thought—and he wanted it for the purpose of transmitting it finally along with the other papers in the case to the Solicitor of the department, and he made absolutely no effort to conceal the fact that a stenographer was taking the testimony or the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and his constituent. That is the case, as I understand it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not think that an altogether dignified practice for a bureau chief or a department chief, to set a stenographer at the elbow of a Member of Congress?

Mr. LEVER. I agree with the gentleman on that point as to such a general practice.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the character of the chemical and physical tests which are applied to American food products in foreign countries, and for inspecting the same before shipment when desired by the shippers or owners of these products intended for countries where chemical and physical tests are required before the said products are allowed to be sold therein; and for all necessary expenses in connection with such inspection and studies of methods of analysis in foreign countries, $4,280

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this new work?

Mr. LEVER. No. This has been carried in the bill for quite a while.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is for inspecting the methods employed in foreign countries for testing the purity of food products, as I understand?

Mr. LEVER. No; the gentleman is mistaken. This is for the purpose of furnishing to the exporters of food products certain certificates as to the purity of the food before exportation is had; that is, when the exporter requests a certificate as to the purity of the food or product he is exporting. Under this item the certificate is given.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there any provision in this bill covering the inspection of imported meat products?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman is referring to beef and the like of that?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am referring to such meat supplies as come from the Argentine Republic and other foreign countries.

Mr. LEVER. There is no inspection at the port of entry of imported meat or food products, but the method of the department is to accept the inspection of foreign countries of those products if the department regards the methods of the foreign country from which they come as being sufficient to guarantee the purity of the food. Otherwise it is not allowed to be imported at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This $4,280 is in the interest of the American exporter of meat?

Mr. LEVER. Entirely so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is to give a sort of certificate, so far as his foreign trade is concerned?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; the same kind of a certificate that we require of importers of the same kind of products.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Provision is made for that?

Mr. LEVER. It may not be a certificate, but it is in the line of the remark I made a little while ago, that inspection of food products in foreign countries shall be of such a character as to justify the department here in trusting to the purity of the food imported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The other day the gentleman made a statement in regard to the importation of foreign meats, such as the carcasses of animals afflicted with the foot-and-mouth disease, and he promised to tell us about the inspection of it.

Mr. LEVER. There is no provision for the inspection of such imported meats. We take the inspection of the foreign country from which the product comes, if we accept it at all.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If we take care of the foreign consumer of beef that we export, why not take care of the American consumer of beef that we import?

Mr. LEVER. We take care of the foreign exporter only at his own request, and then make the examination at his expense.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman object to having consideration given to an amendment here that would provide for some such inspection as I have indicated, that would protect the American meat consumer from the possible ravages of disease in foreign countries?

Mr. LEVER. I am inclined to think, without having given it very much thought, that there is probably no necessity for it, because the department now requires that the inspection service in foreign countries from which we are getting these products shall be of such a character as to guarantee reasonable safety against infectious importations.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It was stated here the other day that Dr. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, had said that beef would be infected if the animal had died of the foot-and-mouth disease. That was the question I was trying to get an answer to. Some one on the floor said that Dr. Melvin was authority for that statement, and the gentleman from South Carolina indicated that he would have something to say on it later on.

Mr. LEVER. I have looked into it as thoroughly as I could in the limited time I have had.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish the gentleman would look into it so far as he can before we reach the paragraph relating to the foot-and-mouth disease.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman that, as far as the spread of the foot-and-mouth disease or any other infectious disease is concerned, through the disease being in the body of the imported product, I think there is comparatively little danger; and as far as affecting the health of human beings is concerned, the foot-and-mouth-disease germ is killed by cooking, as I understand.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Do they make this appropriation to protect the foreign consumer at the instance of foreign Governments?

Mr. LEVER. I am informed that foreign Governments desire this kind of a certificate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is what I thought; and it seems to me that, if such regulations are imposed upon our exporters, there ought to be similar regulations applying to importations of meat.

Mr. LEVER. We do have regulations, but probably not such strict ones.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the handling, grading, packing, canning, freezing, storing, and transportation of fish, and for experimental shipments of fish, for the utilization of waste products, and the development of new sources of food, $14,000.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee just how this appropriation is expended. During the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the sundry civil bill we heard the Secretary of Commerce with regard to the expenditures and operations of the Bureau of Fisheries, intended to develop new food supplies in fish. They gave us a very interesting account of the development——

Mr. LEVER. Of the dogfish.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says of the dogfish. The fish that they had reference to is known as the tilefish, said to be a very valuable and useful article of food. Quite common years ago, it disappeared from the waters of the sea for some years, reappeared, and has been reintroduced by the activities of the Department of Commerce, through the Fisheries Bureau, as a staple article of food, and is, I am told, now being quite widely used. A sample of the fish was very kindly sent me by the Secretary of Commerce, and we found it very good. Now, it occurs to me that the work that the Department of Commerce is doing, through the Bureau of Fisheries, is along the line of the work that is being done under this item; and my query is, Is there not a duplication of effort along these lines, and is there not likely to be a conflict?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's inquiry is a very natural one. The members of the committee made inquiry of Dr. Alsberg, who had this matter in charge, and we questioned him along the very line of the gentleman's inquiry. His answer to the committee was that there was no duplication whatever, although the character of the work was very similar. His statement was that the Bureau of Chemistry takes up the work where the Bureau of Commerce puts it down. In other words, the Bureau of Chemistry investigations have to do with the proper method of handling, packing, freezing, and transporting of the fish. As I understand it, the Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of Commerce has more to do with the production side of the fishing business in this country, while the work that the Bureau of Chemistry does under this item is to try to devise some method by which fish may be preserved without hurting the flavor of the fish. They have made some very interesting experiments along that line, which, if they prove successful, will be a very great advance in the way of preserving the fish supply of this country, and preserving its food value and its fish flavor.

Mr. MONDELL. I realize that there are two distinct fields. The statement made to the Committee on Agriculture, to which the chairman of that committee has just referred, was the same statement made before our committee, that the two services did not conflict, that one took up the work where the other concluded it. As long as they adhere to that policy there need be no conflict, no duplication; but I think it is very important that both bureaus understand that Congress is not appropriating with a view of having both of them occupy the same field or overlap in their efforts.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman can not make that statement too strong or emphatic for use. I agree with it very fully.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the packing, handling, storing, and shipping of oysters and other shellfish in the United States and the waters bordering on the United States, $5,000.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what, if anything, is being done toward investigating the oyster industry, especially in its relation to polluted waters? I have heard much from men engaged in the oyster industry in my State in regard to the pollution of waters, and the objection on the part of the Government to shipping the oysters grown in these alleged polluted waters.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the matter to which he refers is under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service. Under this item we are doing with shellfish exactly the same character of work that I have described as being done with reference to other fish under the item just preceding. In other words, it is a study of the best methods of handling, transporting, and so forth, of shellfish, so as to preserve them, and so that they may be put on the market in the best condition.

Mr. TILSON. It was in connection with the shipping of oysters that this matter was brought to my attention, and this reference to the shipping of oysters attracted my attention.

Mr. LEVER. I myself asked Dr. Alsberg in the hearings:

I want you to make that very clear, because the question is likely to arise. How does this line of work differ from the work done by the Public Health Service? You say you do the chemical work and the shipping end of it?

Dr. ALSBERG. You see the Public Health Service is concerned merely with the question of what areas are likely to transmit typhoid, and while we are concerned with that question we also take action under the food and drugs act against shipments of oysters we find to be polluted. In addition to that, there are certain other chemical problems. In the first place, there is the problem of how oysters should be iced and shipped and handled; how long they should be washed in order to get the best effect, and the like.

Now, it seems that the line of demarcation is about this: If the Bureau of Chemistry find waters polluted with typhoid germs, then under the pure-food act they take jurisdiction; but as to the locating of the polluted waters and their area, that is a matter for the Public Health Service.

Mr. TILSON. What I am most interested in is the increase in the production of oysters; because, as the gentleman knows, oysters are a very important article of food very largely used. As the population of cities increases and there is more pollution of the waters, the area in which these oysters may be grown will be reduced.

It seems to me there ought to be study and investigation of this subject going on to prevent, if possible, the diminution of the supply of oysters.

Mr. LEVER. Let me make two statements. When this item was first suggested to the Committee on Agriculture the question of the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service arose, and we had the department define very clearly just what line of work they expected to do, and we have been trying in the examination of witnesses before the committee to confine that work to the area mapped out, namely, the handling, packing, and transportation of shellfish and the like of that.

A further statement is made that probably there is no food product in the world in which there is so much waste in the matter of transportation and handling and packing, and necessarily so, as there is in reference to fish and oysters. We believe that under the investigations and better method of handling we can save to the consuming public an immense waste now going on, and to that extent the production along these lines will be increased.

Mr. TILSON. So far so good; but I would like to ask if any department of the Government is interesting itself in this great question which enters so materially into the cost of living—the increased production of oysters.

Mr. LEVER. While I have not looked into the matter—the gentleman from Wyoming may give perhaps more information—the Bureau of Fisheries is engaged all the while in investigating the methods of increasing the production of fish and shellfish.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I notice that the paragraph above the one now being discussed refers to fish, and the one now being discussed refers to oysters and other shellfish. May I ask if shrimp are included in the term "fish"? The reason I ask is that on the coast of my district the shrimp as well as the oyster industry is great, and I was wondering if they are studying shrimp as well as oysters and fish.

Mr. LEVER. The department classes shrimp as fish.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, along the line of inquiry made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], I will say that the Public Health Service has for a number of years been conducting investigations relative to the pollution of waters producing shellfish with a view of determining conditions and studying methods of avoiding such pollution and its spread. Last year a very thorough investigation was made of the Potomac waters and the adjacent waters of Chesapeake Bay.

An interesting bulletin—interesting from the standpoint of those who are interested in that sort of thing—was recently issued by the Public Health Service touching these matters.

Mr. TILSON. Necessarily their work is largely restrictive—that is, to prevent the shipping of oysters grown in polluted waters. I am particularly interested in something to remedy the situation and give more relief from the standpoint of diminishing the field of pollution in which oysters are grown.

Mr. MONDELL. That is one of the objects of the work of the Public Health Service. Its primary object might be said to be to inform people as to conditions existing, but an important object is to have the facts ascertained and stated in order that there may be the necessary legislation, either Federal or State, or both, which may be required to remedy the conditions which these investigations develop. The gentleman realizes that we can not cure these conditions under appropriations on the agricultural bill, but the conditions have been and are being developed by the Public Health Service. It may be that legislation will be necessary to cure the unsatisfactory conditions.

Mr. DALLINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. DALLINGER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming if this bill is not the proper bill for an appropriation to be made to investigate the diseases of the oyster? We have provisions in this bill for investigating the diseases of other animal life.

Mr. MONDELL. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts I will say that that line of work is done by the Bureau of Fisheries. The Appropriations Committee has had some very interesting hearings on the subject of the diseases of the oyster and other shellfish quite recently. The committee has not reached the point of passing upon the requests for additional appropriations, but they have been very urgently made, and my hope is that we will so increase the appropriation of the Bureau of Fisheries that they may extend their work along that line and thoroughly extend the study of the diseases which have so disastrously and unfortunately affected the oysters, particularly in the transplanted regions. They have discovered that in waters where oysters did very well for a few years after being planted they have not of late years reproduced, and where they formerly had a crop annually there is now reproduction only once in three or four years. I believe that with such increased appropriation as Congress may give this year the work would be carried on thoroughly and systematically.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 8, after the word "the," insert the word "planting," and in line 10, same page, after the word "States," strike out the figures "$5,000" and insert "$10,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the order of the committee there still remain five minutes of debate.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield me one minute of the time, I will be satisfied.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I can get through in four minutes, I think. Following up the suggestions already made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER], I have offered this amendment. It is undoubtedly true that something has been the matter with oysters during the last year. Some people who are experts say they have been sick all along the coast. It is a matter of great importance commercially, and an investigation of the planting of oysters to this limited extent would do no harm. I think planting would come within the jurisdiction of this department and probably answer the questions raised by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. You propose here to investigate the packing, handling, storing, and shipping of oysters. Why not go one step further and provide for the planting of oysters? If that be inquired into by those who are competent to make the inquiry, it would be very helpful all along the coast. I care not whether a separate inquiry is being made by the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; but I suggest to the gentleman that only one minute remains.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made be revoked and the time extended for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL I desire to suggest that the Committee on Appropriations has had quite extensive hearings upon this subject of oyster diseases and oyster sicknesses, as my friend styled it, and my belief is that such sum as may be necessary to enable the Bureau of Fisheries to investigate and examine and go into the question of planting and the conditions of planting will be made in the sundry civil appropriation bill. It occurs to me, therefore, that we should not cross the line in this bill and go into the domain of the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman's suggestion is to be carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill I will not insist upon this here, but it is time something was done. This is an important industry and it ought to be cared for.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, of course I am only one member of the committee, and a humble minority member at that, and, of course, I can not bind the committee.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But so long as we have specialists engaged in the work of investigating the packing, handling, storing, and shipping of oysters, why not go a step further and expend $5,000 to try out planting?

Mr. MONDELL. The matter of planting is one that comes under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Fisheries. It is a work they have done to a certain extent, and it is a work they can do, and it seems to me we ought to confine that class of work to the Bureau of Fisheries.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. There is a very important work in planting, transplanting, and also an experiment is being carried on of washing oysters; that is, taking them up from the ground where they have grown, where the water may be more or less polluted, and carrying them out to cleaner water beyond the harbor line and there subjecting them to a washing. Whether that is sufficient we do not know, but it seems to me that the Bureau of Chemistry, better than anyone else, should determine whether that is the proper thing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not these experiments necessarily enter into the packing and handling and storing of oysters?

Mr. TILSON. It seems to me that this is the proper paragraph of the bill and the proper bill.

Mr. MONDELL. It is never wise to duplicate the work of bureaus. If the Agricultural Department undertook this work it is possible that the Bureau of Fisheries would feel that they had no obligation in the matter, and instead of helping the matter it might retard it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I recognize that this is an important matter, but from the statements made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and from my own personal knowledge of what the Bureau of Fisheries is doing with reference to fish, I take it that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania only sets up duplicate machinery to do this work. In other words, if I understand the gentleman from Wyoming correctly, the Bureau of Fisheries is now doing the very kind of work that the gentleman from Pennsylvania would propose to do with his amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I admit that they have not been doing as much in that line, perhaps, as they should have done, but I have no doubt that under their appropriations for the coming fiscal year they will be able to largely extend that work. Our attention has been called to the importance of it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman's statement is even stronger than I had understood it myself. In other words, the Committee on Appropriations has recognized the importance of this work and is going to increase the appropriation for the Bureau of Fisheries to do more extensive work along these lines. Therefore it seems to me that, out of good business and practice, we ought not to set up here in the Agricultural appropriation bill a separate piece of machinery to do duplicate work.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. In just one second. More than that, I take it that the Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Chemistry, is not nearly so well equipped to do this kind of work. It has not the experts that the Bureau of Fisheries has, and if we are going to do it at all, we ought to select the most efficient machinery that we have existent to do the work, and I trust that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is always alert, will be on the job when the sundry civil bill comes up to see that this work is cared for.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I expect to be, but I would like to ask the gentleman if we can not include "planting" in this item—why he has the item in at all? Something ought to be done in regard to this matter; a bird in hand is worth two in the bush. That is the situation.

Mr. LEVER. The province of the Department of Agriculture, as these gentlemen have segregated its province, is to deal with the proposition after and not before production. We are engaged with the transportation and such problems.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I do.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not true this item has more to do with the marketing of oysters as a product, whereas the other item has more to do with the propagation and culture of the oysters?

Mr. LEVER. The work of the Department of Agriculture is purely a marketing or distributing proposition. The work of the Bureau of Fisheries is absolutely, as I take it, a proposition of propagation and production.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. HARRISON. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that one place in my district is a great oyster center, Biloxi, and I know that one of the departments of the Government, I can not say which one, has made an investigation relative to the pollution of the oyster, as it was claimed that the oysters were not healthy and suitable to be shipped in interstate commerce. The city health officer of that city came up here and remained for a month studying the proposition so that he could go back and tell those packers and the people who owned the oyster reefs how to preserve them in such condition that the oysters would be healthy. There can be no question that one of the departments of the Government has carefully investigated this matter. I do not know which one it was.

Mr. LEVER. The Department of Commerce.

Mr. HARRISON. So the situation is not as bad as some people pretend it to be.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote, and I hope the amendment may be voted down.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States, $50,000.

Mr. MONDELL and Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important item, the discussion of which might possibly last for 15, 20, 30, or 40 minutes. If gentlemen are going to make the point of order, I would like them to do it notwithstanding what I may be able to say, so as to save time, but if the gentlemen are not going to insist on it, I think we had better discuss it.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I did not know whether I would or not, but it seems this is intended for an investigation in reference to dyestuffs.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. On the theory it might have to do with the coloring of food products. Is that the idea?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman the information is that the Bureau of Chemistry in enforcing the pure food and drug act has developed a great many very expert chemists in the matter of dyes. In other words, the chemists of the department must be really expert in the dye business in order to detect coloring matter in certain foods put upon the market, and therefore we have to some extent the machinery for doing this work in the department, and it is in this bureau.

Mr. FOSTER. I see the committee provides in the next paragraph for the purchase and equipment of a traveling laboratory, $7,500.

Mr. LEVER. That has to do with something entirely different.

Mr. FOSTER. It has nothing to do with this?

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, before the next paragraph is discussed I want to reserve a point of order on it.

Mr. LEVER. It is already reserved.

Mr. BOOHER. No; not on that.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman give any idea—I suppose the Agricultural Department officials had something in view where they could experiment in reference to these coloring materials or dyestuffs. Now, we know this, that the dyestuffs are made largely from coal-tar products. Is it the intention of the Agricultural Department, through its chemists there, to take up the study of the coal products of the country?

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit me to make just a connected statement on this for the benefit of the whole committee, the Secretary in his written estimate asked for $20,000 for this item and later he submitted a supplemental estimate for $30,000, making a total of $50,000. The Committee on Agriculture had the experts of the department before the committee and examined them rather carefully. Since that time I have had the department furnish me with a more comprehensive statement of what is proposed to be undertaken through this item. First of all, they wish to investigate the dyes which we have in agricultural products in this country, and we know we have some out of which we may get some dyes. I take it that is going to be rather unimportant as compared with the other line of work. Their next line of work is to study methods of producing dyes from coal-tar products. Now, there are some concerns in this country that produce dyes, but they are not producing nearly so large a number from coal-tar products as are the German people.

It is the belief of the Department of Agriculture, through its Bureau of Chemistry, that by a proper study, by a concentrated effort along these lines, there is enough brain in this country, enough experts, enough initiative, enough power to do things to bring about a situation which will put this country on a self-sustaining basis in time with reference to dyestuffs.

Now, understand, the Department of Agriculture has a building at Arlington Farm which is suitable for a laboratory in which to make these studies. It is proposed by the department to utilize this building, establish a laboratory there, and go into a complete and comprehensive study of the entire proposition of producing dyes in this country, either from natural products or from coal-tar products through the synthetic method of producing dyes. I have a statement here which gives in detail just how this money is to be expended. I shall read it to the committee, if they desire. If not, I will insert it in the RECORD at the proper place.

Mr. FOSTER. The sole purpose, as I understand from the gentleman's remark, of this provision is to investigate coal-tar products, largely for the investigation of coal-tar products for the production of dyes?

Mr. LEVER. I think that would be their first line of work; yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform us what connection there may be between the food products of the country and the products of coal tar to be made into dyes?

Mr. ANDERSON. The Department of Agriculture is constantly making investigations relative to coal-tar products, and it is the only department of the Government that is making any investigation in regard to dyes.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, this is to determine the use of coal-tar dies in manufacture and not for food products. I want to know if that is the intention?

Mr. LEVER. Let me say this to the gentleman, that the Department of Agriculture in enforcing the pure-food law must necessarily be acquainted with the various coloring matters that go into the food, and it is necessary for them frequently to make in their laboratory the colors themselves, and they have been doing that, so that they themselves may have a standard by which they can work. Now, that is the laboratory matter. They tell us that they know the laboratory methods of producing dyes now. It is a question, however, of getting a little bit beyond the test-tube work they have been doing.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether I have made myself plain or not, but what I am getting at is this: Is the investigation to develop the dyestuffs to be confined to food products or is it for the purpose of developing dyes for the industry to be used in the manufacture of cotton and woolen and other goods?

Mr. LEVER. Now, I will answer the gentleman's question. I am glad he brought that out, because I thought it was understood. The purpose of this item is to enable the department to investigate the dyestuff industry, if possible, and find some method of developing it to such an extent that will take care of the entire dye situation in this country and take care of the great industrial concerns which must necessarily use a great deal of it, like the cotton and woolen manufacturing.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman really think that is the duty of the Department of Agriculture? The other day in a bill we gave $10,000 for the purpose of developing these dyes in another branch of the Government. Now, here comes along the Agricultural bill with an appropriation of $50,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman really think that the Department of Agriculture ought to have this appropriation to start into the development of dyes for use commercially?

Mr. LEVER. Now, let me answer that question, because it is important. We do not want to build up duplicating machinery here. I do not think myself that the item in the other appropriation bill to which the gentleman refers is going to give the authority, or duplicate the authority, that we are conferring here. Now, this is a fact, that the work of the Bureau of Standards with reference to color is a physical work entirely. Their work looks to the measurement of color, not to the production of color; not to the production of dyes, but to the work of fixing and finding out the amount of color, the standard of color, and the like of that, in various dyes. For instance, they are working out a method by which they can ascertain the amount of color in oleomargarine and cottonseed oil and a number of other products. Now, that is their line of work—to study measurements and standards and do the physical end of the work. The Bureau of Chemistry, on the other hand, is equipped to do it, and it is the only bureau in the Government which is confessedly, on all sides, equipped to do the chemical side of this work.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman is mistaken about that. We have in one department of the Government a bureau equipped for making these tests, and where they have to do with coal from the time it comes out of the ground until it is finally disposed of. I refer to the Bureau of Mines. Now, that laboratory is equipped for doing all this work. All they need is money with which to do it. They have a chemist there who is the equal of any in the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. One of the very best.

Mr. FOSTER. One of the very best, as the gentleman from Ohio says.

Mr. LEVER. I agree to that.

Mr. FOSTER. And now we start out here with $50,000, to enable the Department of Agriculture to commence with this work. It seems to me this matter probably belongs in that bureau of the Government which is doing that kind of work, and not in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask the gentleman if this matter of dyes is not being considered now by the Ways and Means Committee, with a view to bringing in some kind of legislation to encourage the manufacture of dyes?

Mr. LEVER. I understand that is true, but their proposition is a tariff proposition, and this is a production proposition.

Mr. BOOHER. In other words, this is an attempt to put in the Agricultural Department a purely manufacturing proposition connected in no way with agriculture, is it not?

Mr. LEVER. We do not think so, and I will tell you why.

Mr. HAUGEN and Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I will yield to my friend from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to have an answer to my question.

Mr. LEVER. The committee does not think so. The committee thinks this item would be justified if for no other reason than that there are a number of products, both of the field and of the forest, that could be manufacured in this country, if the necessary information regarding the methods and processes were worked out and made known, but we do not believe, as business men, that we shall be successful enough with that line of operations to plant this country on a self-sustaining basis with respect to its dyestuffs. Therefore we believe, after all, that our biggest field will be in the study of the methods by which dyes are made from coal-tar products, just as they are made in Germany.

Mr. BOOHER. Why not wait until we see what legislation the Ways and Means Committee suggests before appropriating $50,000 along the same line? It may save duplication. I am not opposed to this legislation, but do not approve putting it on this bill. It should be taken up on its merits and thoroughly discussed.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to my friend from Missouri frankly that I feel this way about it, and probably I am a little old-fashioned in that respect: If we can build up an industry here through productive methods, I would prefer to do it rather than to build it up through protective methods. It may be that we shall have to consider some legislation which may come from the Committee on Ways and Means, and probably there will be some legislation passed from that Committee on the subject; but I would very much prefer if we could put this country on a self-sustaining basis through its own efforts in the production of anything, rather than to do it through protective duties and on protective lines, and the like of that, which will keep competition out.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What will protective duties have to do with this, anyhow?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows that I do not discuss the tariff.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is arguing against the creation of new enterprises here.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think that is a valid reason.

Mr. HAUGEN. When this item was up in the committee for consideration my recollection is that some member of the committee suggested that some other committee might make appropriations, or report favorably upon appropriations, for this purpose, and that it is possible that this work might be assigned to the Bureau of Standards or the Bureau of Mines. Has the gentleman conferred with members of other committees to ascertain if this work will be provided for and taken care of?

Mr. LEVER. The only committee that would have jurisdiction of an item of this kind would be the committee that carries the appropriations for the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. HAUGEN. And the committee that carries the appropriations for the Bureau of Mines, and also the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. LEVER. I understand the bill is about ready for report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think there is a good deal in what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] says. It is a matter that is now before a committee of the House. It is receiving consideration—the question of the establishment of the coal-tar dye industry in this country. Personally I am very much in hopes that some legislation will be originated in that committee which will provide for the establishment and maintenance of the coal-tar dye industry. In the meantime it occurs to me that it might not be wise to appropriate as much as $50,000 for mere experimentation purposes, for, after all, we can not learn anything more by experimentation in this country than has already been learned by Germany, which has been manufacturing these dyes for many years, and which now produces 1,800 different colors, whereas the largest number we have ever produced in this country practically is about 15 dyes.

Mr. LEVER. I thought it was more than that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Less than 20 colors are being made in this country.

Mr. LEVER. No matter how high the protective duties may be on dyestuffs, the situation, to my mind, is so critical that the Congress of the United States is justified in taking advantage of every line of inquiry possible to see if we can not better the condition.

More than that, I will say to my friend, you may make the tariff duties as high as you may, and still that does not eliminate the sound reason for putting on foot an investigation for the study of the best methods of doing these things. I am inclined to think myself, if my friend will permit me, that there is not in this country at this time that thoroughness of understanding of the methods of producing dyestuffs that the German people have.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman is perfectly right about that, but——

Mr. LEVER. And therefore we feel that we ought to have a sufficient sum to put our experts at work and train them to bring about relief from this situation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman realizes that the American Chemical Society has gone into this matter very thoroughly. It is upon their report that the Committee on Ways and Means is now considering the question, and in their report it is unanimously decided that there is no possible way to create that industry in this country, to make a substantial industry, except by means of legislation which, particularly after the war, will prevent the sort of competition that we have had from the German dye manufacturers.

Mr. LEVER. I will not admit it, although I have not studied it; yet I have read the hearings of the committee on that subject. But in any event it may be necessary, whatever else may be done here, to raise the duties on dyestuffs. But I do know this, that we can not afford to let pass the opportunity here to put on foot an investigation of this entire situation, and if it costs $50,000, good and well; if it costs more than that, good and well. It is not money badly spent; it is not money wasted, in my judgment.

There is no duplication of work between the gentleman's line of thought and mine at all. The work of each is supplemental to the other, and we can not do too much, in my judgment, along this line of promoting the dyestuff industry, and likewise promoting the fertilizer industry of this country. I do not believe, gentlemen of the committee, that any great people, much less a Nation of 100,000,000 people, ought to feel itself dependent at any time upon foreign nations for things that enter into its commercial life. [Applause.] I am willing to spend money along this line.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I agree absolutely with the gentleman. It is for that reason that I support the proposition to create a dye industry. It is for that reason that I shall support the amendment which the gentleman will introduce, to have a Government experimental plant, to investigate the extracting of potash from seaweed, or something else. But I am afraid that this might be considered in some way or other as a substitute for legislation which the Ways and Means Committee are now considering.

Mr. LEVER. Of course, I do not know what kind of a bill the Ways and Means Committee will report.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman would not say that this is in any sense a substitute?

Mr. LEVER. I would not be willing to say by any means that this appropriation here is the last word or the best thought of Congress on the subject of developing the dyestuff industry in this country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Nor would the gentleman say that it would obviate the necessity for legislation such as the Ways and Means Committee are now considering?

Mr. LEVER. Until I see the gentleman's bill, I would not like to commit myself to that proposition, although if a good proposition is brought in here, I shall support it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If I felt that the gentleman believed that this would obviate the necessity for the legislation which the Ways and Means Committee will bring in, I would at once raise a point of order against this.

Mr. LEVER. I think the gentleman will admit that I do not pay much attention to politics, and that I do not know much about that end of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I shall not make the point of order, but I want it understood that this provision does not in any way take the place of the legislation which the Ways and Means Committee are considering.

Mr. BORLAND. Has the point of order been reserved on the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMLIN). The Chair understands that it was reserved. The present occupant of the chair was temporarily absent.

Mr. LEVER. The point of order has been reserved, and I think the debate has gone far enough to develop whether the point of order will be made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I should like five minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the point of order is withdrawn, I should like to make a suggestion with reference to the form of the paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] that there will probably be 30 minutes of debate on this; and if the point of order is going to be made in the end, I think it ought to be made now. The paragraph is subject to a point of order; and if it is going to be made, it will save the time of the committee to make it now. I have made about the best statement that I can on this section.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman will yield to me for about two minutes, I will tell him what my point of order is.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes so that this question of the point of order may be settled one way or the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BORLAND. My point of order is not to the investigation of vegetable dyestuffs by the Agricultural Department, but to an investigation that would overlap the investigation now provided for by the Bureau of Standards of mineral dyes. I do not think there ought to be any duplication of this work, and I am quite sure that the words "of raw materials grown or produced in the United States" are broader than contemplated by the organic law of the Department of Agriculture. If it was "grown in the United States" it would be a different proposition, but "grown or produced" gives them a roving commission to investigate all kinds of dyestuffs. That is the point in a nutshell.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I thought I had here a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in which it was stated that the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Agriculture through their bureaus had had a conference on this matter, and that they had agreed upon the line of work that each should do, but I do not find that letter here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, when the item providing for investigation of dyestuffs was under consideration in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill I offered an amendment to extend the work of that bureau so as to investigate the manufacture of dyestuffs.

Mr. LEVER. I recall that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Shortly after I offered that amendment, with the idea that the Bureau of Standards should alone have jurisdiction of the scope of this work, but not wishing to interfere in any way with the work of the Agricultural Department if it was separate and distinct, I addressed a letter to the Chief of the Bureau of Standards, Dr. Stratton, inquiring as to what was the real scope of the work under his bureau. I received a reply from the Secretary of Commerce, as well as a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, stating that the two works were entirely distinct.

Mr. LEVER. That is my recollection of the letter which I received.

Mr. STAFFORD. That the Bureau of Standards was merely to investigate as to color standards. The letter from Secretary Redfield, as well as the letter from Secretary Houston, convinced me that there was a distinct need of this investigation by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. LEVER. And a distinct line of work.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes to complete this statement, so that the committee may have full acquaintance with the facts as I know them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. As I understood the gentleman, he concedes that there is not only a distinct need for it, but also that there is a distinct line of demarcation in their work.

Mr. STAFFORD. That there was a distinct need for the investigation; that the Bureau of Standards was to investigate standards of color, whereas it was proposed by the Agricultural Department to investigate the character of materials, and largely agricultural materials, from which dyestuffs could be produced. It is well known that we are suffering from a shortage of dyestuffs in this country. It is well known that Germany possesses a knowledge of processes of manufacture of dyestuffs with which our American manufacturers have no acquaintance whatsoever. The purpose of this provision is to establish some Government agency which will be an aid to our manufacturers, so that they will know how to extract colors from raw materials and products developed in the United States and give that knowledge to the manufacturers when the industry is established here, as it should be, and I hope will be, under the protecting influence of the bill that will shortly, I hope, be reported by the Committee on Ways and Means. Now I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Has the gentleman the letter he referred to in which it is claimed the director said that he was not going to investigate the methods of production?

Mr. STAFFORD. I received a reply from Secretary Redfield, in which he said that the work was entirely distinct and that he had had a conversation with the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, in which they agreed that they were entirely distinct, and no overlapping whatever—that the Bureau of Standards was doing one line of work as to standards and the Agricultural Department was investigating as to what materials could be utilized.

Mr. BORLAND. That might be all true, and still the Bureau of Standards might be investigating methods of manufacture; it might be that the two departments can work in harmony.

Mr. STAFFORD. There was no question between Secretary Redfield and Secretary Houston, as was stated in the letter, that the work was entirely distinct and that they were going to work in harmony.

Mr. LEVER. I have the letter here, or a part of it, which I will read.

This is a letter from Dr. Stratton, of the Bureau of Standards, to Dr. C. L. Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry:

> As to the development of the processes involved in the manufacture of coal tar and mineral dyes I would state that there may be a difference of opinion as to where that work belongs. However, I can assure you that, as far as I am personally concerned, I am entirely agreeable as to its being done in your bureau in case the Government decides to undertake it, and should you do so, I will be pleased to render every possible assistance.

That carries a strong inference that the Government is not now undertaking it.

Mr. BORLAND. The difficulty is that you are carrying the Bureau of Chemistry outside of its organic work when he gets into the investigations of coal-tar products.

Mr. LEVER. We are doing it every day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. I make the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman reserve it? I want five minutes.

Mr. BORLAND. If I reserve it, I want to talk five minutes myself.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of what has been said I would like to make a few observations.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Wyoming has any hope of convincing the gentleman from Missouri on this important matter, I should be willing that he took the time; but if the gentleman from Missouri is adamant, it will be wasted.

Mr. BORLAND. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit me to offer a suggestion?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. Whatever may result in the way of revenue legislation growing out of the dyestuff question, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that, in my opinion, there is a necessity for investigation into the processes of the manufacture of dyestuffs by some Government agency. If there be revenue legislation initiated by the Committee on Ways and Means under which there will be a development of dyestuff products in this country, that development will come under processes, unless there is some such investigation, that will be developed by private individuals upon which there will be patent or trade-mark rights. My opinion is that, in view of this fact, the instrumentalities of this Government should be utilized to obtain the action which will give to the public and every man and every individual alike, and I very much hope the gentleman will not press his point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I believe I was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GARRETT. But the gentleman from Missouri made the point of order.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; after I had been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is mistaken. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. He mentioned my name.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming have five minutes and that I have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he have five minutes and that the gentleman from Wyoming have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall not object provided the debate shall end at the expiration of 10 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Missouri intends to make the point of order, I think an opportunity should be given to make an argument on the point of order itself.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that the point of order was made?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made, but the Chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to afterwards reserve it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the present parliamentary status?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved against the paragraph. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there is no question as to the advisability under present conditions of an investigation such as is contemplated by the item under discussion. Some investigation and some experiments along these lines should, in my opinion, be carried on by some Government agency, and the question is, What Government agency should carry on that work? It is true, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] stated a moment ago, that there has been no duplication between the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Chemistry in the Agricultural Department touching their work on coloring matter. Up to this time the Bureau of Standards has examined the question from the standpoint of standardization, and the Bureau of Agriculture up to this time has been examining the subject from the standpoint of the effect of coloring matter on food.

It is proposed in this item to undertake an entirely new work, and it is suggested that the Agricultural Department has a corps of chemists and a building over at Arlington that can be fitted up for the purpose, and I presume that a large part of the $50,000 will be spent in fitting up the building necessary for the work. Query, Is there not somewhere in the Government a bureau or department that is already prepared to do the work? Can not the Bureau of Standards without additional buildings or new equipment widen the scope of its work, and is not that the bureau to undertake it? If not, is not this work a work that could properly be taken up by the chemists of the Bureau of Mines? Our dyes are no longer largely made from agricultural products. My understanding is that the bulk of the dyes are made from coal tar and coal.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman could have half an hour's conversation with Dr. Parsons, the chemist of the Bureau of Mines, he would learn more about dyes and the coal-tar industry than he can in reading volumes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that is true. That is in the line of their work. They have been engaged for a considerable length of time in working out processes for the production of dyes, and an official of the Bureau of Mines recently patented some inventions which are now held by the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee, for the production of dyes and various by-products from oil or coal. It seems to me that this is a work that could be more properly undertaken by the Bureau of Mines or by the Bureau of Standards. However, if there was danger that it would not be undertaken unless it was undertaken by the Agricultural Department, I should not want to see this item go out. I think the work should be undertaken.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FESS. How much activity have we had in the past in discovering different varieties of colors which we can produce?

Mr. MONDELL. The Federal Government, I think, has been doing practically nothing along the line of experimenting in the development of coloring matter or with a view of developing processes; but my suggestion is that it is not a proper agricultural activity, because coloring matter of this day and generation is obtained almost wholly from mineral products. We are no longer using butternut and juniper berries and things of that kind for coloring to any considerable extent, except in some of the country districts.

Mr. FESS. It has been stated on the floor that we produce probably 20 varieties, and that there are about 1,800 known.

Mr. MONDELL. I think there would be no objection to the Agricultural Department developing coloring matter from agricultural products.

Mr. FESS. There certainly is a great work for some one.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say to the chairman of the committee that if the point of order should not be made the word "raw" should by all means be taken out of this item, because coal-tar dyes are not raw material.

It is highly important that every encouragement and aid should be given the dye industry of the country, or for the development of the dye industry of the country, as is proposed under the item we are discussing. But after all this is done, our final success will depend upon the protection of the new and growing industry by tariffs. Dr. H. D. Gibbs, chemist in charge of the color laboratory of the Bureau of Chemistry of the Agricultural Department, made the following statement in answer to an inquiry made by the chairman of the Agricultural Committee, as recorded on page 852 of the committee hearings:

> The CHAIRMAN. Has there ever been any attempt in this country to put the dye industry on its feet?
> Dr. GIBBS. There was a serious attempt by a number of manufacturers who were almost driven out of the business by foreign competition; that is, the same dyes which they made were shipped in here and sold at such a rate that they had to stop the manufacture of the particular dyes in question. There is one firm in this country that at various times in its existence in the last 25 years or so has manufactured about 130 different dyes, and they were driven from one dye to the other by this kind of competition.

This statement of Dr. Gibbs clearly illustrates the handicap under which our people would operate even after they got started; and whatever else we may do, we must also protect the dye industry after it is started or it will be throttled by foreign competition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, there is no one who more heartily agrees than I do with all that has been said about the necessity of finding additional supplies of dyestuffs for this country in developing our home production. We have seen in almost all of the appropriations we have had to make recently, even for the departments of the Government, the excessive cost that is now being paid for these dyestuffs, as, for instance, printer's ink and things of that sort in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. We formerly imported all of that, and we are purchasing it now at greatly increased prices. And, of course, we know the condition of the textile industry in this country. We know the urgent need at this time of a domestic supply of dyestuffs. There is no use of basing an argument on that proposition. There is no use, either, of basing an argument on the proposition that we ought to have some scientific bureau of this Government equipped to develop processes of manufacturing. We ought to have one; and if we ever become a great manufacturing nation in competition with Germany and other scientifically developed nations, we shall have to have some department of this Government equipped to continually develop scientific methods. My understanding is that the Bureau of Standards comes nearer filling that field as a universal bureau than any other department of the Government.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; for a question.

Mr. LEVER. I think I am entitled to make this statement. The gentleman was not here when I made my statement. He happened to be attending to business on another committee. But the statement is made that the Bureau of Standards is not doing any of this kind of work, and it does not want even to undertake the work of producing dyestuffs. The Bureau of Standards is engaged in the work of measuring color, standardizing color.

Mr. BORLAND. I was about to refer to that matter. It is not so that the Bureau of Standards simply makes standards or decides on standards of color as well as standards of other things. That may have been its original object, but anybody who has seen the growth of that bureau knows that they have progressed beyond that and that they now test material as to its adaptability to certain lines of manufacture.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman knows that the item under which the Bureau of Standards is making these color studies has not been in the legislative bill except this year?

Mr. BORLAND. Of course; because this whole agitation is new.

Mr. LEVER. So that they have not been doing any of that kind of work.

Mr. BORLAND. And here we want the Department of Agriculture, which happens to have a chemical laboratory, to engage in work entirely foreign to the Department of Agriculture simply because they have that laboratory; no other reason advanced. It is not contended—in fact, it is admitted that the material they are going to work on is not agricultural.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I am sorry that I can not yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just to correct a misapprehension under which the gentleman is laboring.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, I desire to make my own statement. It is urged here that they have a chemical laboratory and, therefore, it is convenient at this time to turn this work over to them. If you continue to put into the Department of Agriculture all kinds of work, manufacturing, nonagricultural, mining, and everything else, you will soon have it overtopped. This Bureau of Chemistry is confined to the investigation of food products, and it ought to be confined to that, and we ought not to put any manufacturing processes in there, mineral or otherwise. If they have any way of examining vegetable dye for coloring food or otherwise that is going to be useful, they may need to have an increased appropriation for that purpose, but as to going into the analysis of mineral dyes and equipping practically a new section of their laboratory for that purpose, it ought not to be done in this bill.

It is not in the organic act creating the Agricultural Department and ought not to be attempted under a passing notion or excitement that we want more dyestuffs.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the genleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I do.

Mr. HELVERING. The gentleman understands that there is a bill, and looked upon favorably, for the protection of the manufacturers of dyestuffs in this country?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Does not the gentleman think that should be engaged in by the Government rather than left to private individuals?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think it is needed. I have talked with men in the paint business in this country, the largest paint manufacturers in the country, and they tell me when the shortage of coloring matter occurred they sent to Switzerland and Austria and imported scientists into this country, and to-day they are making reds and other colors, aniline dyes, equal to if not superior to the Austrian and German dyes. They are supplying their own needs and are beginning to supply printing manufacturers and they are on the point of soliciting orders from textile manufacturers. I asked them whether they needed any protection, and they said they did not. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard briefly on the point of order. A casual examination of this item, I think, would lead anyone to conclude that it was subject to the point of order as it led me to conclude that it was subject to the point of order. But a more careful investigation has convinced me that the paragraph is not subject to the point of order. Now, I want to call the attention of the Chair, as I have done at other times, to the language of the organic act creating the Department of Agriculture:

> There shall be at the seat of government a Department of Agriculture, the general design and duties of which shall be to acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture.

Now, on that proposition I want to call the attention of the Chair to this fact, that the testimony which has already been read in the hearing of the Chair during this discussion from the scientists of the Department of Agriculture is to the effect that there are a great many agricultural products, that there are a great many forest products, out of which dyes of all description have been made and are being made at this time, and out of which a great many other dyes may be made with proper investigation and the development of proper processes. That is the first proposition, and it is that the full utilization of the agricultural products of the country may make it necessary that we inquire into the processes of dyeing and coloring these articles of the farm. If so, then the language of the organic act is broad enough in my judgment to meet this situation. The second proposition I call the attention of the Chair to is this: The Department of Agriculture under the law is intrusted with the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act. The experts from the chemistry division of the Department of Agriculture tell us that it is absolutely necessary in the proper enforcement of the pure food and drugs act that they be in position to know the amount of coloring in given food products. Not only that, but they must be in position to know the composition of the coloring matter in those food products, so that it has been found necessary in the chemical department to manufacture a number of aniline dyes, to which the gentleman from Missouri refers, which are there made by certain processes from coal-tar products in order that the Bureau of Chemistry may fully, completely, and wisely enforce the act which Congress has put upon them to enforce, the pure food and drugs act.

Now, then, it seems to me, under the organic act, we should have the right to appropriate in this bill for the purpose of investigating the processes and methods by which we may make farm products more valuable and useful to the public and by which we may gather information touching those agricultural products that may be diffused to the people of the country under the wording of the organic act. It seems to me that we not only have that right, but we go one step further and say we must have the right in the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act, if we are going to enforce it properly, to ascertain the methods of developing and producing aniline dyestuffs in this country which go into coloring matter. I want to call the attention of the Chair to a rule of construction laid down by the great Chief Justice of the United States, Chief Justice Marshall, in the interpretation of a statute, and I take it that the Chair, in interpreting the meaning of statutes and their application to points of order on appropriation bills and in the interpretation of the rules of the House, would be guided largely by the principles that are laid down by the courts in interpreting the statutes that come before them. In the case of McCulloch versus Maryland, Chief Justice Marshall said:

> Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited but consist with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are constitutional.

Now, of course, this is not a constitutional question; it is a question of order, but if the Chair can make up his mind that the work we are undertaking to do here is incidental to the carrying out of the powers that have been conferred by law, then these incidental rights certainly accrue and the point of order will not lie.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the rule is that if any portion of a paragraph is out of order the entire paragraph is out of order. If we admit the argument of the gentleman from South Carolina, there would be absolutely no limitation upon the powers of the Department of Agriculture, and we could appropriate and consign to them any work within the sphere of human endeavor. The fact that they may have occasion to test aniline dyes entering into the coloring of food matter, if we give them power to go to the question of the process of the manufacture of aniline dyes, why, it could be argued with equal strength that the fact that they have occasion to use buildings in connection with the Department of Agriculture would give them unlimited power to test building materials, fireproofing, structural material, and structural strength of all kinds.

If they need coal to heat their buildings or to engage in laboratory work, it would enable them to go into all the processes of mining and distributing coal. The fact that they might occasionally need gas in their processes or in the work of their department would give them the entire field of gas investigation. The fact that they need electricity occasionally in their work would give them the entire electrical field. And so there would be no limit whatever to that process of argument. You have got to confine it to what is germanely and reasonably connected with the development of the agricultural industry.

Now, it has been pretty generally understood in this debate that the moving cause of this particular appropriation is to find dyestuffs for manufacturing purposes, not for the coloring of food, and the chief of those dyestuffs are mineral productions and not agricultural at all; but it is assumed that the two can be lumped conveniently. Whether they can be conveniently lumped together is not the question before the Chair. The question before the Chair is whether the part they propose to engage in is beyond the power of the organic law. If it is, then the paragraph is subject to a point of order. They may be able to introduce a paragraph that is not subject to a point of order——

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] quoted the Agricultural act. This comes under a different act, the pure-food act, and the Bureau of Chemistry comes under that.

Mr. LEVER. There is no statutory provision establishing the Bureau of Chemistry.

Mr. BORLAND. There is no statutory provision establishing the Bureau of Chemistry. If the gentleman says they have got any such warrant of law it is up to him to point it out, but he would in so doing prove there was no necessity for this paragraph.

Now, here is what I want to call the Chair's attention to. They say:

For investigation and experiment in the utilization, for coloring purposes, of raw materials grown or produced in the United States.

Now, the word "grown" is clearly identified with agricultural pursuits. "Grown in the United States" would include almost any vegetable product. But they have very carefully enlarged that language, and I think with a good deal of care and skill, so that it is absolutely unlimited in its scope. They say, "Grown or produced in the United States." Now, "produced in the United States" means any possible line of human activity, and there is no question but that it is beyond the powers of the organic act.

If Congress were to legislate in that way, to create by an organic act one department, and then by its construction enlarge its activities into every department over which Congress has power to legislate, the limitations of law would be ropes of sand. Congress puts limitations upon the Agricultural Department and it confines it to agriculture—to matters grown within the United States—but they say, "grown or produced within the United States," and the minute they say "produced in the United States" they have usurped the entire field of human activity—manufacturing, mining, and all other forms. Now, there is no question about that; and if that is true, and it is practically admitted in the argument that preceded this argument on the point of order, then it is certainly beyond the organic power of the act.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the gentleman contend that the investigations of the Department of Agriculture are necessarily limited, or are limited by the act creating the department, to the investigation of raw products—products of the soil in their natural state—and those investigations can not go beyond the investigations or the dissemination of information in regard to agricultural products in their raw state?

Mr. BORLAND. No; that argument is not necessary.

Mr. ANDERSON. That seems to be a necessary sequel to the gentleman's argument.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman will readily concede, I think, as he is a pretty clear thinker, the words "produced in the United States" comprise about as wide a term as could be used.

Mr. ANDERSON. That is true; but it does not seem to me that the mere fact that that may include articles which are not strictly raw products of agriculture necessarily would lead to the conclusion that this amendment goes beyond the authority of the enabling act, and is consequently not in order.

Mr. BORLAND. As a matter of fact, it has been pointed out here to the Chair that the Bureau of Chemistry is a "by-product" of the pure food and drug act. There is not any organic law creating it. It is a part of the necessary and incidental machinery for enforcing the pure food and drug act. That further limits the activities of the Bureau of Chemistry, because clearly by that line of argument the Bureau of Chemistry has not the full sweep and power of even the organic act of the Department of Agriculture. It may be used conveniently and tacitly by the department for all sorts of purposes, but if it is a "by-product" of a special law for the enforcement of the pure food and drug act, its powers are much more narrowly defined than the powers of the department itself. In other words, it may be possible to provide for an additional chemical laboratory for the purpose of dyestuffs under the organic act, provided we are limited to agricultural products, but not necessarily to confer that power upon the Bureau of Chemistry.

Now, the fact that the Bureau of Chemistry exists in the Department of Agriculture seems to be the only argument that has been advanced why any of these powers should be conferred upon it, and I submit that is not, on a question of the point of order, on a question of law, a controlling feature. It is not a question of convenience; it is a question of whether the organic act extends to that line of activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair might regret that a point of order is made to this paragraph, but that is not a question for the Chair to take into consideration in passing on the point of order. As has been stated here, and it appears undisputed that this Bureau of Chemistry is an incident made necessary now by the passage of the pure food and drugs act. The Chair can not agree entirely with the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] that because the investigation of the dye industry might involve and take in some of the products of agriculture and in that way help that industry, therefore the paragraph would be in order on a bill of this kind. It is a fact of which we are all conscious, that there is scarcely any industry in this country that does not touch agriculture somewhere along the line, and if we were to apply the rule invoked by the gentleman from South Carolina, the Chair could conceive of scarcely anything that could not be made in order on an Agricultural appropriation bill.

But I repeat that it appears undisputed—and the Chair thinks that is true—that this Bureau of Chemistry is an incident to the pure food and drugs act. It has been treated as such in all the Agricultural appropriation bills, so far as the Chair knows, and is so treated in this bill. You will observe that provisions are made for conducting an investigation relative to the application of chemistry to agriculture; for an investigation of the character of the chemical and physical tests applied to American food products; for the investigation of the preparation for market, handling, grading, packing, freezing, drying, storing, transportation, and preservation of poultry and eggs; the handling and grading and packing and transportation of fish; the packing, handling, storing, and shipping of oysters, and other shell fish; and for the biological investigation of food and drug products and substances used in the manufacture thereof—recognizing all along that the activities of this bureau are confined to things embraced in the pure food and drugs act.

Now, the Chair was very much interested in the debate upon this particular paragraph, and it seemed to be conceded upon all sides that the real purpose of this provision is to go into a general investigation as to the production of dyes which would not only include agricultural products but, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] says, using the broad term, "materials grown or produced in the United States," that might and likely would go entirely outside the realm of agriculture. It seems to the Chair that to hold this paragraph in order would be to go far afield of the original purpose in establishing this bureau. Therefore the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] offers an amendment as a new paragraph, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, as a new paragraph, on page 46, after line 16, the following: "For the employment of chemists and other scientific assistants for investigation and experiment in the utilization of coloring materials, $50,000."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman thinks it subject to a point of order, he might as well make it. I do not care to debate it.

Mr. BORLAND. I make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota want to be heard?

Mr. ANDERSON. Just one moment, Mr. Chairman. The enabling act, or the act creating the Department of Agriculture, authorizes the employment of "chemists, botanists, entomologists, and other persons skilled in the natural sciences pertaining to agriculture." This amendment merely authorizes the employment of chemists and other scientific assistants for the purpose of making investigations of coloring material.

It seems to me that that is clearly in order. It is a mere appropriation for the employment of persons for the purposes designated, and in that case it seems to me it is in order and not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman to read that paragraph again. The Chair could not catch it.

Mr. ANDERSON. This is in the original act. I read:

And he shall, as Congress may from time to time provide, employ other persons for such times as their services may be needed, including chemists, botanists, entomologists, and other persons skilled in the natural sciences pertaining to agriculture.

Now, the question of coloring matter is a natural science which pertains to agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. Would the gentleman permit the Chair to ask him this question? There is no doubt about the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to employ chemists under that act, but would the Secretary of Agriculture have or has the Secretary of Agriculture got authority to use these chemists for the purpose of making an investigation into the production of dyes for general manufacturing purposes?

Mr. ANDERSON. That is a matter of the general interpretation of the language. I say he may employ chemists for the purpose of investigating coloring materials. It is a fact that the Bureau of Chemistry now does investigate the question of coloring matter in foodstuffs, both in respect to coal-tar dyes and other kinds of dyes. I can see no reason why an investigation of this kind is outside of the purview of the Department of Agriculture. It seems to me to be clearly within the authority of the department.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, it need only be said about that amendment that it is a little bit broader, if possible, than the amendment that was ruled out. It is a little less confined in its operations.

This Bureau of Chemistry under which this amendment is offered is a creature of the pure food and drugs act. The gentleman can not get away from that, and he can not get away from the proposition that, even if the powers of the department were broad enough to create a laboratory for the investigation of the general production of coloring matter, it certainly would not be under this particular bureau. He has not confined his language by any means, by direction or indirection, to the primary purpose of this section of the bill, which is the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act, in relation to food and materials. He is just simply given a roving commission to investigate coloring matter; and it is not only subject to all the objections referred to in the decision of the Chair a moment ago, but to the further objection that it is much broader than the Bureau of Chemistry, where it is placed.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, may I point out the fact that there is nothing in this amendment which confines the persons employed in the Bureau of Chemistry to any particular line?

Mr. BORLAND. That is exactly the trouble.

Mr. ANDERSON. And consequently the proposition is not limited to any authority which may be conferred upon the Bureau of Chemistry. If it has any jurisdiction at all, it gets it from the organic act.

Mr. BORLAND. But the gentleman has offered it in this place.

Mr. ANDERSON. That does not affect that situation.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman has offered it as a part of the Bureau of Chemistry appropriation.

Mr. HELVERING. As a matter of fact, you are arguing that the Bureau of Chemistry is incidental. His amendment is introduced under the organic act providing for the employment of chemists in the Agricultural Department. The provision under which he has introduced the amendment as a new paragraph is under the provisions of the organic act making it possible to hire chemists, and you are trying to confine it to the Bureau of Chemistry, which is incidental to the pure-food act.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman will see that he has offered his amendment to the Bureau of Chemistry appropriations. He offered it at the place where the Bureau of Chemistry appropriations are taken care of, and I say that is one point against it; but, in addition to that, the decision of the Chair on the previous point of order also applies. There are two points against this particular amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is proposed is considerably different from the original paragraph carried in the bill. I quite agree with the ruling of the Chair that the original paragraph was subject to a point of order, but I have serious doubts whether this amendment is subject to a point of order. From the face of the amendment you can not conclude that it is not for use in connection with agriculture. We have in the department a Bureau of Chemistry, authorized to investigate and to employ chemists to ascertain whether foods are adulterated or not. These chemists might be employed for the ascertainment of coloring material that could be utilized in the adulteration or misbranding of foods or drugs. In considering whether this amendment is in order, the Chair can not ask himself what is the purpose behind this amendment. The Chair can only consider the bald fact as to whether under the law creating the Department of Agriculture, coupled with the organic act creating the Bureau of Chemistry, there is authority that will warrant the employment of these men. I contend that there is authority.

The pure-food act authorizes an investigation by the Bureau of Chemistry as to whether food has been misbranded or adulterated. It is known to the Chair, and he must take cognizance of the fact, that foods are adulterated by means of coloring matter. There is nothing in this amendment to show that the investigation along these lines will not be utilized for that very purpose. The pure-food act passed in 1912 authorized the establishment of a Bureau of Chemistry, and I direct the attention of the Chair to section 4, which reads that examinations of specimens of foods and drugs shall be made in the Bureau of Chemistry and under the direction and supervision of such bureau for the purpose of determining from such examinations whether such articles are adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of this act. Here we are providing an agency whereby the department may be empowered to ascertain as to coloring matter, as to whether it may not be so utilized. If there is this warrant, as I am trying to show the Chair that there is; if the Bureau of Chemistry, inquiring as to the adulteration or misbranding of foods or drugs, is authorized to do this, then this is in order. I want to emphasize the wording of the original pure-food act authorizing the Bureau of Chemistry to inquire as to the misbranding of foods and drugs. The Chair must know that foods and drugs are adulterated by the utilization of coloring matter. But how can the department ascertain whether there is coloring matter in those drugs and foods unless they have chemists to analyze the component parts of the material?

Mr. BORLAND. How does that include the investigation of the production of these coloring matters? You are investigating now as to whether there is coloring matter in the food.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the amendment before the committee as to production; but even if there were, it would be connected with the original scope of the investigation. If the gentleman has read the original authorization creating the Bureau of Chemistry, he will see that there is——

Mr. BORLAND. I have it right before me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman has considered it.

Mr. BORLAND. It does not cover the question of the investigation of how coloring matters are made or produced. It covers the question whether they exist in the food.

Mr. STAFFORD. It covers examination of specimens to ascertain whether they are adulterated or misbranded, and I consider this amendment as carrying out the law creating the Bureau of Chemistry.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment proposed by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] provides for the employment of chemists and other scientific assistants for investigation and experiment in the utilization of coloring materials. It occurs to the Chair that the Bureau of Chemistry has that authority now. The Chair does not think that the amendment changes existing law, and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. How much is the appropriation carried in the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty thousand dollars. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to carry in effect the provisions of the act of June 30, 1906, entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated, or misbranded, or poisonous, or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," in the city of Washington and elsewhere, including chemical apparatus, chemicals and supplies, repairs to apparatus, gas, electric current, official traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone service, express and freight charges, and all other expenses, employing such assistants, clerks, and other persons as may be considered necessary for the purposes named, and rent outside of the District of Columbia; and to cooperate with associations and scientific societies in the revision of the United States Pharmacopœia and development of methods of analysis, $632,951.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does this appropriation cover investigations made under the Harrison Antinarcotic Act?

Mr. MANN. It does not cover the Harrison law.

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this is the appropriation for the enforcement of the pure food and drugs act. I do not think it has anything to do with the Harrison Act, as I understand it.

Mr. BORLAND. The antinarcotic act is enforced by the Department of Justice.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on dyestuffs.

Mr. HICKS. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on oyster culture.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the two requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigating the grading, weighing, and handling of naval stores, the preparation of definite type samples thereof, and for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores, in cooperation with individuals and companies, including the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee why this provision for demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores is put in this particular place?

Mr. LEVER. It was carried in last year's bill under miscellaneous items. The Bureau of Chemistry has been doing the work, and we thought we had better bring it back into the bureau itself.

Mr. BORLAND. Is this done for the public vessels of the United States or for all the naval stores? I understand naval stores is the general term that applies to the merchant marine——

Mr. LEVER. Yes; it applies to turpentine and rosin for the entire country.

Mr. BORLAND. For private parties as well.

Mr. LEVER. The bureau establishes a standard and these standards are available to the country just as much as to the Navy Department.

Mr. BORLAND. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the paragraph just read will remain in the bill. It is as follows:

For investigating the grading, weighing, and handling of naval stores, the preparation of definite type samples thereof, and for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores, in cooperation with individuals and companies, including the employment of necessary persons and means in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $10,000.

This is good legislation and will benefit an industry representing investments of over $100,000,000 and which produces over $40,000,000 worth of products annually. The purpose of the appropriation is set out in the reports on this bill, on pages 864 and 865.

It is conservatively estimated that through improved methods of manufacturing rosin and spirits of turpentine a waste of over $4,000,000 annually can be saved. It is indeed worth saving, and will mean much to the operators and to the industry as well as to the consumers of these products.

The Secretary of Agriculture has very ably set out the need and purpose of this appropriation in a letter addressed to me, which I insert in the RECORD at this point and which is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, April 13, 1916.

Hon. CHARLES G. EDWARDS,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. EDWARDS: In compliance with your telephone request of April 11, the following statement is made concerning the work of the Department of Agriculture on the weighing, grading, and handling of naval stores:

Definite provision was made in the appropriation act of 1915, through amendment in the Senate, for the continuance of the work on naval stores which had been conducted for several years under the general appropriation to the Bureau of Chemistry for agricultural investigations. In the estimates for the fiscal year 1917 the department recommended that $5,000 be appropriated for continuing the work during 1917. It is estimated that about $3,000 of this sum will be returned to the Treasury through the sale of the glass-type samples.

An additional $5,000 is provided in the appropriation bill, as reported to the House, for the demonstration of improved methods or processes of preparing naval stores. If this sum is made available, it will be used to demonstrate methods of making higher grades of rosin; for saving material having a value of approximately $4,000,000 yearly, which is now being wasted at the stills; for demonstrating better methods of handling at the still and more efficient and economical conduct of the business.

This work will not only benefit the naval-stores industry, with its capitalization of $100,000,000 and an annual production valued at $40,000,000, but will also benefit directly the enormous industries of paint, varnish, soap, paper, textile, and ink making.

The work on naval stores has already yielded results of direct benefit both to the producers in the South and to the users of turpentine and rosin, the paint and varnish makers, soap makers, size and rosin-oil makers, and to all who use these products, by providing definite glass types which serve as the standards for the grading of rosin. The result is that there is closer agreement between sets of these rosin types, which are used in grading every barrel of rosin, than there has ever been before.

The opinion of the naval-stores industry, producers, and users on the glass types is indicated by a statement recently made by the supervising inspector of Georgia and concurred in by the supervising inspector of Florida—

"That there is no question about it, but that the adoption of the standard types, which went into effect the 14th of June, was the best step toward progression in this business that we have ever taken"— and by the statement of the naval-stores committee of the Oil, Paint, and Varnish Association that—

"It is our opinion that the efforts of the Government along these lines (the preparation of definite glass types, standardization of grades of rosin and turpentine, etc.) will inure to the benefit of both the buyer and seller."

It is desired during the coming fiscal year to prepare a sufficient number of sets of the glass types, that they may be used exclusively in grading rosin, replacing the types of rosin now used which do not hold their color, thus leading to inaccurate grading, and are easily broken and become useless. Many requests, which the department can not yet meet, are being received from producers and users alike for the permanent glass types. These will be supplied next year at the cost of production if the funds are available for the purpose.

Not a single objection to the glass types as permanent standards for rosin nor to the department's preparation of and responsibility for them has come to the department's attention from either producers or users of rosin. These types, which are made to duplicate as closely as possible the average of the rosin types employed for years in grading rosin, were heartily indorsed by a representative gathering of producers, factors, dealers, exporters, and users at a meeting held in Washington in March, 1914, and have since been formally adopted by the boards of trade, chambers of commerce of the producing sections, as well as by the New York Produce Exchange. Their use promotes fair and confident dealing in rosin.

Producers and users of naval stores have long held that rosin is often seriously misgraded, and that turpentine is adulterated with mineral oils. The work of this department confirms these statements, and is continuing to develop the underlying causes. Help from the department through permanent glass types, instructions in improved methods of grading, and the use of better apparatus in grading will greatly reduce unintentional errors, but will, of course, not decrease fraudulent practices.

By the beginning of the next fiscal year the department will have its information on this subject in available form and will be ready to demonstrate to inspectors and the trade generally more accurate and reliable methods of grading rosin.

In addition to the cordial support of the naval-stores industry as developed at the naval-stores conference in March, 1914, the National Oil, Paint, and Varnish Association, annual meeting, October, 1914, passed the following resolution:

"That the secretary of the association be instructed to write to the Department of Agriculture approving the investigation now being made by the department and expressing the hope that the time will come when rosin can be bought on a net-weight basis."

Very truly, yours,

D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total for Bureau of Chemistry, $1,153,801.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 47, after line 21, insert as a new paragraph the following:

"To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to cooperate with and make an exhibit at the next annual meeting of the National Dairy Show Association to be held at Springfield, Mass., during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, illustrative of the boys and girls' club work and other features of the cooperative agricultural extension work carried on in the North Atlantic States, including labor and all expenses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, $15,000."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that this is subject to the point of order which the gentleman has made because last year a similar point of order was made on an amendment in relation to the dry-farming congress, and the point of order was sustained. I can see that this is subject to the same point of order, but I hope possibly the conditions here are so meritorious that the gentleman from South Carolina may be persuaded to relent and withdraw his point of order.

I appreciate the evil of the Nation appropriating to local projects. But this is not a project where the people themselves have not dug deep down into their pockets before they appealed to the Nation for assistance. There has been organized in Springfield an agricultural and industrial exposition, and the national dairy show, which for years has exhibited in the West, is to come to Springfield this year. Springfield is a city of only 100,000 people, and yet it has only been a month or two since they raised $535,000 right in the city for this exposition, and the remaining $200,000 is to be raised in the Eastern States. This exhibition is for the six New England States and the four Middle States—New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If we should make this appropriation of $15,000, has the gentleman from Massachusetts, now the ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, and likely to be chairman of the committee in the next Congress [applause on the Republican side], made any estimate of how much this would incidentally cost the Government—how many millions of dollars?

Mr. GILLETT. No; Mr. Chairman, I have not entered into that very large and speculative field. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman made any estimate of how many times it would be thrown up at him?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; I have thought of that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman think this would have a tendency to enforce the civil-service laws?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think it would have any effect on those. I think they would still keep their pristine vigor.

But there is this argument in answer to what the gentleman from Illinois has said: My section is discriminated against in present appropriations of this kind. If we were in the same condition as is the South under present appropriations we would not need the $15,000, for I believe there is $600,000 appropriated for the 13 Southern States where there is only $500,000 appropriated for the other 35 States. In the Southern States the work is going on with the present appropriation, but we have not an appropriation in our locality, and therefore it seems that to a certain extent that answers the objection of the gentleman, and shows that we are only trying to equalize in a very small measure the disparity of the appropriations at present.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Are these the same 10 States from whence comes the 50 immortals of the American Academy of Letters and Arts?

Mr. GILLETT. No; they are not. Mr. Chairman, when I was diverted by the irrelevant question of my friend from Nebraska I was stating that the boys' and girls' clubs for home and agricultural work are engaged in a development of very great usefulness in all sections of the country. This appropriation is exclusively to further their exhibit at this great exposition of the national dairy show.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

[By unanimous consent Mr. GILLETT's time was extended five minutes.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this money is to be appropriated exclusively to the exhibits of the boys and girls' clubs. This exposition is going to put up a building to cost from $35,000 to $50,000 for the exclusive purpose of these exhibits. The $15,000 the Secretary of Agriculture says will be used exclusively by the department in going through these 10 States, sending out leaders and stimulating the interest of boys and girls' clubs to have special exhibit there, in order to weed out and select the best exhibits for the national exhibition. So the value is not simply the exhibition, but the chief value is the stimulant that it is going to have upon these clubs, that already are doing so much good.

The county of Hampden, in which the city of Springfield is located, you in the West would not consider an agricultural region at all, but purely industrial; and yet in the last few years there has been formed there the Hampden County League, whose purpose is just in line with this appropriation, to stimulate the interest in agriculture. The business men have contributed to it, not out of philanthropy but because they appreciate that building up the surrounding region will help their industrial life. There was raised the first year about $10,000 by private subscription, which was used to instruct and help the farmers and lead them into the new methods of production. Through its organized efforts it has induced farmers to introduce modern and improved methods in their orchards, their soil, and their stock. The next year they nearly doubled that amount, and then we had an act passed in the legislature allowing the county to tax itself $10,000 a year, and that has been done regularly and cheerfully, so that now we are raising about $25,000 a year by taxation and subscription, about half and half from each, to develop the agriculture which I suppose you from the West would think was very petty and impossible in our barren fields. We are raising stock and produce dairy products, and the boys and girls are developing a very great interest in this new life. The national dairy show which is to be held there this fall is going to appropriate $3,000 in prizes for these boys' and girls' exhibits. It is for that purpose that I have offered this amendment. I had some suspicion that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] might raise the point of order, and perhaps that mitigates the danger which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] thinks I am encountering in offering the amendment; but it is possible that the gentleman will appreciate——

Mr. MANN. Oh, I want the gentleman to understand that I hope the point of order will not be made and that the appropriation will be made.

Mr. GILLETT. I thank the gentleman. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will be of the same mind and withdraw his point of order. I am sure everyone admits the importance of the purpose aimed at; and considering the relatively insignificant appropriation of national funds which our section receives for these purposes compared with what you get in the South and the large amounts which our local enterprise is raising and spending, I submit whether this is not a case where this small appropriation might wisely be granted.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly much that I am constrained under the circumstances to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For chemical investigations of soil types, soil composition and soil minerals, the soil solution, solubility of soil and all chemical properties of soils in their relation to soil formation, soil texture, and soil productivity, including all routine chemical work in connection with the soil survey, $20,610.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the item now under consideration is the most important item in the bill; that is, the preservation of the soil of this Republic. This matter was discussed fully in 1849, and so far as I have been able to discover it was at that time that the first report was made to Congress in reference to the condition of agriculture in the United States, and that may be considered the beginning of the Department of Agriculture. That report is a most illuminating one. It will be most interesting to any Member of Congress who will take the time to investigate it. The vast amount of learning and talent displayed by those gentlemen in that early day is most remarkable, especially their scientific knowledge of the soil and soil improvement, what and how much it means to this Republic, what it means to the business of the country, and what it means to the city and to the future of the human race. The report is not only a scientific one, but is most beautifully prepared, and prepared in the most beautiful language. This report to which I refer was made by one Mr. Daniel Lee to Mr. Thomas Ewbanks, who was the Commissioner of Patents at that time, and the Department of Agriculture had its birth in the Patent Office and from this report. I shall not weary the committee by endeavoring to read or to put into the RECORD all of this report. It is entirely too long. But the reasons why our Government should foster and encourage agriculture are most convincing. Some of these I want to call to your attention. Before doing this, however, I want to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture for his zeal, his earnestness, and his ability in the management of this great bill. The country is extremely fortunate in having the service of such a man to guard the interest of agriculture. If the Department of Agriculture can be successful in carrying into effect the provisions of this bill and can secure the results that should flow from the expenditure of the money carried in the bill, it will do the country more good than the money expended through any other bill passed by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Lee in the report pleads for agricultural education, and states that the greatest tax the farmer pays is a lack of proper knowledge of the great science of agriculture, and it is a great science. He refers also to the fact that the great Government of the United States was in the habit back in those days of expending vast sums of money in the development of transportation in the country and great sums of money in the development of all other lines of industry, and that the Halls of Congress were filled with great debates on the industries of the country and the development of manufacture, but that little was said and nothing done by Congress for agriculture, the basis and foundation of all these things, and the basis of all civilization. In speaking of the development of the rural life he calls attention to the fact that where rural life was developed, where they had proper schools, where the soil was properly cultivated there was thereby developed a strength and a virility which will be stronger and better in its effect upon the preservation of the Republic than any other activity, and that if the Federal Government was to be enduring it should devote some of its activities to the development of the farms as well as the development of factories. He calls attention to the fact that if a pirate on the high seas shall destroy a few hundred dollars' worth of property the United States Government instantly expends millions of dollars in order to put down the insects of the sea, but that millions—yea, untold millions—might be destroyed by the insects in the field and forest—and he enumerates the very insects many of which we are battling with to-day—and Congress did nothing about it; and he urged upon Congress the necessity of performing that duty, as it was one of those duties which a single State could not perform. One State might eliminate one insect, and the very next year the invasion would come from the other side.

Therefore it was a proper activity for the Federal Government. In discussing the results that would follow from it he uses this sentence:

The continued fruitfulness of the earth is an interest far greater and more enduring than any form of government.

And that is true, because it is by the fruitfulness of the soil that all human beings must exist. He called attention to the fact that in many instances the people most interested in the development of agriculture were the people who would laugh at and make fun of any man who advocated the Federal Government having anything to do with agriculture, and he also refers to the fact that we should be thankful that the time is at last reached in the development of the Government where they no longer laugh when this subject is discussed, and he hopes the time will soon come when Congress will be so impressed by it that it will act. He says that these men from the cities, who are prone to laugh at Congress taking steps to aid agriculture, will be the first people to suffer in a dearth of food, because the farmer only sells his surplus to the cities. He says:

A great principle is involved in the science of agriculture, which reaches through indefinite generations, and forms the basis of all possible improvements and of the highest hopes of our race. All advancement is impracticable in a country that closely approximates the condition of a desert.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. FESS. Did I understand the gentleman to say the report was made in 1849?

Mr. SISSON. It was prepared in 1849 and actually submitted in 1850.

Mr. FESS. And in 1849 also the Department of the Interior was created, and I was wondering whether it included the Department of Agriculture later, and I was wondering whether this report led to the creation.

Mr. SISSON. I have not had an opportunity to investigate that matter. That is a matter of history that I would like to inform myself about, and will as soon as I have the leisure. Now, in reference to the development of rural life, Mr. Lee says, in this report to Mr. Ewbank:

A lack of mental culture and discipline is the most serious impediment to the diffusion of agricultural science among the mass of farmers. Its language is to them an unknown tongue. Hence the most sublime truths in the economy of nature are shut out from the popular understanding. It is feared that this will ever be the case until schools designed to teach those branches of learning which the practical farmer greatly needs, but does not possess, are established and maintained throughout the United States. So long as we refuse to plant the seed, it is folly to expect a rich harvest of knowledge.

I am glad that this eloquent appeal of Mr. Lee has been heard and that the States have made a beginning by establishing agricultural colleges and that the Federal Government has granted some aid. But when we see the many billions that have been spent for pensions and for Army and Navy and other purposes we can but be astonished at the backwardness of Congress in its effort to develop agriculture, which is the very first essential to our national life. O, gentlemen of the House, your Army and Navy will be developed in vain if you do not properly cultivate your fields to feed your Army and Navy.

Since I have been a Member of this House I have at all times and whenever I had an opportunity plead for the farmers of the country. In being their friend and one of their humble champions, I have been the champion of all the people of the cities and towns. If agriculture fails, the mighty brick and mortar of our cities that tower in their beauty, as the lives of busy industry will become charnel houses of idleness and want and misery and death. It is the shoulders of the honest, industrious, and patient farmer that uphold all this vast structure. Without him the music of busy factories would be hushed; the great ships that fleck the ocean by the thousands would be rotting at the wharves, and the scream of the locomotive would be heard no more in the land.

So I take occasion now, as I have done repeatedly before on this floor, to appeal to you to do all in your power to encourage and advance the productiveness of our farms. Let this Congress not adjourn until we have passed a good rural-credits bill that will give the farmer money at a low rate of interest and for long time, so as to lighten his burden and care and encourage him in soil improvement and better cultivation of his crops, thus increasing his return from every acre of land. This will enable him to educate and train his boys and girls, improve his home and farm, to build better roads, and to make happy and joyous country life. The desire of our boys and girls to leave the farm will cease, and soon the Republic will be upon a foundation that can not be shaken.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to return to this report. I want to call your attention to his discussion of soil improvement. In discussing soil improvement he analyzes what is lost to the people at large of the amount of matter essential to plant life which is and will be taken out of every acre of land by every crop unless you can by diversifying the crops improve the soil; and he says that in 100 years, unless there is a change in the methods of agriculture in the United States, you would make all the tillable land in America absolutely a desert and plant life would disappear. He also refers to the history of the deserts in Asia, which were once fertile fields and covered with forests and abounding in fertility, but now worthless to man, caused by neglect and ignorance in taking from the soil year by year its substance and returning nothing to it. If the Federal Government fails in its duty to the farmer, we may see the same condition here. He urges that Congress perform this duty to the people of the Republic. Let me insist that we take this advice to-day and urge upon our great Agricultural Department the prime importance of the preservation of our soil, which is not ours but is ours in trust for future generations. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

Mr. FESS. I am interested to know whether Mr. Lee at that early time suggested the possibility of increasing the fertility of the soil instead of wearing it out?

Mr. SISSON. He does, and the report is a voluminous one. In other words, every acre of land which has been under cultivation one year ought to be the cheapest acre, and land that has been cultivated two years ought to be better than it was the preceding year; and when land has been under cultivation, as it is in some portions of Indiana and Illinois, where they have applied some scientific agriculture and some diversified farming, the land not only has increased in value, not only on account of the increased demand for the land, but it has increased in value by virtue of its productiveness.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi is making a very interesting and instructive speech, and I ask that he be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee fixed the time for closing debate on this paragraph.

Mr. LEVER. How much more time does the gentleman need?

Mr. SISSON. I would like the gentleman to give me 10 minutes if it be possible.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman ought to be allowed to proceed until he concludes.

Mr. SISSON. I would not wish to ask that, but I do wish to call attention to some other matters.

Mr. LEVER. I will yield the gentleman the balance of my time, which is five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to have 10 minutes, and I will conclude within that 10 minutes whether I have said all I desire or not.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Alabama ask for 10 minutes?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I asked that the gentleman have five minutes, but I would ask that he have 10 if he desires.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to have 10 minutes, and then I shall conclude my remarks whether I get all that I wish in the RECORD or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. HICKS. And that is, does the gentleman realize that in Japan and China land has been for a thousand years under cultivation and to-day it is worth more than it was at any other period in its history, and that this is because they continually improve their soil?

Mr. SISSON. That is true; that is true in France and in Germany. You know as a historical fact the present territory occupied by the German Empire was the poorest portion of Europe, the most unproductive, and yet by the scientific improvement of the soil they have made it the most productive. I pause long enough to say that there has not been a people on earth that has been as ruthless with their treatment of the soil and the natural productiveness that God has placed upon it as have the people of the United States.

Mr. FESS. Referring to Germany, when Germany had but 38,000,000 population, with the same amount of territory, she did not produce what she consumed. To-day, with 65,000,000 on the same territory, she was exporting up to the time of the war.

Mr. SISSON. And the great German Government gave to the German farmer assistance, gave to him information, and gave to him demonstrations, gave to him the knowledge of the chemist, and informed him of great scientific principles which the farmer, busy in his field, does not have the time nor the ability nor the opportunity to study out. [Applause.] And I warn the great cities, not in this immediate generation but the one to come, that unless they turn their attention to and give their mind somewhat to the improvement of the soil in America, they will be the first that will suffer. And as has been stated here by Mr. LEE, it may become too late after your lands have approached almost a desert condition to be able to produce upon the land that which is necessary to give back to the soil what it needs.

Mr. Chairman, our people should give their immediate attention to the great question of soil improvement and postpone to a future day—Congress should insist that the Agricultural Department give its very best and most scientific efforts to this question and render to the American farmer this much-needed information so that he may at once begin this soil building.

I was diverted somewhat from what I intended to say. I referred to it incidentally a moment ago. Now, if we want to always be prepared for war, there is something more important than battleships, something more important than the Army, and that is something to feed and to produce the Army and Navy. And if this country should be girdled by a circle of mighty battleships, as long as we are capable of living within ourselves, as long as we are as well prepared—and we ought to be infinitely better prepared than Germany in reference to foodstuffs—it is necessary that this Government shall look to it that there is everything needed to make the wheels of our factories run, to make the locomotive engines run, to feed, and clothe, and house our people; and when we have that we have taken the first, the greatest, and the most permanent steps toward preparedness. Guns, cannon, ships, all amount to nothing unless you have food. [Applause.] Why, everybody who has studied the history of the Civil War knows that it was the lack of food that first caused the Confederate Government to weaken and was the final cause of its downfall. I say without hesitation that if we had bent our energies as much and had said as much about the great agricultural interests of the country—and by that I do not mean the farmers' interests alone, but I mean it in no mere occupational sense, but in the broadest sense of the word—if we had given the time and attention and spent one-tenth of the money in giving the people information as we have on Army, Navy, and pensions, our hills and valleys would be teeming with a fertility little dreamed of. [Applause.] And it is the duty of every patriotic citizen, as long as the expenditure of a dollar is for the purpose of dispensing information in reference to the great secrets of agriculture, locked up, as all secrets of science are, and require patience and toil to find, to spend the dollar to find the truth.

I know of no better way of closing these remarks than to read a quotation from this marvelous report. Speaking of what we have wasted, speaking of what is wasted in the cities, of the products that go in trainloads to them, and that which has been called refuse there, but which Cleveland, Ohio, is beginning to take care of, that which this Government ought to take care of here in the city of Washington as a demonstration to all the other cities of what might be accomplished by it, Mr. Lee says:

> There has been enough of the elements of bread and meat, wool and cotton, drawn from the surface of the earth, sent to London, and buried in the ground or washed into the Thames, to feed and clothe the entire population of the world for a century, under a wise system of agriculture and horticulture. Down to this day great cities have ever been the worst desolators of the earth. It is for this that they have been so frequently buried many feet beneath the rubbish of their idols of brick, stone, and mortar, to be exhumed in after ages by some antiquarian Layard. Their inhabitants violated the laws of nature which govern the health of man and secure the enduring productiveness of the soil.

Skipping the balance of what he says about it, that if the cities would scientifically take care of that refuse—we call it garbage—and would take out of the garbage of the great cities those elements of cotton destroyed and food destroyed, and would gather it up in the cities so that it could be returned to the land from which it had been taken. It would mean in course of time billions of dollars. Do not you think there is enough wasted? In concluding the introduction to his report, he says this:

> Both pestilence and famine are the offsprings of ignorance. Rural science is not a mere plaything for the amusement of grown-up children. It is a new revelation of the wisdom and goodness of Providence—a humanizing power, which is destined to elevate man an immeasurable distance above his present condition.

That is why it was, in the appropriation bill which provided a small sum for the purpose of endeavoring to discover the causes of the prevalent diseases of the country, that I advocated, worked for in the House—but a point of order was made upon it—and finally secured in the Senate a small appropriation for the purpose of investigating rural sanitation. I think it is worth at least a billion dollars annually to the people of the United States to stamp out typhoid fever, the hookworm, pellagra, and consumption. [Applause.] The physicians now have determined what these germs are and now know how to prevent these diseases. When you come in contact with them you are liable to become infected with disease, and when you eradicate the germ and make it impossible for the human system to come into contact with it those four diseases can be absolutely destroyed. Dr. Blue told me that they could be literally stamped out of existence.

I say to you there is absolutely nothing more worthy of the attention of the American Congress than the subject of rural sanitation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I want to read three sentences by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will proceed for one minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. I read:

> To achieve this result, the light of science must not be confined to colleges; it must enter and illuminate the dwelling of every farmer and mechanic. The knowledge of the few, no matter how profound or how brilliant, can never compensate for the loss incurred by neglecting to develop the intellects of the many. No government should be wanting in sympathy with the people, whether the object be the prevention of disease, the improvement of land, or the education of the masses. One per cent of the money now annually lost by reason of popular ignorance will suffice to remove that ignorance.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For exploration and investigation within the United States to determine possible sources of supply of potash, nitrates, and other natural fertilizers, $35,000.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time the gentleman desires?

Mr. SINNOTT. Five or 8 or 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto shall conclude in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall conclude in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to approve the remarks made by the chairman of the committee a few moments ago, that a great Nation like ours should not buy from foreign countries what we can produce and manufacture in this country, and I particularly desire to refer in that connection to the subject of mixed fertilizers for the soil, to potash, phosphate, and to nitrates used also in the manufacture of munitions.

I desire to call the attention of the House and of this committee to an elaborate presentation of tentative plans and estimates of water-power projects in the Columbia River Basin made by John H. Lewis, State engineer of Oregon, in conjunction with L. F. Harza, Garfield Stubblefield, and E. J. McCaustland. This report I hold in my hand. It is Bulletin No. 5, office of State engineer. It shows the enormous water-power possibilities of the State of Oregon with tentative plans for developing 2,000,000 horsepower in Oregon and in the Columbia River Basin.

Mr. Lewis in his report states that in 1913, when conditions were normal, about $125,280,000 worth of commercial fertilizers were used in the United States. Of this amount the farmers paid $48,330,000 for nitrogenous substances, $56,000,000 for phosphates, and $20,000,000 for potash salts. Potash is now eight or twelve times its normal price. He further states in his report that practically all the potash salts were imported from Germany, and the entire quantity of nitrates came from Chile, while some electrically made nitrates of lime came from Norway. He states that the phosphates were obtained largely from Florida and other Southern States.

Then he goes on to speak of the enormous water powers in the Northwest going to waste, which should be used for the purpose of manufacturing these fertilizers and nitrates for munitions, and which especially should be used in the fixation of nitrogen. He shows that the essential condition for the establishment of such industries are cheap water power, necessary raw resources, and convenient rail and water transportation to the markets of the world.

Now, we in Oregon and in the Northwest think that we have all these essentials for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizers and nitrates for munitions of war. I want briefly to call to the attention of the committee some of the enormous water-power possibilities that we have upon the Columbia River. The drainage basin of the Columbia River at The Dalles, where I live, is 236,800 square miles. The drainage of the Mississippi River at Quincy, Ill., is 135,000 square miles. The water power of the Columbia River Basin equals that of the 26 States east of the Mississippi River. We in the Columbia River Basin, if the reports of the Geological Survey may be relied upon, have one-third of the total available water power in the United States. We have at this point, the Columbia River at The Dalles, a mean annual flow of 235,000 second-feet of water. The Mississippi River at Keokuk has a mean annual flow of 73,000 second-feet. At Niagara there is a mean annual flow of 222,000 second-feet. At the mouth of the Mississipi River there is a mean annual flow of 664,000 second-feet. So we have at The Dalles of the Columbia one-third of the mean annual flow they have at the mouth of the Mississippi. This record has been computed over a period of 33 years, and in that period of 33 years our lowest water during the winter months was 50,000 second-feet, in comparison with 20,000 second-feet at Keokuk, where the great Keokuk Dam is located.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Now, the maximum flow at Keokuk is 200,000 second-feet. At The Dalles on the Columbia it is 1,390,000 second-feet. In 500 miles on the Columbia River you reach an elevation of 680 feet. It takes 2,000 miles on the Mississippi to reach that same elevation.

Now, this enormous flowage of the Columbia River, draining an area of 237,000 square miles, almost double that of the Mississippi at Quincy—this enormous volume of water, coming down that watershed, contracts at The Dalles of the Columbia River, where the river is 1,600 feet wide, contracts at the narrows to a width of 150 feet, between solid basalt walls. Here we can get a low-water head of 105 feet for the entire flow of the Columbia River.

We can develop at this point for eight months out of the year 800,000 horsepower, and for the entire year a continuous production of 480,000 horsepower. This can be done at a cost of $50,000,000. The Dalles is 190 miles from the Pacific Ocean and the river is navigable the entire distance.

At the cascades of the Columbia River, 40 miles below this point at The Dalles, we can produce a continuous 200,000 horsepower during the entire year, and for eight months of the year 420,000 horsepower, at a cost of $20,000,000. We have near at hand the phosphates in Idaho and Montana. We have the lime in Oregon and Washington. We have the kelp on the Oregon and Washington coast.

For the benefit of the committee I would like to show you these pictures which I hold in my hand of narrows of the Columbia River near The Dalles. Right above this narrow gap in the river which I am pointing to it is 1,600 feet wide. It narrows down to 150 feet between these solid walls. The State engineer of Oregon and other competent engineers who have investigated this project say that this is one of the greatest water-power projects in the world. We can produce at this point twice the horsepower now developed at Niagara for a cost of $50,000,000.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman tell us whether this power site is in private ownership or whether it is on public land?

Mr. SINNOTT. The water at this power site has been withdrawn from appropriation by the State, and the State of Oregon owns the shore line between high and low water mark.

Mr. BORLAND. It is not in the ownership of the United States, however?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; it is not in the ownership of the United States, but the river is a navigable one, and the State will gladly surrender its rights for the purpose of developing this power.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not want to depreciate the water power that the gentleman has been talking about, but I want the gentleman to realize that water power is not essential to the production of nitrogen out of the air. The gentleman advocated it on that ground.

Mr. SINNOTT. I understand that; but this is the plan approved by all engineers. The nitrates which we get from Norway are produced by water power.

Some of the other projects discussed in this Bulletin No. 5 are—

	Minimum horsepower.
Deschutes River	504,000
Metolius River	98,000
Umatilla Rapids	120,000
Snake River projects:
Palouse Rapids	50,000
Asotin	54,000
Coon Hollow	200,000
Cherry Creek	200,000
Mountain Sheep	120,000
Salmon River	200,000
Addition to Mountain Sheep	80,000
Rogue River projects	25,000
Klamath River	70,000

This bulletin, which I will furnish to anyone interested in these projects or which anyone may secure by writing to John H. Lewis, State engineer, Salem, Oreg., gives tentative plans and estimates of costs for the various projects aggregating 2,401,000 continuous horsepower.

In addition to the employment of this enormous water power for manufacturing purposes of all kinds, it could also be used for irrigation purposes in the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho. In my district alone, the second Oregon district, the Reclamation Service has gathered data showing potential irrigation projects covering 1,028,000 acres.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment as a new paragraph, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, after line 11, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, including the purchase or rent of lands and buildings and the erection of buildings and other structures necessary therefor, $150,000.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment which, a few days ago, I gave notice that I would offer as a committee amendment at this time. This provides the appropriation and the necessary authority for investigating the best method of producing potash in this country on a commercial scale. It has already been determined by the Bureau of Soils of the Department of Agriculture that there are several sources of potash in this country, and that there is enough potash in this county, if made available, to supply the demand indefinitely.

In the first place we have an almost unlimited quantity of potash along the Atlantic seaboard, from Maine to the upper boundary line of Florida, in deposits of feldspar. It has been found, however, by the experts that thus far it has not been practicable to extract potash from feldspar cheaply enough to make it a commercial proposition for fertilizer purposes.

Then, we have discovered recently in Utah large deposits of potash in the alunite of that country, and one or two private concerns there are now manufacturing potash profitably under the abnormal price conditions existing at the present time. It is entirely possible that some process may be developed in the course of time, under thorough investigation, for extracting potash from feldspar cheaply enough to make it a commercial proposition for fertilizer. I do not know. That line of work is being pursued under the item which has just been read. Thus far no process has been found to extract potash from feldspar upon a basis cheap enough to make it available for agricultural purposes. I understand that some large cement companies are making, or probably have installed, machinery for the purpose of extracting potash from feldspar as a by-product to their cement plants; but my information is that the machinery is exceedingly expensive, costing something like $50,000 or $75,000, and that thus far, under normal conditions, it can not be produced cheaply enough to make it a commercial proposition.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield, if he is through with his preliminary statement?

Mr. LEVER. Let me finish my preliminary statement. Just what may come of the alunite situation in Utah, and other Western States probably, I am not able to say. I feel this way about it, however, at this time, that on account of the long haul from that country across to the Atlantic seaboard, where 60 per cent of all the fertilizer of the country is used, the expense of the haul will probably preclude that as a commercial proposition from a fertilizer point of view. There are now, as I understand it, one or two companies manufacturing potash on a profitable basis under the existing abnormal price conditions.

That brings up for consideration, in my judgment, the only other immediate source of potash supply namely, the giant kelp or seaweed of the Pacific coast. Our information is that we have an unlimited quantity of potash in that seaweed. They grow 60 or 90 feet tall, hook themselves onto rocks at the bottom of the sea. They may be cut 6 or 10 feet beneath the water, and in three or six months time they have reproduced themselves so that it seems to be an inexhaustible supply of potash.

Now the statement is made to the committee that each wet ton of seaweed contains 85 per cent of water, the balance of it would consist of the dry kelp, and this dried kelp consist of 16 to 25 per cent of potash. There seems to be an unlimited quantity of this very necessary ingredient to a complete fertilizer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

[By unanimous consent the time of Mr. LEVER was extended five minutes.]

Mr. LEVER. Dr. Cameron, formerly with the Bureau of Soils, but now not with it, whom I regard as one of the greatest chemists along these particular lines, in his statement before the committee two years ago estimated that it was entirely possible to manufacture potash from kelp on the Pacific coast, take it around to the Atlantic seaboard by way of the Panama Canal, land it at Charleston, S. C., in competition with the potash from the Strassburg mines in Germany. In fact, he said—I think his estimate was a little too rosy—we could do that on a basis of $6 a ton cheaper than we could get our potash in Germany.

The gentlemen who have lately been before the committee—Dr. Whitney and Dr. Turrentine—have not been so optimistic as to the saving, but they both agree that there is no question but that there is a strong possibility of our being able to develop a considerable potash industry; and to do it on a scale that would compete with the German potash, and upon a scale sufficient to make this country absolutely independent of that ingredient of the commercial fertilizer.

The purpose of this amendment is to enable the Government to install a plant on the Pacific coast with sufficient capacity to handle 500 tons of wet kelp a day, and with such a plant the department believes that it can develop and decide whether or not there is a possibility of manufacturing this potash out of kelp upon a commercial scale. I say frankly that we may find that we can not do it, and that we shall apparently throw away $175,000; but, to my way of thinking, the proposition is so enormously big that I think that we can well afford to make the investigation even though we get nothing but negative results.

I would call the committee's attention to this fact: German kainit, which is used largely in the South as a fertilizer, contains nitrogen and phosphoric acid which ordinarily sells for $4.50 a ton, and sells to the farmers for $12 a ton, in December was selling at $40 a ton—and that is a product containing only 12 per cent of potash. It is a low-grade potash which we are using in cotton farming.

Now, then, the better grade of potash, the sulphate of potash, which ordinarily sells for $60 a ton, is now selling anywhere from $450 to $600 a ton. The fact is that you can not get it at any price. I notice in some fertilizer advertisements in my paper that they advertise fertilizer 8:4:0, which means 8 per cent of phosphoric acid, 4 per cent of nitrogen, and no potash.

In all the sand-hill belt of the South it is almost impossible to grow cotton profitably without potash, and it is almost impossible to grow truck and potatoes along the entire belt northward to Maine and including Maine without the use of potash. This proposed amendment is to undertake to see if we can develop the potash industry.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that potash is an essential to raising green vegetables?

Mr. LEVER. I understand that it is necessary in truck and potato growing.

Mr. MANN. Potash is essential in seed making; that is the necessity for potash.

[The time of Mr. LEVER having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois is entirely right as to potash. As we understand it, it is the fruiting ingredient in the fertilizer.

Mr. MANN. The green plant does not have much potash in it. What is it proposed to do with this appropriation if it goes through?

Mr. LEVER. I can give the gentleman the complete statement. For instance, it is proposed to use $15,000 for the land and building. It is proposed to use $5,000 for the building of a wharf. It is proposed to use $500 for a harvester—a mowing machine. Ten thousand dollars is to be used for the purchase of two barges, $3,000 for the erection of conveyances for the wet kelp, $6,000 for a motor transmission, $4,000 for evaporating tanks, $5,000 for three boilers, and $6,500 for freight. These various items of machinery are based on the prices at the place of manufacture, and the freight will have to be included to San Diego where there is already a plant.

Mr. MANN. What has become of the plant at San Diego?

Mr. LEVER. It is manufacturing potash.

Mr. MANN. Successfully?

Mr. LEVER. The statement before the committee was by Dr. Turrentine that it was almost impossible to say from the figures they were able to get from private sources what that cost of manufacture was.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the private concerns know.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If they have a plant out there operating now, would not the people who own it know whether they are making a profit? What is the necessity of our putting up an experimental plant?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly; and I am glad the gentleman asked me that question. The statement before the committee was, and I have no doubt that it is true, that these men who are running these private plants, and there are two or three or four of them—I can recall two—are doing it upon a basis of the prevailing price of potash. In other words, they are selling a product that ordinary sells at from $40 to $50 a ton for from $450 to $500 a ton, and they are paying very little attention to the cheapness of their process, and therefore the department by study of their process could not very well get anything like accurate data upon which to base a conclusion for the manufacture of potash under normal conditions.

Mr. MANN. The department may not get the information, but the men who manufacture the potash have the information, and if they have a soft thing and can make a lot of money out of this all they need to do is to show it to somebody, for there is plenty of money in the country—the banks do not know what to do with the money they have—and why should the Government have to put up an experimental plant to teach the men who are running plants whether they are running them profitably or not.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, my response to the gentleman on that proposition is this: One official of the department, Dr. Whitney, as I recollect, says that they were absolutely unable to get cost figures from private manufacturers at this time.

Mr. MANN. What do they need the cost figures for? It is the men who are in the business who need the cost figures.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true.

Mr. MANN. And they have their cost figures. They know whether it will be profitable to invest additional money in the business better than they will ever find out from an agricultural experiment station.

Mr. LEVER. As we understand it—and I am not sure that this is in the hearings—I have an impression, and I am satisfied I get it correctly, that it is the belief of the department that as soon as normal conditions are restored in this country these concerns that are now manufacturing at a profit under these abnormal conditions are going to close up their establishments.

Mr. MANN. In other words, the department after it has advertised all over the world and throughout the United States that it would be commercially profitable to produce potash from kelp now say that they have not discovered any method yet by which it will be profitable under normal conditions?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that his time be extended for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. The department make the statement that their figures are necessarily rough estimates, because they have absolutely nothing upon which they can base anything like an accurate estimate as to whether or not you can manufacture potash from this kelp on a commercial scale. It is true, as the gentleman has said, that a few years ago when they discovered this potash business a great many statements were published—I do not know whether they were inspired by the department or not—to the effect that we had a gold mine in potash in that country, and I believe we have.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman can put his money into it.

Mr. LEVER. I have none; I wish I had.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; put your money on it.

Mr. LEVER. I believe we have a good proposition, and if not, I would like to know it. I would like to know whether we have a good proposition or no proposition so that the country will not be dreaming about something that is never going to happen.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman tell us anything about this work with alunite? There is a plant out there using alunite, is there not?

Mr. LEVER. They have a plant out there, and as to just what progress they are making, the committee does not have information, except that they are manufacturing something.

Mr. MANN. Has the committee made any effort to get any information about it?

Mr. LEVER. No; the gentlemen who appeared before the committee did not seem to have much information about that plant.

Mr. MANN. I read in the newspapers last summer that the people connected with Armour & Co.—and they have some capital—are engaged in the production of fertilizers and were going to establish or had established a potash-manufacturing establishment to make potash out of alunite. The gentleman said awhile ago that they could not afford to bring that East on account of the freight; but evidently Armour & Co. did not look at it in that way, because they produce fertilizer to sell in the East and South in the main, and that is what they want the potash for.

Mr. LEVER. This is the only statement we have on that proposition:

Mr. HAWLEY. As a matter of fact, two companies are engaged in the manufacture of potassium from this now, I understand?

Mr. WHITNEY. There are two companies. The difficulties have been rather great. The deposits are in rather inaccessible mountainous places. Railway tramways have to be constructed. Six or 8 miles of rough country have to be overcome before this can be done.

It goes on to say there is a great deposit there.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not know whether that is profitable or not?

Mr. LEVER. It is profitable under these abnormal conditions.

Mr. MANN. But nobody has put up a plant to run under abnormal conditions.

Mr. LEVER. But some of these plants have been put up under these abnormal conditions.

Mr. MANN. That may apply to small plants out on the Pacific coast.

Mr. LEVER. I think in these alunite regions and on the Pacific coast they have done it recently.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman any information about it?

Mr. LEVER. I am not sure.

Mr. MANN. My information is directly to the contrary.

Mr. LEVER. My information is that a St. Louis company in the last six months has gone into the business with a capitalization of $100,000 to manufacture potash out of kelp. Just what the capitalization of these companies in the alunites is I do not know.

Mr. MANN. Now, does the gentleman believe with the very high price of potash and with unlimited capital in the country—capital that is seeking investment—that it is better for the Government to go into the manufacture of potash, practically shut out or scare out private capital, or to let private capital go in and compete with it?

Mr. LEVER. I will answer the gentleman's question very frankly. If I thought that private capital would continue in this business—the present private capital—I would be perfectly willing to say, "Let them go into it," and I would be very glad for them to do so; but the information the committee has casts a doubt upon the proposition whether or not these people will continue to do it. I think the members of the committee will bear me out in that statement, and therefore we have felt that we ought to try this out and see if there is anything in it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has referred to an estimate of the cost, I believe, of a harvester, Will he state whether that was for one harvester or several?

Mr. LEVER. One harvester.

Mr. HAUGEN. At $7,500?

Mr. LEVER. One harvester at $7,500. It says:

This amount will be sufficient to construct a simple type of harvester, such as are now in use on the coast.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the committee except to reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I might state the committee made an honest effort to get the information sought. The first witness we had was unable to give the information. Later another young man appeared before us. I do not now recall his name. He estimated the cost of harvesting the wet kelp at 55 cents a ton; drying and grinding it at 38 cents a ton. It requires 6½ tons of wet kelp to make 1 ton of dry kelp; this makes the dry kelp cost $6.05 a ton. Add the freight from coast to coast, which is $6, makes it $12.05 on the other coast. It is estimated that it requires 4 tons of dry kelp to produce 1 ton of potash, which makes the potash cost $24.20, plus freight of $6, a total of $30.20 a ton on the other coast.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. What information has the committee that these private plants which are now in operation will not be able to continue when normal prices obtain?

Mr. HAUGEN. I do not believe they can do so at normal prices. I believe that potash can be produced and sold at a profit at the present abnormal prices, but the department holds out no encouragement for the production of potash from kelp at normal prices.

Mr. STAFFORD. What investigation has the department made on which to predicate that opinion?

Mr. HAUGEN. Merely visiting the plants. They do not claim to have much information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is a mere surmise, as far as that is concerned?

Mr. HAUGEN. The appropriation is based on the ground that it is necessary to investigate further in order to ascertain the facts.

Mr. STAFFORD. And yet private capital has been invested and is going ahead and the plants are not closing down, yet the department wishes for some reason or other to inquire, because private capital has felt warranted in going ahead and investing their money——

Mr. HAUGEN. The private enterprises are operating under present abnormal prices.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many plants have been established, and when was the first put in operation?

Mr. HAUGEN. They have been established within the last year or two. I believe that the evidence before the committee shows that we had two plants. The chairman of the committee states five. The information that we had, as I remember it, was that two plants were in operation. I take it that the chairman has further information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think that five plants established in one year is very fair evidence that private capital can get a fair return even under normal prices?

Mr. HAUGEN. My understanding was that they were under construction; that two have been built recently and are now operating.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whether under construction or in operation, private capital has seen fit to invest its funds, based upon the prospect of getting a return when normal prices will prevail. You can not conclude that private capital is foolhardy in its investments and is just taking a header without any prospect of return.

Mr. HAUGEN. I concede private concerns can ascertain much better than a department can as to the actual cost, but that information is not likely to be available. After all it is a matter of importance, and if there is anything in it, the information is well worth the $175,000 to be expended.

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. HICKS. Perhaps I will ask the question of the chairman, and that is if anything has been done to indicate an endeavor to make potash or make fertilizer out of the ordinary seaweed, not kelp, but seaweed on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts?

Mr. LEVER. The information before the committee was that the seaweed from the Atlantic coast did not contain as high a degree of potash as the Japanese seaweed.

Mr. HICKS. That is what I was going to say, that the Japanese seaweed is entirely different from the Atlantic seaweed.

Mr. LEVER. They are entirely different.

I may say, as a matter of information, they are going to make an effort to see if they can transplant the Pacific seaweeds over here.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am greatly in favor of this amendment, and trust that no point of order will be made against it. Of course, I realize the trouble about it as brought out in the questions of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. If there is a great "gold mine" in this proposition, it will be idle for the Government to spend a good deal of money in experimenting when private capital will do just as well. But I tried to find out something about the extraction of potash from kelp when I was in California this year, and talked it over with a number of men who were interested in a small way, or in the possibilities of it, but none of them could tell what the various costs were. They have not proceeded far enough to know how much it is going to cost to extract potash from kelp. They have not yet gone far enough to know whether they can profitably use the by-products that come from that extraction. But I think that almost any amount of money would be well spent if only in taking the risk of finding out whether this country could not be self-sustaining, so far as its fertilizers are concerned.

The situation is to-day that we, and practically every other country in the world, are dependent entirely on Germany for all of our potash. The only commercial potash that exists, practically, is that which is produced in Germany from a certain ore they have there. And, as in most of these great operations, in Germany the various mines are controlled under one syndicate, of which the Government is the practical head, and they not only dictate the price that we and other nations have to pay, but they limit the output. We are absolutely in their hands.

Now, as a matter of fact, the United States takes about 50 per cent of the entire amount exported by Germany—about 20 per cent, I believe, of the entire amount produced in Germany. And we are in the same situation in this country with regard to potash, substantially, as we are in regard to dyes. We have not gone far enough in either to provide ourselves in time of peace or in time of war with these two absolute necessities of everyday American life. I say, therefore, that it is worth while to take a risk, even if nothing practical will develop out of this investigation, because it will do, if successful, more good to more people in this country than any other proposition almost that this Congress could adopt. [Applause.]

The Government has not yet gone far enough to ascertain the amount of kelp and the commercial availability of extracting potash therefrom. But at least we do know this, America imports from Germany—I have only the figures for 1912 and 1913—in round numbers, about 1,000,000 tons of various potash substances annually, valued at something like fourteen or fifteen million dollars.

Mr. LEVER. That is the import value?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the import value under conditions before the war. And, by the way, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] stated in tons what I have heard in pounds; that is, that potash—80 per cent chlorate of potash, which is commercial potash—normally costs 2 cents a pound and to-day it is hard to procure at 20 cents a pound. It has gone up 1,000 per cent. Now, of this approximately 1,000,000 tons, the average import, about 400,000 tons is 80 per cent chlorate of potash, which is the commercial potash.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. I might state that I stated the price of potash such as is produced from kelp.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is about an 80 per cent solution, as I understand; that is, the commercial potash. So 400,000 tons represents the normal demand in this country for this necessity for fertilizers.

It is estimated by the Government that there is in sight on the coast, beginning at Alaska and running down to Lower California, more than 60,000,000 tons of wet kelp. The potash content of that would amount to about two million and a quarter tons. In other words, there is enough potash in sight on the Pacific coast alone to about six times supply the American demand.

Mr. MANN. In sight or under water?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Under water. It is in sight, because we know how many tons of dry kelp can be produced from it.

Mr. STAFFORD. A supply for how long a period?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Per year and renewable at least annually. I have said that the American demand amounts to about 400,000 tons of potash a year. There is in sight two and a quarter million tons. In other words, nearly six times as much as we normally consume.

Mr. HAWLEY. And reproduced twice a year?

Mr. LONGWORTH. And reproduced from twice to three times a year. The Government estimates that this amount reduced to dry kelp, and reduced from dry kelp to potash and nitrogen, would be worth over $150,000,000 at the old price—the before-the-war price. Now, that is going to waste. We are getting no benefit from it whatever.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. How rapidly does the kelp grow? How soon does it reproduce?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The Government report shows that there are three kinds of the giant kelp, some of it a little better than the rest; but, generally speaking, the whole crop will reproduce itself twice a year if it is properly gathered, if the parent stem is not cut; and sometimes will reproduce itself three or four times a year. Commercially 1 ton of dried kelp contains about 600 pounds of 80 per cent potash salt, formerly worth 2 cents a pound, but to-day worth 20 cents a pound. It contains 2 per cent of nitrogen and one-half of 1 per cent of phosphoric acid, and another element, which I believe is a recent discovery—between 3 and 4 pounds of iodine, worth $2 a pound.

Mr. LEVER. And some nitrogen worth $5 or $6.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I mentioned the percentage of nitrogen. It is possible that this production of iodine, which is a recent discovery, I believe, will be sufficient practically to pay for the main part of the production of potash salts from dried kelp. A factory which could turn out 750 tons a day of wet kelp would produce 122 tons of dried kelp. Therefore it would produce 366 pounds of iodine per day. That is an element that is well worth experimenting on.

Mr. LEVER. That is true. It is only limited by the fact that the market for iodine in this country is very limited.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I think a more profitable by-product will be nitrogen.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Probably that will be the most profitable individual by-product. As the gentleman stated there are four plants now in process of building or in operation, but none of them has gone far enough to be able to make an intelligent estimate as to whether they can succeed under normal conditions.

Now, Japan at the time the European war began had about four plants in operation, they having the same sort of kelp there that we have on the Pacific coast. To-day they have 60 plants in operation. I know nothing in detail about it; but the Japanese Government has probably developed by experimenting, as I hope we will do, a method of profitably making potash out of kelp, because in a year and six months they have increased their plants in number from 4 to 60.

It seems to me that underlying this proposition is what is to me an all-important question, namely, that this country should be prepared at all hazards and at all times and under all circumstances to produce here everything necessary to supply the demand for the necessities used in the daily life of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can reach an agreement as to time. We have been discussing this item at some length. I wonder if the gentleman from Illinois is going to make his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the point of order will be made at the conclusion of the debate. Of course, it is a very interesting debate, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] has advanced some information that was not advanced before, which might sway the gentleman to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I feel certain that the gentleman will not make the point of order after the argument is all developed.

Mr. LEVER. Acting upon that theory——

Mr. MANN. I do not ask the gentleman to act upon that theory. I will make no promises.

Mr. LEVER. I can not get unanimous consent while the point of order is pending.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes.

Mr. LEVER. Then, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand I can have 10 minutes if I want it?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman can have all that is left. Yes; I think the gentleman can have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I understand that out of that time I shall have 10 minutes and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] shall have 10 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] says he wants five minutes. I will make it 35 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama wants how much?

Mr. LEVER. Five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's modified request?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SAUNDERS addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I shall offer no objection whatever to the placing of this item in the bill, but I have no faith that any good result will come from it.

I had the pleasure of going through the great potash mines of Germany in connection with Prof. Houston, of my own State, who represents the German kali works in this country. After this personal experience and observation, I can not escape the conviction that the price at which potash is sold here will always be the price that the German Government wants to charge for it. They have fixed the price in the past—a price which varies in accordance with the competition and with the demand. There is enough potash in Germany, possibly, to supply the world for a thousand years at the present rate of consumption of potash.

And with them it is simply a question of mining and loading. If we were to produce potash for commercial purposes, and were to fix a standard price which would represent a living rate to our producers, Germany could lower the price below our cost price and yet sell at a handsome profit. Unless we can find a vast supply of stored-up potash—some rich deposit of potash—we will remain at a hopeless commercial disadvantage to the German potash mine owner.

The standard price for potash salts, 50 per cent pure, delivered at the wharf at New York was about $26 per ton until the outbreak of the present world war. It will be recalled that a few years ago a German mine owner contracted the output of his mine to the American Chemical Co. at approximately $20 per ton. This was the lowest price ever given an American purchaser of German potash. The price was a remunerative one to the mine owner, and the parties were quite willing to sell their potash for the contract price, but the German Government vetoed the contract and compelled a modification of its terms. So will it be if an American producer of potash were to come into active competition with the German output. If it were known that American potash could be sold at $30 per ton, unless you put an import duty on potash, undoubtedly the German Government would reduce the price and sell it below the price at which we could produce it here.

I would fain believe it were possible that we have plenty of potash and that, as a Nation, we were independent, but when God Almighty has placed at one point on another hemisphere enough potash to supply the whole world for an indefinite period, the prospect of successful competition is not promising. You may go through the German mines and see potash in solid deposits 50 feet in depth, extending over areas as large as whole townships. There is nothing required of the German potash merchant except to blast it loose and bring it to the surface, as cheaply as coal can be mined in this country. It may not be a pleasant prospect to the rest of the world, but the fact is that the German Government has control of the goods and fixes the price of potash for the world. They can fix this price so low as absolutely to destroy competition to any nation which would undertake to manufacture what they have only to mine.

There is no question in my mind as to that. The German Government is very sensitive over the charge that it maintains a monopoly of potash and fixes an arbitrary price. To meet this charge and to explain fully their method of price control Germany went to the expense of sending Prof. Houston, of New York, to Germany with our party in order to make it plain to the American delegates that there was no monopoly on potash; that they had no purpose whatsoever of preventing the free use of potash; and that the supply was ample for the whole world. I fully agree as to the vastness of the supply, but it seemed to me, as a matter of fact, that they do set the price of it, and will, in my judgment, control the potash unless that control is broken by domestic source, protected by an import duty, to prevent German competition. It is my opinion that with the great advantage they have of possessing practically an inexhaustible supply they will be able to name a price cheaper than you can get it at any other point, unless we should be so fortunate as to discover a natural supply such as Germany has. That is my own judgment about this potash question. Unless this country is willing to fix the price of potash by levying a heavy import tax on potash we will have to permit the German Government to name the price and hence to continue to control the trade. Under such conditions we will not be able to develop the manufacture of potash from seaweed or feldspar rocks upon such a basis as to overcome the advantage which nature has given Germany through their practically inexhaustible supply, ready to be mined and put out for use as cheaply as coal, if necessary, to meet competition and hold the trade of the world.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield for a question?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. With the knowledge that Germany now has of the demand for potash, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks Germany will ever sell potash as cheaply as she has in the past?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I can not tell you what will be the future policy of Germany. Germany herself uses half of the potash consumed in the world. In the United States we use one-fourth of the world's supply, and the rest of the world uses the remaining one-fourth In view of the fact that Germany has a monopoly because of the practically inexhaustible supply at the present rate of consumption, I take it that Germany will sell her goods at the best price she can get and will continue the same policy of controlling the potash prices to the world. Germany at present uses twice as many tons as the United States. The United States uses as much as all the rest of the world put together except Germany.

I have no objection to our Government going into the experimental business; but does any reasonable man have any ground for believing that the Agricultural Department can go over on the Pacific coast and gather the seaweed, float it, dry it, manufacture potash, and distribute it in this country as cheaply as the German, who has simply to mine it out and send it by water transportation from the mines to the shores of the United States? Do you believe you can beat such competition as that? That is the proposition you are up against; and then if you will remember that they have practically an inexhaustible supply, you will realize that their situation is a very advantageous one and which will, in my opinion, enable them to control the market. For the last two years conditions have been abnormal. Transportation has been broken off between the potash mines in Germany and this country, but that is a temporary condition and not a permanent one. You will finally have to face the actual fact that Germany has more potash than any other country in the world.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman is correct in his statement that probably we would not be able to produce it in competition with Germany, at least if we could provide some competition, that would result in the production of lower prices to the farmers of the United States, would it not?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I think the only competition possible would be this, that if the United States could produce potash at a certain given price, and Germany was not permitted by law to reduce her price below that and so drive our people entirely out of business, then we might manufacture our own potash, or a part of it; but I would not wish to predict lower prices.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the farmers of the country would be getting the potash more cheaply.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I doubt that. Let me call your attention to the fact that when the German potash syndicate expired one time at midnight, just the moment after the contract expired, the American Chemical Co. at once made a contract at $20 a ton with one of the mines in Germany. The German Government interfered, and it became a diplomatic question between this country and Germany whether that contract should be enforced or not. Although that price was lower than that at which potash had been sold to anyone in this country before, it was still immensely profitable for the mine owners in Germany, and if permitted they would have gladly complied with their contract and at a price at which the German Government forbade them to sell it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But if a situation should again arise where potash would go up 1,000 per cent, would it not be wise for this Government to develop by a system of experimentation such a production of potash as would keep the price down?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I am not objecting to experimentation, but I do not want to go into it with any false hopes. If the price of potash has gone up 1,000 per cent since the war began, it will go down again when the war is over. The war is temporary; but the German potash mines are permanent.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to the export of Chilean nitrate. There is no question but what the necessity exists for commercial fertilizers. Any man who travels out over the exhausted lands of western Maryland and Virginia can easily ascertain that the farmers in those sections are wide awake to the proposition. In the reduction of nitrate products the chemical elements that are precipitated are largely necessary in the manufacture of munitions, and when the European war broke out, of course, a great deal of attention was given to the export of Chilean nitrate. I want to call attention to the present conditions. The Chilean nitrate beds are located along the west coast of Chile for 450 miles. Ten years ago these beds were so valueless than anybody could get a nitrate bed by asking for it. To-day the Government has taken possession of all the nitrate beds, limited the amount that can be leased to an individual or corporation, and has laid an export tax on nitrate, because, so far as now known, it is the only natural deposit of any magnitude existing anywhere in the world.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLINE. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What is the character of the nitrate deposit in Chile?

Mr. CLINE. It is something similar to the phosphate rock that is broken up and crushed and submitted to hot-water treatment. The salts are precipitated in that way. In 1912 we bought 4,200,000 quintals, in round numbers, the quintal, you know, weighing about 101 pounds. We paid $16,000,000 for that. In 1913, the next year, we bought 5,721,000 pounds, and paid $23,000,000 and over, so that our contribution to the Chilean Government for the export of Chilean nitrate in 1913 by the United States Government was equal to more than $23,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this experiment should be undertaken for the reason that we do not want to depend on foreign governments or foreign institutions for all of the commercial fertilizer that we use. These Chilean nitrate beds are under the control largely of England and Germany. England takes 40 per cent of the production, we take 20 per cent, Germany 20 per cent, and France 10 per cent, and the other countries take the balance. The serious question, or one of the serious questions, is that the ownership of chemical fertilizers has drifted into the hands of a few persons who control the production. Take the phosphate rock in this country, and one parent organization is manufacturing the phosphate with about 42 or 43 subsidiary corporations. They undertook to purchase all the rock of the entire region in Tennessee, northern Florida, and the western Carolinas, and they are manufacturing that fertilizer now and shipping it abroad themselves at very expensive prices. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to incorporate a table in my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. Chairman, potash is one of the most important elements of plant food; it improves the soil and provides that element that all plants require to be able to bring forth large and properly matured crops. Germany is the sole producer of potash to-day in any large quantities. In normal times we use about 3,000 tons a day in this country, but at present we are entirely cut off from any supply of this, and the price has risen from $40 per ton to $500 per ton, and some has even been sold for as much as $600; this price has prohibited the farmers from using it as a fertilizer. Last year our supply of potash was reduced and the most of our crops were reduced accordingly. The cotton-growing States produced about 5,000,000 less bales of cotton than usual and our potato crop was short nearly 50,000,000 bushels. This year we are practically without potash and we can look for reduced crops of all kinds as a result, where potash is an essential element. Potatoes are so scarce that seed to-day is selling for $4.50 and $5 per sack, and other crops are affected in about the same ratio.

We have potash in this country in large quantities, but it is locked up in its natural elements and we have not yet discovered any process to make it in a soluble form and at reasonable prices. We have on the Pacific coast and Alaska in the kelps or seaweeds, in the alunites in Utah, and the large amount of feldspar in the Eastern States large quantities of potash, but small effort has been made to develop these sources of supply of this article.

This amendment provides money for research, investigation, and manufacture of potash in a soluble form and at reasonable prices, which will aid the farmer in growing larger crops and keep the cost of living within reasonable bounds.

We see by the papers that England is facing a famine because we are unable to ship our crops to that country. No country is safe to-day that has to depend upon some other to feed her people. We hear every day of the very high prices that the countries at war are paying for food, and this country can not do more toward preparedness and reducing the cost of living than to expend a reasonable amount for the research and investigation of potash and nitrogen.

Preparedness does not stop at furnishing men, but we must be prepared to feed our men and not be dependent upon any other country for our supply.

Potash is also an important factor in the manufacture of munitions of war, and the entire supply is practically being used for that purpose at present. While we are not anticipating war, if war should come at this time we would be entirely cut off from any supply of both potash and nitrogen, two of the most important essentials of ammunition manufacture.

For the purpose of showing the value of potash to our crops, I will give you some statistics covering the past 25 years: The German Kali Works have spent thousands of dollars educating our farmers to the use of potash, and you can see the general increase in our crops as a result, but it is not yet up to the increase in population.

Mr. Chairman, I have here gathered statistics for 25 years on four important crops. Twenty-five years ago very little potash was brought to this country. In 1890 there were planted 2,652,000 acres of potatoes, and the yield was 148,290,000 bushels, or an average of 55.9. Ten years after that, in 1900, there were planted 2,611,000 acres, and the yield was 210,927,000 bushels, or an average of 88 bushels per acre. In 1914 we planted 3,708,000 acres, and the yield was 405,921,000 bushels, or an average of 109.5. Last year, when potash was so scarce, we planted 3,761,000 acres, and the yield was 359,103,000 bushels, or a yield of 95.5 bushels per acre.

Our yield all the way down on the four main crops of this country shows that much increase by the use of potash.

Corn, in 1890 we planted 74,810,000 acres, and the yield was 1,742,450,800 bushels, or an average of 23.3. In 1915 we planted 108,321,000 acres, and raised 3,054,535,000 bushels, or an average of 28.2. Wheat is on the same line. In 1890 we planted 37,199,024 acres of wheat, and the yield was 443,847,400 bushels, or an average of 11.9 bushels. In 1915 we planted 59,898,000 acres, and the yield was 1,011,505,000 bushels, or an average of 16.9 bushels per acre.

Potash is not so essential for wheat as to other crops.

Next take oats. In 1890 we grew 632,124,600 bushels, or an average of 25 bushels to the acre. In 1915 we had 40,780,000 acres planted, with a yield of 1,540,362,000 bushels, or an average of 37.8 per acre. Our population has grown since 1890 from 62,947,714 to about 100,000,000 in 1915, so it will readily be seen that with the use of potash and the education that our farmers have had we have not produced in the same proportion as our population has increased.

In the district which I represent in New Jersey if we grew those average crops, we would not think they were worth gathering—that it would not pay us to gather them. Where we use a large percentage of potash we get very good results. I am going to give you now a statement from my own farm, under my own supervision. Last year we had no potash, or a very reduced quantity. I used four kinds of fertilizer in this experiment. I measured off four different acre plots. On the first plot I used 4 per cent of ammonia, 8 per cent of phosphoric acid, and no potash in the fertilizer, and produced 164½ bushels per acre; so you see that with no potash I had a yield away above the general average. In the second plot I used the fertilizer with 4 per cent of ammonia, 8 per cent of phosphoric acid, and 1 ton of feldspar, ground as fine as flour, and I produced 209 bushels on that acre. On the third plot I used 4 per cent of ammonia, 8 per cent of phosphoric acid, and 400 pounds of feldspar in the ton and produced 236½ bushels.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. On the fourth plot I used the regular potato goods—ammonia, 4 per cent; phosphoric acid, 8 per cent; potash, 10 per cent—and produced 264 bushels, or 100 bushels more with potash than where there was no potash. [Applause.] I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I should regret very much to see this amendment fail. It is one of the most important steps taken by the Government in a long, long time. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE] has said, if we should become embroiled in war with some foreign power we are absolutely cut off from our nitrate supply. There is no better time for this Government to take steps to provide itself with all of the necessary ingredients that go to make up fertilizer and gunpowder in this country. [Applause.] This is the step to take. The amendment provides for this experiment. It has been found that by using these seaweeds in this way potash can be obtained. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUTCHINSON] has shown the value of potash in farming. He has shown how the yield per acre in corn and potatoes fell off when the potash supply was reduced. I make the prediction now that that same result will obtain this year with regard to cotton in the United States. The acreage may be increased in some places, although I do not think it will be; but if it is increased, there are six States in the cotton belt that will require 4 acres without potash and nitrogen to make as much as 2 acres make ordinarily with potash and nitrogen. The yield is going to be small this year, because we have not got the potash and other necessary fertilizer. A great deal of stuff is being sold down there, or offered for sale, that has not any potash in it, and the farmers are not going to use it. They are not going to try to produce cotton on a large scale without potash.

We are absolutely up against a serious condition in the cotton belt, as well as the farmers in other sections, as the gentleman from New Jersey has said, and it does seem to me that this is a wise provision and a wise step for us to take. Let us try out this experiment. If that does not work, let us try another one and keep on until we get on a footing like Germany is on to-day. We ought to be as independent of the nations of the earth with regard to our fertilizer and powder supply as Germany is. [Applause.] There she stands, walled in by the British Navy, and yet she is supporting herself, producing upon her farms food supplies, meat, 95 per cent and 85 per cent of her bread supply. Germany produces that, and she is making her nitrogen from the air now, as no nation on earth is making it. Germany is dependent on no power for her fertilizers, she is dependent on no outside source for her gunpowder, she is fighting her own battles, and she commenced to prepare for it years and years ago, and we have gone on neglecting the soil and failing to obtain knowledge of the chemical composition of the soil and plant food until we find ourselves confronted by a very serious condition. Our nitrate supplies are in Chile, our potash supplies are in Germany, and here we are, thousands of miles away, and in case of war between our Government and some foreign power we would be cut off from those supplies. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this is a wise step, that this is a patriotic step for this House to take, and I should like very much to see this amendment adopted. It means good for our country. Let us keep on experimenting and working until we do provide these supplies for ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has offered an amendment to the bill to have the Government engage in the process of manufacturing potash from kelp. I remember when the potash question first came up before the House in an acute form. A few years ago a syndicate in Germany which controlled the potash mines over there was to end at 12 o'clock at night on a certain day. The fertilizer makers in Chicago—Armour & Co. and some of the others—either directly or through the name of some other company were "Johnny on the spot." They had made preliminary arrangements with some of the owners of some of these mines, and at 12 o'clock and 1 minute they signed contracts for the entire output of some of the mines by the individual members of the syndicate which had been dissolved at 12 o'clock and obtained these contracts for the supply of potash at a very much reduced rate from what they had been charged before and what they are paying now. The German Government interfered and threatened to forbid the export of potash or to levy a very high export tax on potash, which would make the potash cost the American producer more than it had before when they purchased it from the syndicate, and they forced a revocation or a cancellation of those contracts and forced all the mine owners over there to join in a new syndicate, practically under the domination of the German Government. These facts were brought to the attention of Congress at the time. It was not very much that could be done by the State Department, because they were wholly within their rights. We put in the Agricultural bill a provision to have the Agricultural Department endeavor to find a supply of potash in the United States and at the same time put into the sundry civil bill, or the deficiency—I think the sundry civil bill—an appropriation to have the Geological Survey see if they could find a supply of potash in the United States. A supply of potash here that is of any value must be cheap.

As described by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CLINE], the mining of potash in Germany is a good deal like the mining of coal or the mining of iron ore up in Minnesota. The process of production is exceedingly cheap. Of course, with a monopoly they can charge what they please. They can charge just as much for half the amount that the United States consumes as for the entire amount we consume, and if we furnish a small amount of potash through our own supply at home the German Government can require us to pay just as much for what they furnish as if they furnished the whole supply. Unless we can find a supply of potash which will furnish the United States in the end we will have to pay for potash from those people over there what they say we will have to pay. Now, I do not know whether potash can ever be profitably produced from kelp or not. I doubt it. I doubt whether it will not cost more to gather together the kelp, without regard to any process on it, than it will cost to have the German potash laid down on the Atlantic seaboard. But I do know this—at least I think I do—that with the knowledge already obtained in reference to the manufacture of potash from kelp, if it is ever to amount to anything it must be through the development of private capital, and as long as the Government is monkeying with it private capital will not invest in it to any extent. The only way you can get private capital interested in this is to say to them, "Here is a field wide open to you. We have given you information enough under which you can make this potash. Go to it."

As long as you say to them that we are going to learn something more in the dim and distant future and going to have the Government keep on experimenting with it, or perhaps manufacture it for sale, you can not expect to get men to invest money in it, and they will not. They know how to make potash out of kelp now. Nobody knows whether they can make it commercially profitable on a large scale or not, and nobody will find out through a plant that costs $170,000.

The Agricultural Department told me years ago that they could make print paper out of cornstalks that were going to waste. I said, "Certainly, but it will cost more to collect cornstalks before you commence to manufacture them than it will to lay the print paper made out of spruce wood down at the door of the printing office. Hence, you will never make print paper out of cornstalks."

Some are trying to make potash out of alunite. Armour & Co. are said to be interested in it. If they are, they will find out more about it from a commercial point of view than the Government will ever learn, and you may be sure if it is ever possible to produce potash from alunite the Armour people and others will go into it. I do not think the Government ought to stand in their way. But I think this is what this would do. If you want the money to really make experiments, so far as I am concerned, I would be willing to vote a million dollars in a minute, even if I only got negative results, because if we can find potash or nitrates on our own soil it would be worth more than we can contemplate by the imagination. So far as discovery is concerned, I am willing to go to the limit. But we are furnished the information as to these things, and all that is necessary to learn is whether it can be made a commercial success. The Government can never find that out. The Government can not ascertain that. We must be for the private manufacturer unless we entirely abolish the theory of private manufacture and expect the Government to do the whole thing. Nobody has proposed that yet. For that reason I think it is an error to engage upon this, and I doubt whether it meets the approval even of the Secretary of Agriculture, although I am not authorized to speak for him. Therefore I make the point of order.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman will permit, the Secretary of Agriculture made that recommendation in his report on the fertilizer situation to the Senate on about January 26.

Mr. MANN. Well, I am sorry he did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from South Carolina desire to be heard?

Mr. LEVER. The paragraph is undoubtedly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 49, after line 11, insert the following paragraph:
"For investigation and demonstration within the United States to determine the best method of obtaining potash on a commercial scale, $175,000."

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. LEVER. I do not care to have it reserved, Mr. Chairman. I only care to call the attention of the Chair to the difference in the two amendments. This amendment provides only for investigation and demonstration, while the other amendment went further.

Mr. MANN. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to give them money, provided they are not to construct a building. I think under this provision they would be authorized to construct buildings.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman and I are fully agreed on that, but the department does not take the same view. Therefore the amendment was offered in the form on which it has gone out on the point of order, but I believe under the general authority they have the right to erect this building.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Chairman, there is no authority in the Agricultural Department at all, so far as that is concerned, to investigate the subject of potash or the production of potash. That is not an agricultural product. It may be an agricultural necessity, but it is not within the provision of the enabling act.

Mr. LEVER. I am inclined to think the gentleman is right.

Mr. MANN. There is no question about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

Salaries Bureau of Entomology: One entomologist, who shall be chief of bureau, $4,500; 1 chief clerk and executive assistant, $2,250; 1 administrative assistant, $2,250; 1 financial clerk, $1,800; 3 clerks, class 4; 3 clerks, class 3; 9 clerks, class 2; 9 clerks, class 1; 10 clerks, at $1,000 each; 4 clerks, at $900 each; 5 clerks, at $840 each; 2 entomological draftsmen, at $1,400 each; 1 entomological draftsman, $1,080; 4 foremen, at $1,080 each; 1 entomological preparator, $1,000; 4 entomological preparators, at $840 each; 8 entomological preparators, at $720 each; 7 entomological preparators, at $600 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $900 each; 2 messengers or laborers, at $840 each; 3 messengers or laborers, at $720 each; 1 messenger boy, $480; 5 messenger boys, at $360 each; 1 mechanic, $1,080; 1 mechanic, $900; 1 mechanic, $840; 1 laborer, $600; 1 laborer, $540; 1 laborer, $480; 1 laborer, $420; 3 charwomen, at $480 each; 1 charwoman, $240; in all, $99,180

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. I assume that these additional places involving an increase of the appropriation over that of last year of nearly $30,000 are transfers from the lump-fund list?

Mr. LEVER. They are each and every one of them transfers from the lump fund to the statutory roll, and the lump fund has been reduced accordingly. The transfers are made at the same salary, except in one place.

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the point I wanted to ascertain, whether they were transferred at the same salary or not.

Mr. LEVER. Yes; the transfers were made at the same salary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Except in one instance, as the gentleman says?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; except in the case of a messenger at $480.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. I renew it.

This is an increase of nearly $30,000 on the statutory roll in the Bureau of Entomology. While the gentleman from South Carolina says—and he knows—that these are transfers from the lump-sum appropriations, the lump-sum appropriations, in fact, are not reduced. They are increased, although they may have been reduced from what the department would have asked for.

Mr. LEVER. That is what I meant, of course.

Mr. MANN. I understand what the gentleman means, and I am not seeking to criticize that. But what is the reason for these increases in the actual cost? Here is an increase of nearly half in the statutory roll over what we supposed it was last year. We make an appropriation in a lump sum for the investigation of insects affecting deciduous fruits, and so forth, and we supposed—and we had the right to suppose—that the statutory roll did the clerical work for these lump-sum appropriations in Washington. There is nothing else for them to do. All the appropriations for this bureau are lump-sum appropriations, except the statutory roll in Washington. All the statutory roll has to do is to use that lump-sum appropriation.

They pay absolutely no attention to Congress. We appropriated $69,000 for the employees in Washington. Then we appropriated certain amounts for work outside of Washington; and then they use it to increase salaries and pay salaries in Washington to the extent of $30,000. I think we have got to stop the Agricultural Department sometime from fooling Congress about these things, because that is what it is doing. The gentleman knows that I always defend the Department of Agriculture when anybody attacks it except myself.

Mr. LEVER. That is true, too.

Mr. MANN. I think it is a great department; but as long as they have the power to do these things they will do them. When we appropriate $114,660 for the investigation of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, an item which we put in a few years ago at the instance, I think, of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], we supposed that that money was being used for that purpose. We had the right to suppose it, because we make an appropriation for the Washington employees in addition. Well, they just take what money of it they want. It is not excessive; I do not think they are grossly extravagant; but they take as much of that as they want of it for clerks, charwomen, messengers, or anything else they please in Washington.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. The committee was assured by those people appearing before it from the department that they were endeavoring to transfer from the statutory roll two classes of people, in accordance with the expressed wish of Congress, expressed here on the floor of the House in the discussion of this bill. One class is that of purely clerical service. The other class is that class of employees that has become permanent, as they designate it, and they are endeavoring, as they tell us, to retain under the lump-sum appropriation the purely scientific force. There is not any law that compels that at all. I agree with the gentleman that if we can work out a plan by which we can get greater control of these lump-sum appropriations and these transfers, it would be very well for us to do so. As I stated on another item, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.

ANDERSON] and myself are trying to work out an amendment which I hope will be effective, although I am not sure.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of obtaining some information. I notice that during the fiscal year 1915 there was expended on the statutory roll the sum of $68,400, and out of the lump fund $98,000 in Washington and $256,000 outside of Washington. This year you have increased the amount of the statutory roll $30,000. I wish to inquire specifically whether the committee asked the heads of the bureaus, when they appeared before the committee, as to whether all those persons who are performing clerical service, and not technical service of the character referred to by the gentleman, will be provided for on the statutory roll in this bill?

Mr. LEVER. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that our information was that in every case where a transfer was made from the lump fund it was either of a clerical position or a position that had become permanent in its nature.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not answer my question. I am inquiring whether all the clerks who are now being paid out of the lump-sum appropriation for performing purely clerical services have been provided for on the statutory roll in this bill.

Mr. LEVER. Our information is to that effect; yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not only in this bureau but in all the other bureaus.

Mr. LEVER. Yes. We understand that they have transferred all of their clerical force to the statutory roll, and the only other problem we have to deal with—I will say to the gentleman that it is a hard one—is to provide some way of limiting the number of temporary employees who can be paid out of the lump-sum appropriation, where those positions may become or may be permanent in the future.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why in that particular should this department be considered any different from any other one of the departments that are provided in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill? Why can not the committee bring in here a provision restricting in the future the utilization of any of these lump-sum appropriations for clerical services, so that Congress may know that when it votes money for use in the field it will be used exclusively for that purpose.

Mr. LEVER. As I said to the gentleman——

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing here that restricts them.

Mr. LEVER. I know that.

Mr. STAFFORD. And they go on year after year employing persons for clerical work and paying them out of the lump-sum appropriation, when the intention of Congress is to limit them to the amount carried in the statutory roll.

Mr. LEVER. As I said to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—the gentleman from Wisconsin probably did not hear my statement—the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] and myself are working on an amendment which we hope to offer to this bill before we finish it, to accomplish that result.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will do that, so as to restrict these abuses, which have been continually called to our attention.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a statement as to the present German method of extracting nitrogen from the air. This statement was made up for me by Dr. William Beckers, president of the W. Beckers Analine Chemical Works, and former director of the German Syndicate, probably the most competent man on the subject in this country. I introduce this for the purpose of showing that to-day the Germans are extracting nitrogen from the air, not only without the use of water power but much more cheaply than when they were using water power in Norway, and more cheaply than it is produced out of Chilian saltpeter.

Mr. LEVER. I am very glad the gentleman is going to print that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing a certain statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

Nitric acid is being produced in Germany at the present time without depending on electric energy, the developing of which would necessitate large water-power establishments such as at Niagara Falls and in Norway. The Badische Co., after having completed the experiments in regard to the process to be mentioned further below, sold their shares in the Norwegian Co. This process makes Germany not only independent from other countries regarding its nitrogen compounds, especially nitric acid, but also yields a cheaper product.

According to the Badische process the first step for the manufacture of nitric acid is the production of ammonia, which chemical is obtained by the so-called Haber process. The elements of ammonia, hydrogen, and nitrogen are combined under high pressure and temperature by the aid of certain catalysers, yielding chemically pure ammonia. Hydrogen is obtained from so-called water or Dowson gas, which is a mixture of CO, CO_2, and H. Co and CO_2 are absorbed by different chemicals, leaving pure hydrogen. Dowson gas is manufactured by driving steam through burning coal in a generator. Nitrogen is obtained from so-called generator gas, which is produced by burning coal in a generator, and which is a mixture of CO, CO_2, and N. CO and CO_2 are disposed of in the above-mentioned way, thus leaving pure nitrogen.

Furthermore, nitrogen can be produced very cheaply by the Linde process; that is, by liquifying air—which is a mixture of nitrogen and oxygen—and distilling the oxygen off first.

The pure ammonia produced by the Haber process is mixed with air and conducted over platinum gauze heated by electricity to about 700°, at which temperature a complete oxidation of ammonia takes place, leaving nitric oxide and water. Nitric oxide is used further for the manufacture of nitric acid according to well-known methods.

The amount of electrical energy necessitated for heating the platinum gauze is comparatively small and can be produced from coal, thus showing that the entire process does not require electricity developed by water power.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

General expenses, Bureau of Entomology: For the promotion of economic entomology; for investigating the history and the habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, horticulture, arboriculture, and the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals, and ascertaining the best means of destroying those found to be injurious; for collating, digesting, reporting, and illustrating the results of such investigations for salaries and the employment of labor in the city of Washington and elsewhere, rent outside of the District of Columbia, freight, express charges, official traveling expenses, office fixtures, supplies, apparatus, telegraph and telephone service, gas, and electric current, in connection with the following investigations:

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question.

Quite a number of items have been carried in the bill in the past for the purpose of investigating the boll weevil that has been so destructive of cotton in the South. Up to date neither the Government nor the State, so far as I know, nor any of the agricultural colleges, have been able to discover any method of destroying the weevil. The only thing they have been able to do is to devise some cultural methods which may or may not succeed, in accordance with the season. Sometimes if the season is right the cultural methods succeed and sometimes they fail. What I wanted to ask the gentleman is, Is this the item that investigates on the part of the Government the method of destroying this insect?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Mississippi will find the item which carries the boll weevil in lines 14, 15, and 16 on the page that we have not reached.

Mr. SISSON. I will say now what I intended to say on that item. I do not believe that anything can be done in a general way by the expenditures of large sums of money with the present information that you have about the destruction of the weevil. We know the effect of it, we feel the effects of it; but up to date nothing has been devised that has been practical for the destruction of the weevil. But I do insist that the Government of the United States, as a scientific proposition, should continue the scientific investigation which, of course, would not be expensive to ascertain some method of destroying the weevil.

Another thing we must continually keep in mind is that if the weevil is destroyed in one State and another State is not willing to adopt the methods of destruction it would be useless, because the weevil travels with such rapidity from one State to another. So when the method has been ascertained which can be used practically for the destruction of the weevil, then I hope that Congress will aid the States in such a scheme as will destroy the weevil throughout the cotton belt.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Is there any reasonable probability of the destruction of the boll weevil?

Mr. SISSON. Personally I do not know. I know the agricultural college of my own State and that of Texas and other States have spent a great deal of money, counties have spent a great deal of money, States have spent a great deal of money, the Federal Government has spent a great deal of money, and they have had experts from all over the country to study the habits of the weevil, caught them and kept them in cages, watched them day and night, and they never have been able to find anything that will destroy them. They have devised some poisons which destroyed the hands that endeavored to distribute the poison, but not the weevil.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That is my own opinion; we have been working for 100 years on the Hessian fly, and that destroys more grain than the boll weevil destroys cotton.

Mr. SISSON. I doubt that, because the weevil gets all the cotton when he gets any.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Has not the boll weevil been of some benefit to the South?

Mr. SISSON. I should say he had not.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. In the way of reducing the crop which they say ought to be reduced.

Mr. SISSON. Perhaps that is true, but I do not want it reduced on my plantation when it is not reduced on some other plantations. I do not want the cotton crop reduced in that way.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The boll weevil is impartial.

Mr. SISSON. No; he has not got all over the cotton belt. He has not got over to South Carolina yet. The Hessian fly is referred to in this report, and this gentleman insists that the Federal Government ought to devise a scheme of destroying it—this was in 1849—and on account of the number of failures, he says, is no reason to quit, because you do not make an oak out of an acorn in a day. So I do not want the Agricultural Department to quit until it has found how to kill the boll weevil, for he will get over into Georgia, into the land of my friend, Mr. CRISP, or to South Carolina, to the plantation of my good friend, Mr. LEVER.

Mr. CRISP. I want to say that he entered my district last fall.

Mr. SISSON. Well, he has not got in his work yet.

Mr. BORLAND. The boll weevil does not believe in State rights.

Mr. SISSON. He ignores the Federal Constitution and State rights.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting cereal and forage crops, $114,660.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether the amount carried in this item is the same as heretofore carried?

Mr. LEVER. Exactly the same amount; there is a difference by way of transfer.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Two years ago, as the chairman no doubt remembers, there was established in my district a new field station under this bureau.

Mr. LEVER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there is an increase in this item of $5,000.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. As I said, two years ago there was a new field station established in my district. I should like to know whether the appropriation carried in this bill takes into consideration the proper maintenance of that field station, so that it will be continued as heretofore.

Mr. LEVER. Undoubtedly, although it was not specifically provided for in the item. The item covers all of the field stations.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. There is, I see, no field station especially mentioned.

Mr. LEVER. We never mention any of the field stations.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. The farmers of my district believe that this station has been a great benefit to that section of the country.

Mr. LEVER. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. They want to be certain that the station there is going to be continued, and I desired to know whether this item in the bill would furnish the necessary funds to maintain that station as heretofore.

Mr. LEVER. It certainly will do so.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I want to thank the chairman of the committee for this assurance. My constituents are deeply interested in its continuance and are perfectly convinced of the great benefit that it has been and will be to the farmers of the district and the surrounding country.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, after line 13, insert as a new paragraph the following:
"For investigating a method for the eradication of the Hessian fly in wheat by the process of spraying, $50,000."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the wheat crop is one of the largest of all crops that are grown on the farm. It is the third, if not the second, most remunerative in production, the corn crop being first, recently the cotton crop being second, and now the wheat crop third.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman going to press his amendment?

Mr. CULLOP. I hope to; yes.

Mr. MANN. I think that there ought to be a fuller attendance to hear the gentleman and vote upon his amendment, and I therefore make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMLIN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12717, the Agricultural appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. FARLEY, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. WILSON of Florida, at the request of Mr. CLARK of Florida, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 5835. An act for the relief of James Staton;

H. R. 7502. An act for the relief of Ellis P. Garton, administrator of the estate of H. B. Garton, deceased;

H. R. 7862. An act for the relief of New England Coal & Coke Co., owner of the American barges Emilie and Cassie, and Bruusgaard Kiosterud Dampskibsaktieselskab, owner of the Norwegian steamship Hesperos;

H. R. 9803. An act to emancipate from certain disabilities children who have judgments of conviction for crime of record against them in the Juvenile Court of the District of Columbia;

H. R. 4701. An act to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll," and for other purposes;

H. R. 7248. An act for the relief of the United States Drainage & Irrigation Co.; and

H. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Edward B. Craig, as collector of internal revenue for the collection district of Tennessee, in the sum of $2,034.89, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue documentary stamps which were taken from the office of said collector by an act of burglary.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 12027) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12027, an omnibus pension bill, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk announced the following conferees:

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, Mr. ASHBROOK, and Mr. FULLER.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] be allowed to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] be permitted to address the House for not to exceed 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. LEVER (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, April 22, 1916, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows.

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report on reexamination of Tuckerton Creek, N. J. (H. Doc. No. 1040); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

2. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Missouri B. Ordway, widow of Albert Ordway, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1041); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Jane O'Dwyer, widow of John O'Dwyer, deceased, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1042); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Henry S. Branaman v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1043); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Ellen B. Alexander, widow of Robert M. Alexander, v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1044); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Barnet W. Prescott v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1045); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Joseph V. Kendall v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1046); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Harrison H. Boyes v. The United States (H. Doc. No. 1047); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of communication from the acting president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required for the service of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, under the title of "Contingent and miscellaneous expenses" (H. Doc. No. 1048); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. WISE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which wes referred the bill (S. 3344) to authorize George H. Hervey, of Pensacola, Fla., to construct and operate an electric railway line on the Fort Barrancas and Fort McRee Military Reservations, Fla., and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 584), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. STOUT, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 1068) relating to desert-land entries, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 585), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12099) granting a pension to Esther Opher, and the same was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 14900) to amend section 6 of the act of June 1[illegible], 1910, providing for enlarged homestead entries in the State of Idaho; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14901) providing for the disposition of lands restored to the public domain which have been segregated under the provisions of the act approved August 18, 1894 (28 Stat. L., pp. 372–422), and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14902) to provide for the erection of a Federal building at Bonners Ferry, Idaho; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 14903) to establish the National Chamber of Agriculture of the United States; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 14904) for improvements and repairs necessary for the preservation and protection of the tailor shop of ex-President Andrew Johnson, at Greenville, Tenn.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HULBERT: A bill (H. R. 14905) for the improvement of East Potomac Park as a public recreation ground; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 14906) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Kennett, Mo., two cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14907) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of New Madrid, Mo., two cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14908) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Benton, Mo., two cannon or fieldpieces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 14909) to provide for the purchase of a site upon which to erect a post-office building in the city of Perry in the State of Florida; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14910) to provide for the purchase of a site upon which to erect a post-office building in the city of Monticello, Fla.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 207) authorizing the issuing of a medal to Joseph David; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. NEELY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 208) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MORRISON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 209) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to accept assignment of patent for improvements in the manufacture of gasoline, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DYER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 210) directing that veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic be given the regulation salute from the enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DILL: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 31) providing for the printing of 1,000 copies of Moore's Digest of International Law; to the Committee on Printing.

Also, concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 32) providing for the printing of 1,000 copies of Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BENNET: Resolution (H. Res. 210) requesting the President to furnish certain information in relation to the case of Samuel Schwartz; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PARK: Resolution (H. Res. 211) to print 1,250 copies of the Soil Survey of Decatur County, Ga.; to the Committee on Printing.

Also, resolution (H. Res. 212) to print 2,000 copies of the Soil Survey of Tift County, Ga.; to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 14911) granting an increase of pension to John Critchfield; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BORLAND: A bill (H. R. 14912) granting an increase of pension to Lucy A. Manrose; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 14913) to refer to the Court of Claims the record in the case of William M. Farrington v. Rolfe S. Saunders, heretofore pending in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of West Tennessee, with instructions to hear, try, and determine the same and enter judgment on the law and facts; to provide for appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States by the Government or any part interested; to confer jurisdiction upon both of said courts, and to prescribe the method of procedure; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14914) granting an increase of pension to Addie P. Shoffner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLEMAN: A bill (H. R. 14915) granting an increase of pension to F. Isabelle Lawrance; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CONRY: A bill (H. R. 14916) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin R. Hubbell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CULLOP: A bill (H. R. 14917) granting an increase of pension to Robert Gilmore; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14918) granting an increase of pension to Pleasant D. Evans; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14919) granting a pension to James M. Wilson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. EAGAN: A bill (H. R. 14920) granting an increase of pension to Mary Ann Conroy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HASKELL: A bill (H. R. 14921) granting a pension to Margaret Gray; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HELGESEN: A bill (H. R. 14922) granting a pension to Bruce Friend; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HILLIARD: A bill (H. R. 14923) granting a pension to George F. Taylor; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HULBERT: A bill (H. R. 14924) granting a pension to Loretta A. Bradley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER of Delaware: A bill (H. R. 14925) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Baylis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'SHAUNESSY: A bill (H. R. 14926) granting a pension to Mary A. Winsor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. REAVIS: A bill (H. R. 14927) to correct the military record of William H. Boyer; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14928) to correct the military record of Robert M. Mann; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14929) to correct the military record of James C. Sedam; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 14930) granting an increase of pension to Emily Jane Hilton; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14931) granting a pension to Albert Jeffries; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 14932) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth W. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14933) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Rogers; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 14934) granting an increase of pension to Mary Dodge; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14935) granting an increase of pension to William M. Spann; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANFORD: A bill (H. R. 14936) for the relief of Lawrence Collins and Edward J. Flanigan; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 14937) granting an increase of pension to William H. Wharton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TAVENNER: A bill (H. R. 14938) granting an increase of pension to William G. Jackson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 14939) granting an increase of pension to John W. Wahl; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14940) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah A. Staley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 14941) granting a pension to Frederick Noyes; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VENABLE: A bill (H. R. 14942) granting an increase of pension to Julia A. Ueltschey; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ANTHONY: Memorial of Republican County Convention of Reno County, Kans., favoring national woman suffrage; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petitions of sundry men and women voters of the State of Kansas, protesting against the action of the Judiciary Committee relative to the suffrage amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, April 22, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Creator of all things, Thy will is law. We bless Thee that we have come to know that the law of Thy will is love and grace and truth. We come to Thee to-day under the inspiration of this season of the year. We see once more the challenge of life to the force of death. That which was dead is alive again. Thou dost give to us the pledge of our own immortality. We have about us the intimations of the life which is yet to be. We bless Thee for the assurance that wholeness of life is the conqueror over death. Thou wilt not suffer Thy holy one to see corruption. Grant us this day the especial inspiration of Thy spirit that we may enter profoundly into the meaning and message and intimation of this season and come to measure life by its infinite length and depth and height and breadth. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1916, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

THE NAVY (S. DOC. NO. 413).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 12, 1916, certain information relative to a communication dated August 3, 1914, from the General Board of the Navy warning the Navy Department of the necessity of bringing the Navy to a state of preparedness, and also of a communication dated November 9, 1914, from Rear Admiral Bradley A. Fiske, senior adviser to the Secretary, warning the Navy Department of the unprepared state of the Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) to print as a public document the final report and testimony submitted to Congress by the United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20) authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12027) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, Mr. ASHBROOK, and Mr. FULLER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4701. An act to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll, designated as "the Army and Navy medal-of-honor roll," and for other purposes;

H. R. 5835. An act for the relief of James Stanton;

H. R. 7248. An act for the relief of the United States Drainage & Irrigation Co.;

H. R. 7502. An act for the relief of Ellis P. Garton, administrator of the estate of H. B. Garton, deceased;

H. R. 7862. An act for the relief of New England Coal & Coke Co., owner of the American barges Emilie and Cassie, and Bruusgaard, Kiosterud Dampskibsaktieselskab, owner of the Norwegian steamship Hesperos;

H. R. 9803. An act to emancipate from certain disabilities children who have judgments of convictions for crime of record against them in the juvenile court of the District of Columbia; and

H. J. Res. 87. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to credit the stamp account of Edward B. Craig, as collector of internal revenue for the collection district of Tennessee, in the sum of $2,034.89, being the representative value of certain internal-revenue documentary stamps which were taken from the office of said collector by an act of burglary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I have a number of petitions from citizens of Sebewaing, Mich., and also from Detroit and other points in my State, bearing upon the question of an embargo upon the shipment of arms. If the Chair will indulge me, I will call attention to one of them, in which the petitioner says:

> As I am very anxious to see our country maintaining a position of neutrality so definite and absolute that it can not be questioned by anyone whose sympathies are for either of the belligerents of Europe, I am appealing to you, my representative in the upper House of Congress, to support the resolution ordering an embargo upon further shipments of war material, when it comes up for consideration.

These petitions are generally in the same form and come from patriotic citizens, and I desire that their zeal may be properly considered by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HARDING presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the City Council of Cleveland, Ohio, remonstrating against any change in the parcel-post law, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of F. E. Everett, State highway commissioner, of Concord, and of the Auto Club, of Nashua, in the State of New Hampshire, praying for Federal aid in the construction of good roads, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Dr. Benjamin W. Baker, superintendent of the New Hampshire School for Feeble-Minded, of Laconia, N. H., praying for the establishment of a home for feeble-minded in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to present and have printed in the RECORD a letter in the nature of a petition addressed to my colleague, Senator KERN, which would have been presented by him but for the fact that he is unavoidably absent from the city.

This letter is signed by a score or more of the leading business men of Indianapolis, all of whom have been for many years identified with every movement for the growth and development of that city.

All are of German birth or ancestry, but every one a loyal American citizen.

While many may not agree with the views expressed, these men are of such high character and standing as to entitle their utterances to respectful consideration.

I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 12, 1916.

Hon. JOHN W. KERN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As your neighbors, friends, and constituents, we feel that we can appeal to you in this critical hour of our country's negotiations with Germany and ask your calm and unbiased consideration of a few statements which we beg herewith respectfully to submit.

We feel confident it is not necessary to protest our loyalty to our common country to you who have known us for years, and submit that it is no test of our patriotism to entertain opinions and form judgments in good faith which may differ from those of our fellow citizens.

If, because of our blood relationships, we have sympathized with Germany in the awful contest which has been raging since August, 1914, it seems to us that this is quite natural, indeed it would be unnatural and perhaps worse, rank hypocrisy, if it were otherwise. We would resent the imputation that because we hold sympathies for Germany we have violated any of the requirements of a good faith loyalty to our country.

It is our sincere judgment that there has been no provocation by Germany, or any violation of international law by it, that would justify the severance of diplomatic relations or the declaration of war. It is our sincere judgment that the Government of Germany, as well as the German people, do not court the enemity of our Government or of our people, and would not intentionally commit any avoidable act that would bring on the ill will of our country. It is our sincere judgment that Germany would not knowingly commit the slightest act which, by any possible stretch of imagination, could be construed as an attack upon our national honor.

We submit if it should be proven that we are right in our contentions, as set out in the preceding paragraph, it would be worse than a calamity to break off relations with a country with whom we have always been at peace and with whom our relations have always been upon a basis of mutual respect and confidence.

Perhaps we have no legal foundation for advancing our ties of blood relationship as an argument against the break of diplomatic intercourse with Germany—others, no doubt, in the past, in similar emergencies, have asked for consideration because of mere financial interests—but the best instincts of a common brotherhood, it seems to us, furnishes a valid excuse for an appeal to our fellow citizens to consider our sufferings in the event of a situation such as is now threatening.

We appeal to you, as our trusted representative, to use the power of your great influence against the proposition to break diplomatic relations with Germany. With great respect,

Yours, truly,

Louis Nodroez; Fred Fahnley; Albrecht Kipp; G. A. Schmell; Wm. F. Piel; Albert Sieber; Very Rev. Ant. Scheideler, V. G., pastor of St. Mary's Church; Charles Mayer; H. O. Pantzer; F. J. Meyer; John P. Frenzel; Otto N. Vonnyer; S. E. Rauh; Jos. Keller; Lorenz Schmidt; Albert C. Zahn; Herman P. Lieber; J. C. Peters; Herman Frenzel; Theo. Stempfel; Hugo Wuelfing.

Mr. TAGGART. I also ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to present two telegrams which I have received and that they may be printed in the RECORD. One is from the German-American Democratic Club of Indianapolis, consisting of about 800 members, and the other telegram is from the Indiana Branch of the American Rights Committee, consisting of about 180 names. I ask that these two telegrams be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., April 20, 1916.

Hon. THOMAS TAGGART,
Washington, D. C.:

Senator, this is Good Friday. It brings home to us good thoughts, kindly feelings, a reverence strengthened anew for our Savior, who died that we might live, and through this reverence is born anew the grand, the ennobling sentiment, peace on earth, good will to men. Let us, then, hope and pray that this may become a living reality and that to this end nothing will be left undone to prevent a severance of the peaceful, kind, and neighborly relations existing between ours, the grandest Nation on earth, and the German Empire. May we courteously prevail on you, our friend, to urge upon our great and good President and the Nation's Congress, commemorative of this good day, to sound the slogan to a grateful constituency, Peace on earth, good will to men.

By order of the German Democratic Club.

ALBERT SAHM, President.
CARL VIEBAHN, Secretary.

BOOTH TARKINGTON, Chairman.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I present a telegram from one of my constituents. I have received many of similar purport, and I respectfully ask that this one may be read.

There being no objection, the Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

HOBOKEN, N. J., April 19, 1916.

Hon. JAMES E. MARTINE,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

The propaganda which has been carried on with the avowed purpose of inflaming the American people with a desire to enter this European war has never been equaled by any propaganda carried on in this or any other country. The undoubted will of the American people is that we maintain peace.

DANIEL P. TOOMEY,
East Orange, N. J.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I have received from citizens of my State, I am safe in saying, 100, possibly more, of similar import.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Texas, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from sundry citizens of San Antonio, Tex., and petitions of sundry citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Hill County, Tex., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to limit the freedom of the press, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Grand Prairie, Tex., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Corpus Christi, Tex., remonstrating against the proposed creation of a juvenile court in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Oglesby, Tex., remonstrating against the adoption of section 11 of the so-called cotton-futures bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Mexico, praying for an investigation into the methods of handling public lands, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRADY presented petitions of sundry citizens of Idaho, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nez Perce, Idaho, praying for prohibition in the District of Columbia, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LIPPITT. I have a resolution in the form of a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, protesting against the imposition of a Federal inheritance tax, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[H. 266, January session, A. D. 1916. Mr. Sumner, of Providence.]

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS.

Resolution requesting the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island concerning House resolution 8929, providing for a Federal inheritance tax.

Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States House resolution 8929, authorizing the imposition of a Federal tax on gifts, legacies, and inheritances; and

Whereas it is held by ample and eminent authority that this form of taxation belongs properly to the several States and should be reserved strictly as a source of State revenue and not made a source of revenue by the Federal Government; and

Whereas the taxation of inheritances is already an established part of the revenue systems of 43 of the United States, a fact which would render the position of a Federal inheritance tax an unjust burden and result in double taxation in an aggravated and unwarranted degree: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island hereby declares its firm conviction that the interests of the State and of the public generally would not be conserved by the passage of said resolution, and that the imposition of a Federal tax on gifts, legacies, and inheritances would be inimical thereto.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island be, and they hereby are, requested to use their efforts to prevent the passage of said House resolution 8929, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to each of them forthwith.

A true copy.

Attest:

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER, Secretary of State.

Mr. SMOOT. I present a telegram in the nature of a petition and ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I will not take the time to have it read. Let it be printed without the names.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALT LAKE, UTAH, April 21.

Senator REED SMOOT, Washington, D. C.:

We believe that the American people are absolutely against war with Germany. Under the present circumstances and conditions they consider such a war the greatest calamity which could befall our country and a crime against our own people and against humanity. Millions of hearts will be broken and inexpressible suffering will be the lot of ourselves and our brethren. We firmly believe that this is the sentiment of the majority of the American Nation, and we trust and hope from the bottom of our hearts that you will do all you can to keep us out of an unjust war.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Literary Club of Cheshire, Conn., praying for the creation of a national-park service, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of Local Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Moosup Valley, R. I., praying for Government ownership of telephone and telegraph systems, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution, in the nature of a memorial, from the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, remonstrating against the imposition of a tax on gifts, legacies, and inheritances, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PHELAN presented petitions of sundry citizens of San Jose, Sacramento, and Los Angeles, all in the State of California, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Eureka, Sacramento, and Bakersfield, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

RED CROSS SUPPLIES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which I have received from my State, and I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

[Telegram.]

NEW HAVEN, CONN., April 20, 1916.

Hon. FRANK B. BRANDEGEE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Red Cross has just issued circular announcing British Government refuses to pass Red Cross supplies for central powers. Would beg that you will protest in the Senate against virtual overthrow of Geneva principles and will not tacitly allow Red Cross to be used as aid for one side only.

YANDELL HENDERSON.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am not particularly familiar with any order that Great Britain may have made prohibiting the supplies of the Red Cross from reaching the central powers. I think I remember to have seen in one of the newspapers the other day that such action had been taken and it was claimed by the British authorities that it was done, if I recall the reading correctly, because of fear on their part that some of these hospital supplies might be used for war purposes. It seemed to me at the time that that was a somewhat forced excuse. I had supposed hitherto that supplies to relieve the suffering of wounded soldiers could be sent into any country by the Red Cross, and I assumed that it was recognized by all belligerents that the Red Cross was sent upon an errand of mercy. I do not know what supplies the Red Cross is sending in that could be used for war purposes to any extent. I conceive that what cotton or chemicals they use for hospital purposes would not go very far in maintaining attacks about Verdun at least. Not knowing any more about it than I do I am not prepared to say anything more about it.

I have presented the telegram, and it will appear in the RECORD, hoping that the attention of the State Department may be drawn to the subject.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have received a number of telegrams from various people and different organizations relating to our present relations with Germany. That is a matter which is in the hands of the executive department of the Government, and the situation is somewhat critical. I have not felt it to be wise or prudent to bring those matters before the Senate. I think the responsibility rests now with the President, and that he should be allowed to conduct negotiations as seems right to him.

I have therefore advised my correspondents who have been sending these telegrams that I do not think it is a time when we should indulge in criticisms; that we had better await developments and see what comes of the negotiatons that are being carried on by the proper department of the Government.

I say this because similar telegrams have been submitted here, and some of the people who have been appealing to me in various ways may feel that it is my duty to present the telegrams I have received. I want my position to be understood in that respect. I think it is a time when we should be careful about what we say, and careful about what we bring before the Senate calculated to inflame the public mind. There is agitation enough about it now, Mr. President, and I think we ought not to contribute to it. When the matter comes before the Senate, if it ever does, it should be ready to act upon it freely and independently.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BROUSSARD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5672) for the relief of sundry building and loan associations, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 384) thereon.

Mr. HARDING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 4212) for the relief of W. E. Thomas submitted an adverse report (No. 380) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1293) to reimburse the Farmers' Savings Bank of Brandon, Iowa, for currency destroyed by fire, submitted an adverse report (No. 379) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1429) for the relief of Artemus W. Pentz, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 383) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 147) for the relief of John W. Cupp (Rept. No. 381); and

A bill (S. 2543) for the relief of the State of Kentucky (Rept. No. 382).

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to which was referred the bill (S. 4060) to limit the effect of the regulation of interstate commerce between the States in goods, wares, and merchandise wholly or in part manufactured, mined, or produced by convict labor or in any prison or reformatory, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 385) thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 9909) to authorize the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River, and I submit a report (No. 378) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SNAKE RIVER BRIDGE, IDAHO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 11320) granting the consent of Congress to the Counties of Twin Falls and Minidoka, State of Idaho, to construct a bridge across Snake River, and I submit a report (No. 377) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LIEUT. ROY C. SMITH.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute Senate resolution 106, authorizing an investigation into the case of Lieut. Roy C. Smith, and I submit a report (No. 386) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to reopen and review the findings of the court of inquiry made in re Lieut. Roy C. Smith, formerly of the Asiatic Fleet, United States Navy, dated July 25, 1911, with the object of ascertaining whether these findings were based upon facts of established record, and to take and consider any additional evidence or facts which may be presented bearing on this case, and to render his findings on the whole record so made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (by request):

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a letter from ex-Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, dealing with certain public questions in a very moderate and candid way. It is brief, and I ask permission to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

COLORADO BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1916.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The military forces of the United States should not be withdrawn from Mexico until peace and order are fully restored and firmly reestablished throughout the whole territory of that Republic.

Political, industrial and social conditions were never so bad as now in that distracted country. They have been constantly growing worse for the last five years, and during all that time we have been morally responsible for these conditions—to Mexico, to our own people, and to the world. This is true whether the obligation grows out of the Monroe doctrine, the duty which a prosperous and powerful neighbor owes to its less fortunate neighbor under the general obligations of international law, or the dictates of the paramount sentiments of humanity which are the strongest of all laws.

These 12,000,000 peons and 3,000,000 chivalrous, cultured governing classes are our brethren. God only has made us to differ. We can help them, and must help them, even though they may not desire it and perhaps for a time will resent it.

Our southern boundary is Panama. With the Central American States we have and shall forever preserve relations of amity.

But with Mexico as she now is we can never reach the Isthmus by land until the full right of peaceable intercourse with the Isthmus by our military forces is perpetually secured to us.

With no adequate Navy (as yet), we are confronted by hostile nations or probable combinations of nations of greater sea power than our own on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and unless we have a navy on each ocean sufficiently powerful to stand off the navies of the world on both oceans how are we to defend and hold the canal if we can not march or transport our forces through Mexico, safe from the big guns of enemies on either or both oceans? And how if the canal is blockaded or closed by slides?

What Mexico might do we know from the way she deals with us in our effort to capture the bandit invader Villa.

We have watched and waited through the Taft mediation policy, and so far under the present administration, enduring murder and pillage of foreigners, and especially of our own citizens, until finally our own country was invaded and our trusty slumbering soldiers and civilians were shot down in midnight murder and their property and habitations looted and destroyed.

By every law, human and divine, it was our plain duty to pursue and capture the bandit and his men. It was nothing but an excess of politeness, approaching the serio comic, to ask the consent of Carranza at all; and now it is suggested that we get out and go away back home and sit down, leaving everything that has occurred and accumulated in the past unsettled and the future of Mexico and our relations with her ten times worse than ever.

No; it may prove to be a serious crisis, but we can not leave Mexico now without Villa, nor, in fact, without a complete and honorable settlement of everything involved in the past, with just indemnities and safeguards for the future. I have no fear of war with Germany. Let us prove to Mexico that we are her greatest and best friend. Put a common-school department into the Army bill and let Pershing establish one everywhere that he encamps until the war, if we have one, is over. That will do it, and will hasten the day when the intelligence of the people of all nations will abolish war—and there is no other way to do it. People will fight until the majority of them know better. God hasten the day when the children of all nations are in the common school.

Truly, yours, HENRY W. BLAIR.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12027) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Maine, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the following act:

S. 5229. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county commissioners of Warren County, Pa., to construct a bridge across the Allegheny River in the borough of Warren, county of Warren, in the State of Pennsylvania.

PENSIONS FOR SURVIVORS OF INDIAN WARS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further morning business, the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 264, being House bill 655, to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars—we will thereby begin with the Order of Business where we stopped when the calendar was last under consideration—and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of unobjected cases, under Rule VIII.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill (H. R. 655) to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 10, before the word "days," to strike out "ninety" and insert "thirty," so as to read:

That the provisions, limitations, and benefits of an act entitled "An act granting pensions to survivors of the Indian wars of 1832 to 1842, inclusive, known as the Black Hawk War, Creek War, Cherokee disturbances, and the Seminole War," approved July 27, 1892, as amended on February 19, 1913, be, and the same are hereby, extended from the date of the passage of this act to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Texas volunteers who served in defense of the frontier of that State against Indian depredations from January 1, 1859, to January 1, 1861, inclusive, and from the year 1866 to the year 1876, inclusive, and to the surviving officers and enlisted men, including militia and volunteers of the military service of the United States, who have reached the age of 62 years, and who served 30 days in the campaign in southern Oregon and Idaho and northern parts of California and Nevada from 1865 to 1868, inclusive, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 9, before the words "Black Hawk Indian," to insert "campaigns in the," so as to read:

The campaigns in the Black Hawk Indian war in Utah from 1865 to 1867, inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 23, after the word "remarried," to insert the following proviso:

Provided further, That this act shall extend also to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the organization known as Tyler's Rangers, recruited at Black Hawk, Colo., in 1864, for services against the Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 4, before the word "days," to strike out "ninety" and insert "thirty," so as to read:

Provided further, That if any certain one of the said campaigns did not cover a period of 30 days, the provisions of this act shall apply to those who served during the entire period of said campaign.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, line 20, after the words "military service," to insert:

Provided, That when there is no record of service or payment for same in the War Department or Treasury Department, the applicant may establish the service by satisfactory evidence from the muster rolls on file in the several State or Territorial archives: And provided further, That the want of a certificate of discharge shall not deprive any applicant of the benefits of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 3, as follows:

That section 4716 of the Revised Statutes, relating to loyalty during the Civil War, is hereby repealed so far as the same relates to this act or to pensioners under this act.

And insert:

That the provisions of section 4716 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to applicants for pension under this act.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to know what are the provisions of section 4716 of the Revised Statutes which this amendment proposes shall not apply to applicants for pension under this act.

Mr. SMOOT. It simply means that the statute in reference to the loyalty of citizens shall not apply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. In section 1, page 2, line 6, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, page 2, line 6, after the word "year," it is proposed to strike out the date "1876" and to insert "1877."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before we finally act on this bill, I think that those of us who do not know what it covers should be informed as to how many persons are likely to be affected by it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, in 1892, I think, the first pension bill was enacted relative to the survivors of Indian wars. That bill applied to all the survivors of the Modoc War. Later similar provisions were extended to the survivors of the Seminole War, and still later similar provisions were applied to survivors of other Indian campaigns. In this bill provisions similar to those which were enacted in 1892 in regard to the survivors of the Modoc War are made to apply to the survivors of other Indian campaigns.

It is impossible to ascertain the number of pensioners who would be covered by this bill, but the number of such survivors who are now pensioned under acts which have been passed in favor of the survivors of Indian campaigns is very small. My recollection is that it embraces only some 700 or 800 pensioners. Inquiry at the Bureau of Pensions elicited no information as to the number who would be likely to be covered by this proposed legislation. It extends to all who took part in any of the campaigns on the western frontier.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if there is an enrollment any place to show who these men were?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say to the Senator that they are all enrolled either in the archives of the department at Washington or in the archives of the respective States. We have made the provisions of the bill apply not only to those who are shown to have been enrolled by the Government records but also to those shown to have been enrolled in the different States.

Mr. OVERMAN. They must either, then, have been enrolled according to the records of the Government or of the States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. And none of the survivors can draw pensions under this bill if they are not enrolled in one place or the other. Is that the fact?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The matter of enrollment must be shown either by the Federal archives or by the State archives.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the right to secure pensions under this bill limited to those who are enrolled?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I so understand; yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is there any limitation as to the length of time they must have served? Suppose a man only served a week?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. The man must have served for 30 days or during the campaign for which he enlisted.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator having charge of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. What amount of money from the Treasury will this bill require?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, I have already stated, in answer to that question——

Mr. THOMAS. I just came into the Chamber a moment ago and did not hear the Senator's explanation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That we are unable to state the amount, but the number of pensioners under similar acts to-day is only about 800. The Pension Bureau, however, is unable to make any estimate as to the number who would be covered by this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Colorado that as to some of the wars or campaigns mentioned in the bill, it is known that there are only two or three survivors living to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely want to ascertain how we are legislating, whether we are legislating intelligently or whether we are appropriating money without any information, definite or otherwise, as to the amount to be required from the Treasury to meet this added obligation. In other words, are we proceeding with regard to this bill as we seem to be proceeding with regard to other bills appropriating money from the Treasury for private purposes?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was detained from the Chamber until just this moment. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the men who served during these wars who were not enlisted by the General Government but were in the service of the States are to partake of this bounty?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I will say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Mississippi, that not only those who were enrolled as shown by the Federal archives but also those who were enrolled as shown by the State archives will receive the benefit of this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What will be the amount paid under the bill? I regret I have not had an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. I find that the committee in the House estimated—I do not know that they had any information from the department, because we asked for information but could not obtain any—that the number of names to be added to the pension roll under this bill would be 5,000, and that the expenditure would not exceed a million dollars.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What will be the per capita payment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. It is impossible to state.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I mean at what rate will they be paid? Will they be paid as other pensioners are paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Twenty dollars a month is the amount of pension allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there are no further amendments, the amendments concurred in will be ordered engrossed——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to have a little more information about the extension of the benefits of this bill to men other than those who enlisted in the Federal service. The limitation provided seems to be a very indefinite one.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the bill is safeguarded in every way, so far as it is possible to safeguard it. It applies to Indian war veterans who served in the early days, when Indian uprisings occurred and the Indians went on the war path. I know of one case where there are only two or three survivors left of the whole number who were engaged in the war. These men, Mr. President, in order to protect the citizens of the State during Indian uprisings entered the service. The State has a record of their service and of the organizations in which they served, and no man can get a pension under the bill unless it is shown from the archives either of the War Department or of the State that he rendered service. The bill simply grants pensions to a few veterans of Indian wars who are not pensioned at the present time. The veterans of all the other Indian campaigns have been pensioned.

Under this bill a service of 30 days is required. We have exactly followed in this bill former pension laws, and I ask the Senator, because I know that the bill is just, not to object to its consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the bill involves a million-dollar charge upon the Federal Treasury, not merely for one year, but to continue for quite a length of time, as long as these men live. They are to be granted pensions for 30 days' service, not a service to the National Government in all cases, but they can be pensioned if their names appear on the lists in the archives of the State. I do not understand that the bill really limits the service required to 30 days.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the bill says that 30 days' service must have been rendered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, the bill requires a service of 30 days, or a service during the campaign. If the campaign lasted less than 30 days, that is covered by the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, it applies to a man who has served 10 days, if that was the length of time of the campaign.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment to say that many of these campaigns only lasted 30 days? In some of them—in Oregon, for instance, where the Indians went through the State with lightning rapidity—the men who rendered service against them were enlisted in the State's service and supplemented the efforts of the Federal troops, and sometimes acted without the assistance of the Federal troops. No set of men ever rendered their country a more patriotic service than these pioneer Indian fighters, and I think I can safely say, without disparagement to the Regular Army, that in many cases it could not have prevailed but for the assistance it received from the Volunteers. Many of them were young men at the time. Most of them were men in middle life.

It was suggested awhile ago that they were simply defending their own homes. That is not true. They were called from every portion of Oregon to the eastern part of the State, where they not only had no personal interests, but where they did not even know the people. They simply answered the call of the State authorities for volunteers to go and take care of the interests of the people there.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator, also, that so far as the Black Hawk War was concerned, Gen. Sherman telegraphed and told the State authorities to call out the troops. The force was organized under his orders. They had no United States soldiers there to defend them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to state for the benefit of the Senate that this bill only covers two regiments who served from the State of Kansas. The Eighteenth Kansas, which served from June 13, 1867, to November 15, 1867, and had full four months' service. The Nineteenth Kansas were mustered into the United States service October 20, 1868, and served until April 18, 1869, and had full six months' service; both regiments served on the frontier and in the suppression of Indian hostilities. The reports of the War Department showed that they served in all kinds of weather, and that their supply trains were stampeded, and that they were in a number of engagements with the Indians. Several Indian chiefs were taken prisoners, and the Indians were forced to return to their reservations. These statements are based upon the reports in the War Department, and not from the State alone, and are based upon the reports of the Government officers who were in charge of these two regiments. I know that the shortest service was four months, and the other regiment served six months.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as I understand, this is not a pension for injury in the line of duty. This is a service pension. It is in no way limited to men who received injuries in the line of duty.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that there is not an Indian war pension that is any different than this. It was a reward for a service that was rendered for those parts of the country that were infested with Indians. I want to say to the Senator that, as far as the lives were concerned, there were more lives lost in those Indian wars in proportion to the number that were engaged than there were even in the Civil War.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If lives were lost, I believe in liberally providing for their widows. If they were really injured in the service, I believe in compensating them; but because a man enlisted and went out for 10 days, I do not believe in putting him permanently on a service roll to be a charge at $12 a month on the rest of the people of the country for the remainder of his life.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the department reports that there is only one case where the service was under 30 days, and, as I remember, that was 29 days. I will ask the Senator from Maine if that was not the case?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. That is true. The only campaign that lasted less than 30 days lasted 29 days.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But they did not have to be out in it all the time. They may have enlisted in the latter part. They may not have gotten really close enough to the Indians to be shot at.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I think they did.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it were just a million dollars, and then were over, I would not object to it; but they come on our roll permanently, at an expense of a million dollars a year, as long as they live. I understood from the Senator from Maine that it had been calculated that it would cost a million dollars a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will pardon me, I said that we got no information from the department, which is true, but the House estimated that it would cost a million dollars.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Georgia is away behind the times if he objects to paying a pension to a man unless he was wounded or became diseased. We are now removing the disabilities of deserters and putting them upon the pension rolls.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, or any other Senator who has information on the subject, if they have reason to believe that this will be the last bill for Indian-war survivors who rendered some service to the Government a great many years ago?

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry I will say that it would seem that we have covered all the Indian campaigns by name in this bill. Of course I can not give assurance as to what may be asked in the future.

Mr. GALLINGER. I asked the question for the reason that I feel quite confident that while I served as chairman of the Committee on Pensions we passed at least three bills, in each case having the assurance that that took care of all the remaining survivors of these Indian campaigns.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then I think this bill had better go over, and let us find out whether or not this is the last.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am very much opposed to paying it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will guarantee to the Senator from Georgia that it will be the last, because the department has named all of the campaigns.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not say this in hostility to the bill. I have voted very liberally for pensions, as everybody knows, and I have wanted to be generous toward these men, who undoubtedly did imperil their lives for 30 days without authority of law; but we ought to stop somewhere. I will make the further observation that I have always had a suspicion that there were some industrious men gathering up these names and creating these rolls for the purpose of getting what we sometimes call a "rake-off." As we have guarded other bills against that class of men, I am going to offer an amendment to this bill to the effect that no part of the appropriation shall be used for the payment of commissions to pension attorneys or others.

Mr. SMOOT. There is such a provision already.

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine. If the Senator will pardon me, there is already such a provision in the bill. It appears on page 4:

That all contracts heretofore made between the beneficiaries under this act and pension attorneys and claim agents are hereby declared null and void.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well; that covers the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think we ought to know what names are on these rolls from the State, and know what we are voting, before we vote for it. I do want to know these things before the bill is acted upon; and as I have the power now to stop it for the present, I stop it by objecting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DIRECTORS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The bill (S. 4256) to amend section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to permit national banks located near the boundary line of adjoining States, subject to the discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency, to select only a majority, instead of three-fourths, of their directors from residents of the State in which they are respectively located, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill has been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments, on page 2, line 12, after the word "within," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty"; in line 16, after the word "director," to strike out "unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $25,000, in which case he must own in his own right at least five shares of such capital stock"; and in line 19, after the words "owner of," to strike out "the required number of" and insert "ten," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5146 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5146. Every director must, during his whole term of service, be a citizen of the United States and at least three-fourths of the directors must have resided in the State, Territory, or District in which the association is located for at least one year immediately preceding their election and must be residents therein during their continuance in office: Provided, That whenever an association is located in a place within 5 miles of the boundary line of an adjoining State, the Comptroller of the Currency may, in his discretion, authorize such association to select, if it desires so to do, instead of three-fourths, only a majority of its directors from the State in which it is located: Provided further, That at least one-fourth of the other directors are residents of the said adjoining State and reside within 50 miles of the corporate limits of the city, town, or village in which the said bank is located. Every director must own in his own right at least 10 shares of the capital stock of the association of which he is a director. Any director who ceases to be the owner of 10 shares of the stock, or who becomes in any other manner disqualified, shall thereby vacate his place."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator who reported the bill is present; but I suggest that, in line 20, page 2, the words "at least" should be inserted, so that it will read "any director who ceases to be the owner of at least 10 shares of the stock." I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SINKING FUND FOR REDUCTION OF NATIONAL DEBT.

The bill (S. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion surplus moneys in the Treasury in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal all provisions of existing law requiring the establishment and maintenance of a sinking fund for the reduction of the debt of the United States, and in lieu thereof authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to use at his discretion the surplus moneys in the Treasury, from time to time, or such portion thereof as he may deem proper, in the purchase or redemption of the outstanding interest-bearing obligations of the United States, and provides that the obligations so purchased or redeemed shall be canceled and retired and their respective amounts shall be deducted from the outstanding principal of the public debt.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Utah whether there are any surplus funds in the Treasury that are not yet appropriated?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; the object of the bill is to repeal a law that has been violated from the day it was enacted. I suppose the Senator knows what the law is that we are undertaking to repeal. It requires that 1 per cent of all the revenues collected in our customhouses should be set aside as a fund to redeem the indebtedness of the United States. I will say to the Senator, however, that there has been a great deal more than 1 per cent of the national debt paid since that time, but it never has been done in conformity with the law; and the department wants this law repealed so that it will not hereafter be violated for 365 days in the year.

Mr. THOMAS. From what the Senator says I think we ought to pass the bill. His explanation is plausible.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Utah if this applies to the sinking fund?

Mr. SMOOT. The law that we are undertaking to repeal provided a sinking fund, requiring 1 per cent of the customs receipts to be set aside as a sinking fund to pay the debt of the United States; but from the day it was passed it has never been lived up to. In other words, they paid no attention to the 1 per cent or the 2 per cent, and whenever they have had the money to do so they have paid the obligations of the Government. The department therefore believes the law ought to be repealed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Utah if there is any reason for repealing the existing law except that it has been violated?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity for it to-day. The law was passed at a time when the Government of the United States had very little credit, and the people who loaned money to the United States insisted that there be a sinking fund established, and the law was passed with that in view. As I say to the Senator, there is no real necessity for it now. The Government pay no attention to it. If they have the money, they pay the obligations of the United States; and there is no necessity, as far as the credit of the Government is concerned, for having it remain on the statute books. Not only has the present Secretary of the Treasury asked that it be repealed, but former Secretaries of the Treasury have asked to have it repealed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I have no doubt that that recommendation has been made; in fact, I know it has been made; but I think the law is a good one, and one that should be carried out by the Secretaries of the Treasury. No indebtedness should be issued by the Government, or by a municipality, payment of which is not provided for when the indebtedness is issued.

I not only think this law ought to remain on the statute books, but I think it ought to be enforced. Otherwise, we may from time to time go on incurring indebtedness and making no provision for its payment, and pile up in the end an indebtedness which might be embarrassing to the Government.

Indebtedness is always incurred for a specific purpose. As time goes on, instead of continuing it it should be paid off in some way, and there is no better way known than by establishing a sinking fund or issuing serial bonds.

Mr. WARREN. That old indebtedness has all been paid. The indebtedness of to-day is paid in the regular way, and the purpose for which this fund was created no longer exists. In following out this now we would have to appropriate, say, $60,000,000 a year, and it would, if the law were strictly construed, lie in the Treasury unusued, because it does not specifically pay any particular bonds, while the repeal of this law would leave funds so that they could be used in any proper manner.

Mr. SMOOT. And they always have been used by the department.

Mr. WEEKS. Let me ask the Senator from Wyoming a question. Would he be in favor of the passage of a bill which would apply to the present national indebtedness and would pay off a certain percentage of it every year?

Mr. WARREN. Not unless it became due or unless the action of Congress required it.

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, well, there are something like three hundred millions of our indebtedness that can be called at any time, bearing 3 per cent interest.

Mr. WARREN. If we have a surplus that is unused, it can be paid from that. Does the Senator mean that we should immediately levy a tax to pay a debt that is not yet due and at a time following the low-tariff legislation of the Democratic Party and now in the face of greatly increased military expenditures?

Mr. WEEKS. I think that should be done. I think every year some part of our income should be set aside to pay our debts. I do not think there is any other course that conforms to good finance.

Mr. SMOOT. If that were necessary to give the United States credit in order to borrow money at a low rate of interest, I would be in favor of it, but the position of the United States to-day and for the last 40 years has been such that no such necessity exists in order that she may borrow money at the lowest possible rate of interest. Therefore, Mr. President, I think myself that the existing law is useless. It does no good. It does not strengthen the credit of the United States, and if it were lived up to it would work a detriment to the United States.

Mr. WARREN. It would result in having a lot of idle money.

Mr. SMOOT. Because there would be piled up in the Treasury of the United States every day a lot of money as the customs dues are collected.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, there could be piled up in the Treasury money that could be used to retire the 3 per cent bonds which are outstanding. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

H. P. BALDWIN AND OTHERS.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the other day when we were considering the calendar I made some objection to House bill 6241, Order of Business No. 145, and entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. I wish to state that I have no objection to the enactment of this legislation. I wanted to insert a provision giving Congress at any time the power to repeal the act; but upon examination of the law, I find that the following provision is in the original act, which, with the permission of the Chair, I will read:

SEC. 11. That Congress, or the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, with the approval of Congress, may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act.

I therefore ask to withdraw my motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota withdraws his motion to reconsider, and the bill stands passed.

DUTY ON SUGAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is so near the hour of 1 o'clock that under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill (H. R. 11471) to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply rose to ask that under the unanimous-consent agreement the order of the Senate may be proceeded with.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am opposed to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate shall recede from its amendment to the House bill, and because I am so opposed and expect to vote against it I feel it incumbent upon me to undertake to give to the Senate and to the country some of the reasons which impel me to adopt that course.

Mr. President, when the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill was passed three years ago it contained among its provisions a provision reducing the duty on sugar 25 per cent, and providing that at the expiration of three years from May 1 following its passage, or from May 1, 1916, sugar should be admitted to the United States free of duty.

Previous to that time in the so-called schedule bills of the preceding Congress the House of Representatives by an overwhelming majority, by a vote in which many Republicans had joined with practically every Democrat, had placed sugar on the free list. That bill came to this body, then in the control of the Republican Party, and here, of course, it died an untimely death.

So when the Underwood-Simmons bill undertook to provide for the admission of sugar free of duty, with the single exception of the proviso for delay, it followed not only the lead of the Democratic House of the previous Congress but also, as I propose to show, it followed express and explicit Democratic pledges.

To the delay of three years carried in that bill I was opposed. It did not rest, according to my opinion then and according to my judgment now, on sound grounds. If we had promised such relief to the consuming masses of this Republic, if we had promised to leave untaxed this great necessity of life, then there was absolutely no good and valid reason suggested or urged at the time for a three years' postponement of the redemption of the pledge.

It was not insisted then that necessity for governmental revenue afforded such reason. The delay did not rest then on any such basis. It rested, according to the statements and arguments of its proponents, upon a different proposition, namely, that certain interests in this country, some in the South and some in the West, that had long enjoyed the benefits of this protective duty, should have a reasonable time to prepare themselves to do without it, a reasonable time to adjust their private affairs to the policy that the Government of the United States was unwilling to continue a tax upon this food necessity.

The three years have come and gone. Late in the summer or early in the fall the present Secretary of the Treasury announced, disposing of the subject in a phrase almost, that the governmental necessity in the way of revenue required that the tax on sugar should be retained, undertaking to set up his will, his opinion, and his judgment against the express and explicit pledges of a great party. That he should be permitted to carry out such a policy not only surprises me but shocks me. That he should be allowed to so lightly set aside the pledge and plighted word of the Democratic Party is beyond my comprehension.

When the House bill, framed in accordance with his recommendations, reached this body it seemed that the very best thing that could be done by Senators who were opposed to such a surrender was to put another time limitation on it. So the Senate amended this bill so as to provide that there should be another postponement of four years of time before sugar should be admitted free of duty. It was not a pleasant thing for some of us who had labored long and hard in this country for free sugar to consent to this further delay. There were reasons why we did not regard it as necessary. There were other sources from which the needed revenue could be obtained for the Government, and there was another way in which a double amount of revenue could be obtained from this very article with no additional burden on consumption. We thought that one or the other of those two plans ought to be followed, but Democratic Senators generally, feeling that nothing better than the Senate amendment could be secured out of this Congress, proposed the amendment from which the Senator from North Carolina now proposes to recede.

What has happened? The Senator from North Carolina and his conferees and the Senate met exactly the expected opposition, faced exactly the situation we all understood when we agreed to the Senate amendment, and were exactly in the position that they knew they were to start on. Yet, without firing a shot, without a battle for the Senate position, deliberately—of course, I am not personally criticizing; I presume it was their right—but deliberately surrendered the position that the Senate had taken only a few days before. Why did we take that position if we were so ready to quit it? Why did we assert such a proposition if we were so eager to abandon it?

Mr. President, I read from the San Francisco Chronicle of March 17, 1916, an editorial headed "A unanimous Congress":

> The repeal of the free-sugar clause in the Underwood-Simmons Tariff Act is now on its smooth and joyful course through Congress, with the approval of practically the entire membership.
>
> Two or three middle of the roaders raised feeble voices of protest in the House, which, however, were drowned in the general acclaim. Congressman BAILEY, of Pennsylvania, said to especially represent the views of William Jennings Bryan, lamented that while it was true that the money from the sugar duty was sadly needed it would not have been needed at all if the Democrats had reduced the national expenses to the size of the national income.
>
> And that is, of course, true, and, in view of the lurid denunciation of Government extravagance which appeared in the Bryan-written platform on which President Wilson was elected, perhaps Congressman BAILEY had reason to jab his brother Democrats.
> A Colorado Congressman—probably not from a beet-growing district—

By the way, the paper was wrong about this, for, be it said to the enternal credit of this Congressman, his was one of the largest beet-growing districts in the West and the second largest in his own great State—> declared that it was an outrage to levy a tax which would be divided evenly "between the Government and the Sugar Trust."

>
> The poor Sugar Trust does not seem to have any friends. If there is one thing which the Sugar Trust has fought and is still fighting, tooth and nail, it is a duty of any kind on sugar.

By the way, Mr. President, I pause here just a moment to say that at the proper time I shall demonstrate the utter ignorance or willful falsity of the man who made that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I have certain ground that I want to cover and then I will yield to him.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

Mr. HARDWICK (reading)—

> In the bad old days it contributed oodles of money to the Democratic campaign funds in the forlorn hope of getting sugar on the free list.

Another willful misrepresentation. As a matter of fact, the Sugar Trust did contribute money to the Republican Party in at least one campaign, and also attempted to contribute to the Democratic Party, but had its contribution to the Democratic Party returned unaccepted, as the sworn evidence before a special committee of the House of Representatives demonstrated.

Mr. SMOOT. They contributed to the last campaign.

Mr. HARDWICK. The American Sugar Refining Co.?

Mr. SMOOT. Not the American Sugar Refining Co., but Mr. Spreckels and his associates.

Mr. HARDWICK. I have let the Senator interrupt me. That is one of the fallacies that his speech proposes to disclose. The Sugar Trust is the American Sugar Refining Co. Mr. Spreckels is one of the independent refiners, and he has always fought the Sugar Trust and has always contended for free sugar. Somehow or other I am never suspicious of an alleged so-called or miscalled trust that does not want the Government to let it put its hands in the pockets of the people by levying a tax. I am not suspicious of a man who asks no governmental favors and needs no tax to support his industry or run his business. He certainly is not asking any special favor at the hands of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. His representatives, however, have asked for half a cent a pound duty on sugar, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the Senator's pardon. This is one subject I am absolutely familiar with, and I must correct the Senator when he is in error. On the contrary, Mr. Spreckels himself always contended for free sugar.

Mr. SMOOT. So that the record may——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. So that the record may appear as it has been presented to the Senate, I want to say that Mr. Lowry, the representative of Mr. Spreckels, has time and again appeared before the Finance Committee in hearings and asked that a duty of half a cent a pound be put upon sugar. I do not want to take the time now, but——

Mr. HARDWICK. I would rather yield after I get through, but if the Senator insists I will yield as I go along.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not take the time because it would take too long, but I will state that it is well understood why they want one-half cent per pound duty.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is usually accurate in any statement he makes to the Senate. The Senator is partially incorrect in the statement he now makes. It is true that on at least one occasion the gentleman to whom he refers did say that his personal opinion was that half a cent a pound duty on sugar would be better, but he has never advocated it, he has never urged it, and every time I have heard the subject discussed before any committee of Congress before whom he testified he has insisted on letting Congress or the committee know that that was his individual opinion and did not reflect the sentiment of the concern by whom he was employed. Mr. Spreckels, as the Senator from Utah knows, has long stood out as the most conspicuous advocate of free sugar on the American continent. In other words, he asks no bounty at the hands of the American Government, he asks no tax with which to run his business or to make his profit. Yet these gentlemen speak of him as the Sugar Trust. The Sugar Trust, as I shall demonstrate to the Senator from Utah later, has always demanded a duty on sugar and stands to-day, if my advice is correct for a duty on sugar. So the Senator need not console himself with the pleasing reflection that if he favors the House bill without amendment he is parting company with the Sugar Trust. He is with them still.

This article from the San Francisco paper continues:

> Now that at last its fondest hopes seemed to have been realized it is cruel that a brother Democrat should accuse it of being a beneficiary of their blasting. The Congressman from Colorado, however, was in error. The Government will get the entire duty on sugar, and will not divide with anybody.
> The Sugar Trust fights all duties on sugar solely from an unholy desire to put an end to the beet-sugar industry once for all. If beet sugar continues—

Just here let me pause to say that that statement is made out of the profound depths of an ignorance that is amusing. I should not have read the editorial at all if it had not had something later in it to which I wish to refer. The Sugar Trust owns a large per cent of the stocks of the western beet-sugar companies, not as large as they once did, I admit, yet a very material percentage of the stocks of most of those companies when the totals are footed up. So the paper makes the absurd mistake of saying the Sugar Trust, the American Sugar Refining Co., wants to destroy the beet-sugar industry, of which it is the principal stock owner.

> If beet sugar—

The article continues—

> is to be encouraged as it has been under Republican administration the Sugar Trust magnates well know that internal competition will within a few years make their own business extremely precarious.

I invite the attention of the Senator from Utah to that statement. As a matter of fact, in 1830 we produced twice as much of the consumption of sugar in this country in continental United States as we produce to-day. With all your forcing of the beet industry you neither lowered the price, compared to other countries and conditions in other parts of the world, nor have you increased the volume of the product relative to the consumption of the country. The very reverse is true. The article continues:

Upon the whole, however, our Democratic friends in Congress are to be commended for the cheerfulness and even gusto with which nearly all of them tackle their dish of crow. We all know they do not hanker for it. Indeed, they hate the very sight of it. They eat it simply because they must eat it or starve.

And when we see them almost as one man step briskly and smilingly to the counter and jab their forks into the detested bird, one hardly knows whether he should express tearful sympathy for suffering martyrs or uproarious admiration for dead game sports.

Anyhow, the beet-sugar industry is to go on.

Mr. President, without burdening this body with a purely theoretical discussion of tariff principles, there are one or two fundamental and ancient Democratic tariff principles which I think ought to be called to the attention of this body and to the attention of the country, not that I have any hope that it can now change the situation here or can alter the immediate result, but in the hope that it may bring Democrats everywhere back once more to the solid ground of the fundamentals upon which their faith on this question rests, because for one I do not believe, for one I do not concede, that the Democratic Party is afraid of its position on the tariff question and finds it necessary to avoid issue with the Republicans on that question in order to win this or any other election. If there is one distinctive issue on which the parties are at variance, it is the tariff, and if there are fundamental principles that are utterly and irreconcilably at variance between the parties on any one question it is on this tariff question. The issue can neither be dodged nor soft-pedaled, and why any Democrat should wish to do either is more than I can understand. The Democratic tariff position is right, and if we abandon it we will court a certain defeat, and, what is more, will deserve it.

And yet to-day, Mr. President, sometimes in this body and sometimes elsewhere, we hear echoed such sentiments as this: "Oh, while we are levying a tariff for revenue, of course we have got to take care of the industries and business of the country"—not accidental protection, hardly incidental protection, but protection on purpose, protection meted out not for governmental purposes and not for revenue purposes, but for selfish purposes.

Ah, gentlemen, I beseech my colleagues on this side, yield to no such heresy. Do you think the consumer at home will care what reason you give when you vote for these protective duties? What does the man at home who has to build a house care if I stand on this side of the Chamber and vote, for instance, for a $2 duty on lumber, and say, "I do it for revenue purposes," and a Republican stands on the other side of the Chamber and votes for the same identical amount of duty and says he does it for protection purposes? The man who has to pay the bill will care precious little for the reasons that animate you or me or for the motives that control your vote or mine. It is results he is looking for.

So I say, for one, although I should stand absolutely alone, I repudiate any such doctrine as this incidental and accidental protection that we hear nowadays once in a while proclaimed from high sources. It is not the ancient faith of my party; it is not its fundamental doctrine.

Mr. President, the first time after the Civil War that the fires of sectional hate and of sectional prejudice were low enough to permit a real political battle in this country, on the first occasion when we got far enough away from reconstruction and its horrors and its prejudices to have a real political battle in this country, we nominated a great Democrat, whom every Democrat in this country believes we elected President in 1876—Samuel J. Tilden. Let me read you, my party associates on this floor, just one short sentence from the ringing declaration of principles upon which we made that great fight for that great Democrat. I read from the Democratic national platform of that year as follows:

We denounce the present tariff, levied upon nearly 4,000 articles, as a masterpiece of injustice, inequality, and false pretense. It yields a swindling, not a yearly rising revenue. It has impoverished many industries to subsidize a few. It prohibits imports that might purchase the products of American labor. It has degraded American commerce from the first to an inferior rank on the high seas. It has cut down the sales of American manufactures at home and abroad, and depleted the returns of American agriculture—an industry followed by half our people. It costs the people five times more than it produces to the Treasury, obstructs the processes of production, and wastes the fruits of labor. It promotes fraud, fosters smuggling, enriches dishonest officials, and bankrupts honest merchants. We demand that all customhouse taxation shall be only for revenue.

There is no incidental protection or accidental protection there.

Again in 1892, when the first Democrat that we had elected since the Civil War had been defeated after serving one term, we renominated that great Democrat for President—Grover Cleveland. We made a distinctive tariff fight. I want to read you from the declaration of principles upon which we then went to the American people.

SEC. 3. We denounce Republican protection as a fraud—a robbery of the great majority of the American people for the benefit of the few. We declare it to be a fundamental principle of the Democratic Party that the Federal Government has no constitutional power to impose and collect tariff duties except for the purposes of revenue only, and we demand that the collection of such taxes shall be limited to the necessities of the Government when honestly and economically administered.

There is no incidental or accidental protection there. Ah, gentlemen, I can go to an even later period. I can refer you to the platform of 1912, upon which we won the last election. You will find substantially repeated—I will not stop to read it now—the same declaration of principles that we made when we elected Tilden in 1876; that we made when we first elected Cleveland in 1884, and again made when we reelected him in 1892.

Not only that, but there is another latter-day heresy that I wish to combat as far as my feeble powers will permit. Gentlemen are saying in both Houses of Congress and outside of Congress—and especially outside of Congress—and especially those who think they will profit thereby, that they believe in some protection on everything; that they could write the free list for which they are willing to vote on their thumb nails. And that is said to be sound Democratic doctrine. If it is, I shall have to unlearn on this question all the Democracy I was ever taught, for I was taught that one of the fundamental Democratic principles was that a tariff should be levied in this way: First, either no tax at all, or the very lightest possible tax upon the food necessities and upon all the necessities of life generally; second, a moderate tax, and a moderate tax only, upon the comforts of life; and, third, the highest tax consistent with revenue purposes upon the luxuries of life. I think I can demonstrate, Mr. President, to the Senate and to the country that that is not only my individual view, but that it is ancient and fundamental and accurate Democratic faith. I am not going back any further than recent platforms to show authority for that proposition. Here is what we advocated in 1884, when we elected Grover Cleveland:

Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest and principal of the public debt, can be got under our present system of taxation from the customhouse taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

In the Democratic Campaign Book, prepared for the campaign of 1912, which was sent out through this country, especially to Democratic speakers and Democratic newspapers, in referring to the record of the preceding House of Representatives, a majority of which was Democratic, we said:

It—

Referring to the House of Representatives—

has made an excellent record in revising the tariff downward to a revenue basis, having passed measures thus affecting the schedules of most vital moment to the people, namely, wool, cotton, metal, chemical, and has placed sugar and other necessary food products on free list.

It was on that declaration of principles that we asked the American people to support us in the last election.

Mr. President, in 1914 there was another general declaration on this subject in the campaign book we then sent out to the American voters. We said by way of encomium upon ourselves:

It—

The Democratic tariff law—

reduces the duties formerly paid on sugar and abolishes the duty entirely in 1916.

That was when we were asking to have this very Congress elected. We said again:

It abolishes all duties on meats, fish, dairy products, flour, potatoes, coal, iron ore, lumber, and upon many classes of farm machinery and office equipment.

In other words, we were boasting that we had carried out the ancient Democratic doctrine of placing articles of prime necessity upon the free list.

Mr. President, no man acquainted with the industry can dispute for one moment the proposition that sugar is an article of prime food necessity. Without undertaking to go at length into a dissertation upon that subject, I think I can show that all medical and health experts agree to that proposition. It has been insisted in some quarters, in this Chamber and elsewhere, that a great percentage of the sugar consumed in this country went into the manufacture of confectionery, ice-cream soda, and such articles as that, and gentlemen therefore sometimes assert that sugar is not one of the articles of prime necessity of life.

It is not a fact that the larger per cent of our sugar goes into these manufactures. As a matter of fact, two-thirds of the sugar consumed in this country—or practically that percentage—is consumed directly upon the table, and in its direct refined form, the people eating it, whereas about one-third of the total consumption of sugar enters into the manufactures I have mentioned and other kindred manufactures. For instance, the per capita consumption of sugar in the United States in 1910 was 81 pounds; and the greatest experts in this country say that careful investigation shows that of the 81 pounds consumed per capita in that year 53 pounds were directly consumed and the remainder only went into manufactures. Senators can figure the percentage for themselves.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to recent Democratic utterances on this subject of sugar.

First, I read from the platform of 1912. In commending the schedule bills that had been passed by Congress, which was in session at the time the Baltimore convention convened, our party in its national platform used this language:

> We call the attention of the patriotic citizens of our country to its record—
>
> Referring to the House of Representatives—
> of efficiency, economy, and constructive legislation.
> It has, among other achievements, revised the Rules of the House of Representatives. * * *
> It has passed bills for the relief of the people and the development of our country; it has endeavored to revise the tariff taxes downward in the interest of the consuming masses, and thus to reduce the high cost of living.

Mr. President, there can be no doubt that the Democratic national platform in 1912 indorsed the free-sugar bill passed that year by the House of Representatives. Gentlemen may contend that certain transactions that occurred in the privacy of a committee room might tend to show otherwise; but I dispute the soundness of that view or the accuracy of that conclusion. In the first place, all the convention knew and all the great masses of the American voters knew was the Democratic platform as it was written and as it read; and, in rebuttal of the statement made by my good friend, the distinguished senior senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], the other day on the subject, I called attention to the fact that during the last session of Congress the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], himself a distinguished and prominent member of our party and chairman of the Baltimore convention, gave testimony in direct contravention to the understanding of the Senator from Louisiana, and stated to this body and to the American people that there could be no doubt that that convention had pledged the Democratic Party to the cause of free sugar. Not only that, but I will refer to the contemporaneous construction of Congress and call to mind that the Congress which passed the Underwood-Simmons bill as soon as the election was over, while the platform pledges were fresh in our minds, put sugar on the free list, although this vexatious delay of three years was agreed to. When the delay of three years was proposed I warned my colleagues then that if they acceded to that delay the chances for free sugar would be very much less; that either something would happen or some pretext would be given to renew this fight in the interest of the people who get a bounty out of this system of taxation on this great article of food necessity; and you see what has happened.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the Senator briefly or I will yield to him later at any length as soon as I can cover some ground which I desire to cover.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I merely want to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Georgia in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield; yes, sir.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What I desire to say will take only a minute. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact—I know he does not want to make any statement that is not borne out absolutely by the facts—that the Senator from Kentucky, while a very prominent member of the convention at Baltimore, being permanent chairman of that convention, in his address declared for free sugar specifically by name, following that declaration of the chairman of the convention the committee on resolutions reported the platform, the chairman of the convention, the Senator from Kentucky, at no time taking part in either the drafting of the platform or in the preliminaries or the argument in behalf of the platform to be submitted and adopted by the convention.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is true enough, Mr. President; but the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, the permanent chairman of that great convention, ought at least to have had as much ordinary comprehension of what was happening and what the platform meant as the average Democratic masses or as the average American voter had; and if the Senator from Kentucky, the chairman of that great convention, could not know about these cloak-room conferences, how on earth could the Democratic masses or the American voters know about them, and of what real importance are they?

Now, let us see. Not only that, but one of our greatest achievements—the one that we boasted most about—was the routing of the sugar lobby here in the last Congress. Why, when we went to the people of the United States in 1914, in the congressional election, we devoted page upon page to the exploitation of that great achievement. We told about how they had misused the franks of distinguished and illustrious Senators who are still Members of this body. We told about how a gentleman named Mr. Oxnard had gotten rich out of capitalizing the tariff and turning his watered stock into good, hard cash at the expense of the consuming public. We told all the details about the feverish and unnatural and reprehensible activities of this lobby that was here to fight free sugar.

Ah, Senators, I have been informed that many years ago a great Senator from Missouri stood on this floor, when Jackson had beaten one of the bank bills, and there was exultation on the Democratic side of the Chamber over the accomplishment of that much-desired result, and the boast was made: "We have driven this beast to the jungle." Benton replied: "Yes; you may have driven her to the jungle, but she will return from the jungle with all her whelps."

His words were prophetic in that case; and without change they could well be applied to all we have said and boasted about the sugar lobby, and our exposé of it, and our relief of the people of the United States from the enormous burdens and exactions that are imposed upon the consuming public by means of the tax on sugar.

Mr. President, it is insisted that we must have this duty because the Government needs it, because the Government can not get along without it; that we must prepare for war in order that we may maintain peace; that we must have a larger Army and a greater Navy, and can get the needed revenue in no other way. Sir, if that were true, and absolutely true, however much I regretted to do it, I would vote for the motion now presented by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. But I insist that it is not true, either in form or in substance, that we are obliged to levy this tax for the purpose of governmental revenue, and I will tell you why.

Do we need revenue, and revenue only, with no incidental or accidental protection, from schedule E, the sugar tariff? If we do, why is it that we have not followed the example already given us by Germany, by France, by Belgium, by Russia, by Austria-Hungary, by Spain, yea, by every important country on this earth that raises any considerable amount of revenue out of sugar—Great Britain raises only a small amount—except the United States? In those countries, and every one of those countries, they levy a tax on consumption, direct and professed; not indirect and insincere.

Is a tariff a tax on consumption? Every Democrat so contends; so, after all, when we lay a tariff tax we are levying a tax on consumption. But there is this difference between the two kinds of taxes, consumption taxes both. Under one plan, the European plan, every dollar of the tax levied goes into the Government till. Under our plan, the so-called American plan—and I am not proud of it—one half of it only goes into the Government Treasury, while the other half goes to enrich the domestic producers of sugar, both in continental United States and in its insular possessions.

Why do I say that? Because sugar in many respects is one of the most highly illustrative items to which tariff principles and tariff theories can be applied. What is the situation to-day with reference to the production and consumption of sugar in this country? We consume almost 4,000,000 long tons a year. It is estimated for this year, I think, that our consumption will be three million eight or nine hundred thousand tons. Of that amount, we produce one-fourth, 25 per cent, in continental United States—cane sugar in Louisiana and beet sugar in the West—25 per cent more in our insular possessions, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and some small amount from the Philippines. The other 50 per cent we import from abroad, through the custom-house, nearly all of it, over 99 per cent, coming from the island of Cuba, justly called the sugar bowl of the world.

We levy at present a tax of 1 cent a pound at the custom-house door. Every pound of Cuban sugar pays that tax. No pound of Louisiana sugar, of western beet sugar, of Hawaiian sugar, of Porto Rican sugar, or of Philippine sugar up to 100,000 tons per year pays a cent; and yet every pound of Louisiana sugar, of Hawaiian sugar, of Porto Rican sugar, of Philippine sugar—every pound of domestic sugar, in other words—costs the American consumer just as much as every pound of Cuban sugar, on which the duty is paid. What is the result? We levy on American consumption, upon the stomachs of our people—yours and mine, Senators—a burden of $86,000,000 a year, and of that amount we put $43,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States and at the same time we put $43,000,000 more in the pockets of the sugar producers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. The statement was made the other day, I think by the Senator from Michigan, that $100,000,000 was invested in the beet-sugar business in the United States. That was an extravagant statement of the amount, as I shall try to show before this debate is over; but assuming, for the sake of the statement, the correctness of the amount, and then doubling it so as to represent the amount invested in the cane-sugar production—say, $200,000,000 or $250,000,000—the percentage of $43,000,000 which is thus given to this industry is enormous, and of itself represents a profit that is far and away beyond the average profit derived by capital invested in ordinary business.

Mr. HARDWICK. I quite agree with the Senator; and I say another thing to the Senator, and I measure my words: Since we have had this tariff duty on sugar, beginning with the Dingley bill—I am willing to go only back that far—beginning with the Dingley bill, the consuming masses of the United States have paid ten for one for every dollar invested in any branch of the sugar industry in the United States and in all of its insular possessions. We had far better buy them out and stop the profit if we would put it on plain business principles.

Now, my fellow Democrats, if we want revenue and nothing but revenue, why do we not get the most revenue that we can get with the least burden? Do you say to me now that it is a new and an untried thing, and that our people do not like excise or consumption taxes? My reply is twofold. In the first place, this tax, a consumption tax on sugar, will be paid by the great refiners of the country and possibly a few of the great beet factories; actually, in my judgment, less than 100 people would pay it—fully as few people as pay the tariff tax to-day—so there would be no groaning, no burdening, no protestations from the American people, if you are afraid of that.

Ah, but they say it is a new and untried thing. I say not. It has been tried in the most highly civilized countries of this earth, and in nearly all of them. We do not have to tread a new and untrodden path. We have the laws already written by the great nations of Germany and Austria-Hungary and France and all these other great European countries. We have their experience in the administration of the laws. We can give no such paltry excuse as that. A 1-cent tax on all the sugar, domestic as well as foreign, would double the amount of revenue that the Government gets, and would not increase the burden on the consumer one single penny, for the reason I have already explained.

If so—and no Senator who investigates the question can deny it—why do we not levy the tax in that way? If we must have it, and we must have it out of sugar—a food necessity of life—for Heaven's sake let us levy it so that when we tax the stomachs of our people, so that when we charge them a tax on this prime article of food necessity, no private, selfish interests will be subsidized in the process, but every penny of this hard-wrung money will go into the Public Treasury.

Mr. President, in that connection I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a carefully prepared table or plan showing exactly how this consumption tax can be adjusted to each degree of raw and refined sugar and what the result would be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that may be done.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 75° would be 0.568 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 76° would be 0.588 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 77° would be 0.6096 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 78° would be 0.6304 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 79° would be 0.6512 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 80° would be 0.672 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 81° would be 0.6928 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 82° would be 0.7136 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 83° would be 0.7344 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 84° would be 0.7552 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 85° would be 0.776 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 86° would be 0.7968 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 87° would be 0.8176 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 88° would be 0.8384 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 89° would be 0.8592 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 90° would be 0.88 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 91° would be 0.9008 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 92° would be 0.9216 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 93° would be 0.9424 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 94° would be 0.9632 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 95° would be 0.984 cent per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 96° would be 1.0048 cents per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 97° would be 1.0256 cents per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 98° would be 1.0464 cents per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 99° would be 1.067 cents per pound.
The rate on sugar testing by the polariscope 100° would be 1.088 cents per pound.

The application of such a tax for 1916 would work out about as follows:

	Test.	Production (long tons).	Rate per pound.	Revenue realized.
	°		Cents.
Philippine raw sugars	88	175,000	.8384	$3,286,528
Hawaiian raw sugars	96	575,000	1.0048	12,941,824
Porto Rican raw sugars	96	350,000	1.0048	7,877,632
Louisiana and Texas raw sugars	96	175,000	1.0048	3,938,816
United States refined from Cubans, etc	100	1,875,000	1.088	45,696,000
Domestic beet refined	100	750,000	1.088	18,278,400
Estimated consumption		3,900,000		92,019,200

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, if we do not do that—and we did refuse to do it; I presented such an amendment and urged it upon the Senate committee, and they would not accept it—will not the people of this country be driven into the irresistible and irrefutable conclusion that we did not do it simply because we wanted to give a certain amount of protection to the beet and cane producers of this country? Undoubtedly. They can arrive at no other just conclusion. There is no escape from it. You can twist it as you will, you can get off all the sophistry you please about it, you can argue until we are all blue in the face, but, after all, the common, sober sense of the American people will be strong enough to understand that we retain this tax in its present form because we found it necessary not to raise a certain amount of revenue for the Government but to afford a certain amount of protection to certain interests in this country. We had just as well understand what we are doing. I have studied this question a great many years. I am not going blindly into any vote on it. I know what my actions about it mean, and I know what my vote on it spells. Therefore I find myself utterly unable to support the motion made by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I understood the Senator from Georgia to say, first, that no duty should be imposed upon sugar because it is a prime necessity of life, entering into the daily consumption of the people.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator understood me correctly.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And that if there must be some revenue derived from sugar, that revenue should not be collected at the customhouse, but should be collected just before it enters into consumption, or at the factory. Now, would the Senator carry that doctrine to other necessities of life? For instance, second in importance in Louisiana to the sugar industry is the rice industry of that State. Upon that article there is a duty imposed under the Underwood bill. Would the Senator carry out his theory of abstention from the imposition of taxes upon the necessities of life so as to extend it to rice as well as to sugar?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think I understand the Senator's suggestion, and I am going to reply to it with candor.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should like, while the Senator is replying——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment? After I cover the ground I have set out, I will yield with pleasure to the Senator, but——

Mr. BROUSSARD. Just in the same connection I want to continue the question.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Would the Senator then, if he would apply that to rice as well as to sugar, apply it to cotton cloth and other manufactured articles upon which a duty is now imposed? Would he also put a production tax upon these things, so as to obviate the necessity of collecting any duties at all at the customhouses of this country?

Mr. HARDWICK. Replying to the Senator's question, I wish to say that wherever it was necessary to levy a tax on a food necessity of life, and that article was a competitive article—namely, an article produced in considerable degree in this country, and to a considerable degree imported from a foreign country—the course I have suggested here ought to be followed. My answer to it is, in a broader and a more general way, that I can not see to save my life why we should not levy, from my standpoint and from my view of the tariff, a tax solely on noncompetitive products graded, as I have said, heaviest on luxuries, more moderate on comforts, and lightest on necessities. That would be my answer to every suggestion involved in the Senator's question.

The Senator has anticipated just a little the very argument I was to about to make. I say that we do not have to get this revenue from sugar at all. If we did, we ought to get it so that all of it would go into the Government Treasury and none of it into private pockets, but we do not have to get it from sugar at all.

It appears from the last monthly summary of the foreign commerce of the United States, that during eight months ending January, 1916, we imported nearly $65,000,000 worth of coffee into this country; that during the same period of time we imported fifteen and a half million dollars worth of tea into this country; and during that same period of time our sugar importations amounted to a little less than $80,000,000—$65,000,000 of coffee, fifteen and a half million dollars of tea, and $79,000,000 of sugar. What Democratic reason can you give for letting sugar be taxed while coffee and tea come in free? If I were a Republican I could answer you. I would say, "I let the sugar be taxed because I want to build up an American industry with a protective tariff, and I did not tax coffee and tea because there is no industry to stimulate in this country of that sort, and besides they are necessities of life, and I dislike to tax them." But what Democrat can answer that question? They are all breakfast foods—coffee, sugar, and tea. There is no coffee and there is no tea produced in this country. Half the sugar we consume is produced in this country. Yet it is proposed under Democratic principles, forsooth, to tax one necessity of life produced in this country and not to tax the other two that are not produced in this country and in the other two instances, to wit, coffee and tea, if you did tax them every dollar of the tax would go into the Public Treasury. Now why do you not do it? If you want to be consistent, if you want to be logical, if you want to be Democratic about this thing, coffee and tea are not any more necessities of life than sugar and why not tax them all? Are you afraid of the cry that you are taxing the breakfast table? If that is it, why do you tax sugar and leave coffee and tea untaxed?

Then again let us take another article. During this same period of time ending January, 1916, we imported into this country $73,802,459 worth of crude india rubber. Crude india rubber is a noncompetitive product, largely used in this country, although not entirely, in making articles of luxury and not of necessity. Yet crude india rubber comes absolutely untaxed into this country although most of it is used in the luxuries of life, and sugar that every poor man as well as every rich man must have is taxed, and crude india rubber is untaxed. Why this difference? A Republican will answer that crude india rubber is not produced in this country and therefore the imposition of a tax would not aid American industry. What answer, however, can a Democrat who does not believe in protection make?

Now, let me make one more illustration. I concede it is the most extreme one, in all probability, that can be made in the schedules. During this same period of time, eight months, ending January, 1916, we imported into this country a little over $65,000,000 worth of raw silk, absolutely untaxed, free of duty. Raw silk is a noncompetitive product. If you levy a tax on it you foster no industry, you benefit no local industry. Therefore I can understand why Republicans do not tax raw silk, but why Democrats should not I do not know. If it is true that our silk factories could not stand foreign competition without free raw material, then why could we not afford to increase the duties on manufactured silk, the same being a luxury? I ask the Senate and I ask the country, Under what Democratic theory do we leave raw silk untaxed and raw sugar taxed? Are the backs of the rich to go unburdened, while the stomachs of the poor pay the bill?

I wish next to invite the attention of the Senate and of the country as briefly as may be to certain facts and conditions relating to our domestic sugar, both cane and beet, both continental and insular, prior to the breaking out of the European war, and then I want to undertake to tell you as briefly as I can what has happened since then and the result of that war. I am going to take up, first, the case of Louisiana and the production of cane sugar there, because it is nearest my home; and, of course, I love my Louisiana friends a little better than people not quite so close to me and not so nearly related by ties of blood and affection. So I take the Louisiana case first. The facts I am going to give are undisputed facts, not only proven by the testimony of witnesses through long and laborious investigation but agreed to by the unanimous report in most instances, in fact, of a committee, almost half Republican, of the other House of Congress.

The cost of producing a pound of cane sugar—that is, raw sugar—in Louisiana is 3¾ cents. The cost of producing a pound of raw cane sugar in Java is 1½ cents; in the Philippines, 1¾ cents; in Porto Rico, Cuba, and Hawaii, about 2 cents. I hope the Senate will have those figures fixed in its attention. There is no dispute whatever about these facts, as will be seen on examination of the evidence submitted to the special committee on sugar and from the report of that committee and from recent hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. From the above figures it is perfectly apparent that, so far as the production of cane sugar in Louisiana is concerned, it is nothing more nor less than a hothouse proposition. The cost of production is being gradually but surely lowered in Cuba, the Philippines, Porto Rico, Java, and, I think, in Hawaii. In Louisiana I do not believe that it is being lowered at all, but, if anything, is increasing. It is my judgment that the Louisiana sugar-cane industry can not and will not long survive free sugar. Indeed, I do not believe, as I have stated more than once, that the industry can continue and prosper in Louisiana even under our present rate of duty, and that it is practically certain that its doom is already decreed by the fixed and unalterable laws of nature. Let me state some of the reasons for this opinion. In Louisiana the sucrose in the cane is from 6 per cent to 7 per cent. In Hawaii it is from 14 per cent to 15 per cent; in Cuba, from 10 per cent to 11 per cent, occasionally 14 per cent. In Cuba the cane is only planted once in every 10 years, and in Louisiana it must be replanted, or practically replanted, every year. In Cuba frost never interferes with the maturing of the crop, whereas in Louisiana the cane has to be cut early in October; hence its sucrose contents are low, as I have already shown. It seems to me that for these reasons it is perfectly apparent why Louisiana can not profitably continue to produce cane sugar in competition with tropical countries; and if she is driven out of the sugar business it will not be the unkindness of the Democratic Party that accomplishes this result, but the stern decree of the God of nature, for sugar cane is the natural product of a strictly tropical country, and Louisiana is located too far to the north for its successful cultivation in competition with tropical countries. Great and insuperable as are these natural disadvantages, Louisiana labors under certain other disadvantages growing out of inefficiency, which contributes to the high cost of production in that State. Antiquated machinery and open-kettle mills might be mentioned in this category, for as a whole the industry in Louisiana is inefficiently organized, nor is it well equipped. This will be readily seen when it is remembered that in Louisiana 210 mills produce an annual average of 330,000 tons, whereas in Cuba 174 mills produce annually 2,328,000 tons.

Mr. THOMAS. What are the figures?

Mr. HARDWICK. Three hundred and thirty thousand tons in Louisiana, against 2,328,000 tons in Cuba. The labor cost in factories in Cuba and Louisiana is practically the same, and for field labor Louisiana pays hardly as much as is paid in Cuba. It appeared in the sworn testimony before the special committee that in Louisiana the sugar planters pay the following rates for field labor: Seventy-five to 80 cents per day to men; 75 cents per day to women and $1 per day in harvesting time; whereas in Cuba for the same class of labor the planters are paying from $1 to $1.25 per day, and in Cuba the women do not work in the fields.

Mr. President, I am not going to elaborate that; Louisiana is too far north; there is not enough sucrose content in her sugar. The frost comes there too early and the cane has to be cut too soon. She can not and never will compete successfully with the tropical countries. Her cost of production, 3¾ cents a pound, according to the sworn evidence of best citizens and most successful planters, is almost double that of Cuba, almost double that of Hawaii, and more than double that of Java.

What are we to do? That a few planters in Louisiana may maintain a hothoused industry, are we to forever tax 100,000,000 American people?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GALLINGER. I know the Senator from Georgia does not want to be interrupted, but——

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask him a question for information merely. If the labor cost is substantially the same in Cuba and Louisiana, how does the Senator account for the greatly increased maximum cost of production in Louisiana?

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator has just come in?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is on account of the difference in the sucrose content of the sugar cane and the differences in season. There is not as much sugar in the cane they raise. That is the trouble.

Mr. GALLINGER. That accounts for it?

Mr. HARDWICK. That is it. It is just the law of nature, that is all; a decree of nature entered in due and regular form. You will have to repeal a law of nature if you are going to enable Louisiana to compete successfully with these tropical countries. To use a familiar illustration, you can raise bananas or oranges in the State of my friend from New Hampshire if you put a hothouse there and make the American people pay the cost of it; but I do not believe that is right, I do not believe it is democratic, I do not believe it is American to take a few people and for their sake make 100,000,000 people pay more for every pound of this food necessity that they must eat.

The situation is not vastly different with reference to the sugar-beet industry, and I shall endeavor to demonstrate it.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator can also demonstrate that the natural advantages which the sugar beet has in the arid and semiarid regions of the United States will make it a still more dangerous competitor of the Louisiana industry as time passes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I quite agree with the Senator about that. He has stated it so well that I shall not undertake to elaborate it here, especially as I have much ground to cover.

Mr. President, I am going to ask the permission of the Senate to insert in my remarks certain newspaper articles and certain observations relating to the stock watering of the beet-sugar companies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

According to the last statement issued by Mr. Truman G. Palmer, representing the beet-sugar factories, it appears that there are now located in the United States 76 factories engaged in the production of beet sugar. These factories are located in the following States: Colorado, 17; Michigan, 16; California, 13; Utah, 6; Idaho, 5; Wisconsin, 4; Nebraska, 2; Montana, 1; Minnesota, 1; Kansas, 1; Iowa, 1; Illinois, 1; Indiana, 1; and Arizona, 1. From the reports of Bradstreet's Commercial Agency it appears that the total capitalization of these 76 factories is $141,410,000, and that their combined capacity for slicing beets in tons per day is 63,550 tons.

These figures demonstrate beyond all question the extent of overcapitalization of the companies that operate these factories.

Why? Let us see what the beet-sugar men have themselves sworn before several of the House committees. In the hearings on the Payne tariff bill before the House committee Mr. F. R. Hathaway, secretary and treasurer of the Michigan Sugar Co., estimated the cost of a beet-sugar factory to be $1,000 per ton of daily beet-slicing capacity. At the hearings before the special committee on sugar during the last Congress, Mr. Henry T. Oxnard, of the American Beet Sugar Co., made exactly the same estimate, as did Mr. Charles W. Nibley, of the Amalgamated Sugar Co. of Utah. While Mr. Oxnard at a subsequent time did seek to raise his figures, and while some others testified to a slightly higher figure than $1,000 per ton, yet other witnesses swore to even lower figures, notably Mr. E. N. Combs, of Colorado, fixing the figure at $600.

On the whole, therefore, I believe we may safely take $1,000 per ton of daily slicing capacity as the true basis of cost and the real value of a beet-sugar factory. On that basis the true value of all the beet-sugar factories in the United States does not exceed $63,550,000. Indeed, according to the unanimous report of the special committee of the House on sugar during the last Congress, we estimated the amount of this investment at a somewhat smaller figure, $60,712,500, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] agreed to that figure, along with his other Republican colleagues on the committee. So that it appears the beet-sugar factories of this country as a whole are capitalized at from two to two and one-half times their actual value. While we are considering this question of the overcapitalization of the beet-sugar factories, it might be as well to call the attention of the committee to the facts about the three largest of the beet-sugar companies and to see exactly to what extent this mania for overcapitalization has affected them.

First, let us take the Great Western Sugar Co., a Colorado concern, but chartered "under the laws of New Jersey"; but that charter, Mr. Chairman, was granted before the days of New Jersey's regeneration. [Laughter and applause.]

It was capitalized at $30,000,000, one-half preferred and the other half common stock, but of this stock only about $24,000,000 was issued. Its nine factories, all located in Colorado, have, according to its last statement a total daily beet-slicing capacity of 10,600 tons, which ought to represent a real value of approximately $10,600,000—on the basis of $1,000 per ton. So that its stock is more than one-half water, except so far as it may, perhaps, now represent accumulated and undistributed earnings. Under oath the company returned its property for taxation in the State of Colorado at $2,500,000 as late as 1910 or 1911. Although its stock, under its New Jersey charter, was originally more than half water, yet it manages to pay 7 per cent interest per annum on its preferred stock, or $1,050,000, and 5 per cent interest per annum on its common stock, or $750,000. This means a total annual dividend of $1,800,000 on a real investment of $10,600,000, as already explained, or about 17 per cent dividend on the actual investment. Nor do these dividends represent anything like the total net earnings of this largest and greatest of the beet-sugar factories, as I will now proceed to show the committee. It must be recalled that the American Sugar Refining Co., commonly known as the Sugar Trust, owns 26 per cent of the common stock and 38 per cent of the preferred stock of the Great Western (report of special committee, p. 13) according to the admissions of both the Great Western and the trust.

During the recent investigation of the Sugar Trust in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, among the letters of the Sugar Trust was discovered a most interesting letter from Mr. Chester S. Morey, of Denver, Colo., president of the Great Western Sugar Co., to Mr. Washington B. Thomas, then president of the American Sugar Refining Co. This letter was dated March 19, 1910, and read as follows:

"MY DEAR MR. THOMAS: Inclosed herewith I hand you copy of the financial exhibit and income statement. This is the form in which we expect to publish these statements, and they will also be used when we make application to list our stock on the New York Exchange.

"You will notice that this year, in addition to the regular 2½ per cent depreciation which we have been deducting for the last three years, we have set up $1,000,000 in depreciation reserve. I do not want this year's earnings to appear as large as they would if we had not made this entry. Of course this can be changed if the board of directors does not approve of it.

"You will note that our total surplus is shown by these statements as a little over $5,000,000. This does not include any surplus from the Billings Co., the Great Western Railway Co., and other corporations, which really add nearly $2,000,000.

"Our sugar is invoiced at 4 cents, and judging from present market indications there is at least $1,000,000 profit that will show up in next year's business. The value of our real estate and railroads over and above the amount at which they are carried is at least $5,000,000, so that the actual surplus is nearer $9,000,000 than $5,000,000.

"Am pleased to say that at some of our factories the farmers are signing up acreage and feel more encouraged than I did a week ago.

"The details of these statements I will bring with me when I come to the stockholders' meeting."

When it is recalled this company was chartered in 1905 and it is seen by the above letter that in five years, by 1910, it had accumulated a surplus of $9,000,000, besides paying dividends for fully that amount, as I have already shown, and also allowing the regular 2½ per cent for depreciation, it will be seen that this company's annual net profit on its real investment during these five years was 36½ per cent—17 per cent for dividends, 17 per cent for surplus, and 2½ per cent for regular depreciation. It thus appears that in the short space of five years it made a total of 182½ per cent on the actual capital invested. No wonder that its president, Mr. Morey, juggled the entries, according to his own letter; no wonder that he said, never expecting his letter to become public, "I do not want this year's earnings to appear as large as they would be if we had not made this entry."

Let us next look into the American Beet Sugar Co., a concern operating six factories, two in California, three in Colorado, and one in Nebraska, with a total beet-slicing capacity of 5,300 tons per day. According to the standard of $1,000 per ton of daily beet-slicing capacity, the factories of this corporation represent a real value of $5,300,000, and yet we find this company, with the water injected into it somewhat more freely than usual, capitalized at $20,000,000—$5,000,000 preferred stock and $15,000,000 common stock. And it appears that in seven years from the time of its organization it had paid annually 6 per cent interest on the actual investment and had cleared seven and one-half millions besides, for at the end of that time its common stock, which had no value whatever in the beginning, was selling at $50 per share, while its preferred stock, with a guaranteed dividend of 6 per cent, was selling above par. In seven years it paid $2,100,000 in interest on its preferred stock, and its earnings created a value of 50 cents on the dollar for its common stock—pure water—or $7,500,000. This is a total of $9,600,000 on the investment of $5,000,000 in seven years, or a little over 190 per cent, or 24.3 per cent per annum on the actual investment. It must be remembered also that we have not been able to learn the whole truth about the profits of this company in any such way as we discovered it in Mr. Morey's case. Personally I do not doubt that their profits have been fully as great as those of the Great Western, if we could find out just how they have kept their books, as we did in the other case, but it seems to me that the showing is strong enough as it is.

In reference to the earnings of this company, I next invite your attention to an article in the Beet Sugar Journal of April, 1911, as follows:

"American Beet Sugar Co. sets new high record. The report of the American Sugar Co. for the year ended March 31, 1911, shows total income of $8,357,012, an increase of $1,347,368 over the previous year, and a surplus, after preferred-stock dividends, of $1,643,659, equal to 10.95 per cent earned on the $15,000,000 of common stock, compared with $1,097,252, or 7.31 per cent, earned in the previous year. The common stock has not yet paid any dividends. The preferred pays 6 per cent. Comparative results for the past three years follow."

"Then are given the figures for 1911, 1910, and 1909. For 1909 the gross receipts were $7,135,326; total income, $7,156,855; expenses, interest, tax, etc., $5,863,713; balance, $1,293,143. Well, now, we will take 1910: Gross receipts, $6,983,772; total income, $7,009,644; expenses, tax, interest, etc., $5,612,391; balance, $1,397,252. For 1911: Gross receipts, $8,344,792; total income, $8,357,012; expenses interest, tax, etc., $6,413,353; balance, $1,943,659. Preferred dividends, $300,000 in each of the years 1911 and 1910 and $245,400 in the year 1909, leaving a surplus of $1,643,659 in the year 1911, $1,097,525 in the year 1910, and $1,047,743 in the year 1909. 'The general balance sheet as of March 31 shows total assets of $22,577,371.'

"The reserve for working capital is $1,825,637, against $832,151 a year ago, and there is a reserve for betterments and improvements of $377,246, a new item. Bills payable to the amount of $1,266,000, which appeared in the previous balance sheet, have been paid off. H. R. Duval, president, says: 'The surplus has been applied to working capital, which is now adequate for ordinary operations. The company is now free of all debt. There was an increased production of 196,741 bags, exceeding that of any former year. The increase was principally due to California, though Grand Island increased 31,704 bags. In Colorado the decrease was 88,624 bags. Due largely to increased efficiency of the plants, the cost of making sugar, as compared with previous campaigns, was somewhat diminished. Taxes increased $30,989, of which $25,560 was the Federal corporation income tax. Depreciation and maintenance cost $344,842—was $13,119 less than last year.' The design of this expenditure (included in the above statement in expenses) is to keep the plants up to their original condition."

It appears from the above that during the year 1911 the American Beet Sugar Co., after paying its preferential dividend of 6 per cent on its preferred stock (real value) earned 10.91 per cent on $15,000,000 of common stock—water. This represents in all an earning of $300,000 (interest on preferred stock) plus $1,643,659 (surplus), or $1,943,659, which, in turn, is almost 39 per cent profit during the year ending March 31, 1911, on the real investment.

I next invite your attention to a statement in the American Sugar Industry of March, 1912, in reference to the profits of this same company—the American Beet Sugar Co.—for the year ending March 30, 1912:

"The net earnings of the American Beet Sugar Co. for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1912, will probably not exceed 12 per cent, instead of the 15 per cent estimated last December. The reason assigned for this is that the company began to sell its 1911 crop too early. Sales were made in advance of production in order to take advantage of what seemed a very flattering profit. Sugar prices advanced and it is estimated the difference to the company amounted to between $300,000 and $500,000. The company then went to the other extreme and held back the remainder of the 1911 crop on a declining market."

As the dividends on the preferred stock are fixed at 6 per cent and are paid before any other dividend and before any surplus is laid aside it is quite evident that the 12 per cent "net earnings" refers to the amount of surplus set aside, which is figured from the basis of the amount of the common stock, so that it appears that for the year ending March 31, 1912, the American Beet Sugar Co. earned $300,000, interest at 6 per cent on its preferred stock, plus $1,800,000, surplus, the equivalent of 12 per cent on $15,000,000 worth of common stock, or $2,100,000, which is a little more than 40 per cent on its real investment.

One more illustration of this mania for overcapitalization among the beet-sugar factories and of the excessive profits they hope to conceal by this operation, and I shall pass on. We will next take the Michigan Sugar Co., from the State of my friend Mr. FORDNEY.

The present capitalization of the Michigan Sugar Co. consists of $3,703,500 preferred stock and $7,471,107 common stock, a total of some more than eleven millions. Here, again, we find "the trail of the serpent," for it appears from its own statement that "the trust"—the American Sugar Refining Co.—owns 35 per cent of all the common stock and 55 per cent of all the preferred stock of the Michigan Sugar Co. This company operates six factories, all located in the State of Michigan, with a total beet-slicing capacity of 5,450 tons per day. This represents, according to the rule laid down by Mr. Hathaway, its own secretary, an investment of approximately $5,450,000, and yet, as we have already seen, its present capitalization is more than double that amount. It was chartered in 1906, with an authorized capital of $9,000,000, one-half preferred and one-half common stock, not all of which was issued. It simply represented at the time of its charter an attempt to form a small, local beet-sugar trust among a number of Michigan factories that had been previously independents and competitors of each other. It was simply a Michigan manifestation of the prevailing "trust-organizing" mania with which the country was then mad, and was attended by the one invariable sympton of the disease, to wit, overcapitalization.

Let me now call your attention to certain reliable trade reports in friendly journals touching the profits this company has made.

I quote, first, from the Beet Sugar Journal of May, 1910:

"The Michigan Sugar Co. reports a profitable year. The regular annual meeting of stockholders of the Michigan Sugar Co. was held at the Eddy Building, Detroit, Mich., Wednesday afternoon, May 25, 1910. There was a representative attendance to hear the statement of the officers as to the year's business. The year was a profitable one, the company being able to show a surplus of $3,025,000 after expending $3,500,000 for labor and beets, and also paying regular dividends, not only on the preferred, but on the common stock as well. As the Wednesday meeting was the regular annual meeting, no dividend was declared."

I next invite your attention to an extract from the Beet Sugar Journal of July 6, 1910:

"Offers of 121 for stock in the Michigan Sugar Co. have been made within the last month, and the stock is now considered one of the best on the Detroit or, for that matter, any market. The enormous profits, coupled with the favorable prospects, are the causes for the increase in interest and price in stock. The net profits of the Michigan Sugar Co. in 1909 exceeded $1,500,000, and the financial statement submitted at the annual meeting last month showed a surplus of $3,000,000. By a person in close touch with the workings of the company it is stated that the earnings from the sale of the by-products is almost enough to meet the dividend payments. The stock has trebled in value in little more than a year.

"'Michigan sugar stock is now one of the best investments possible,' says a local broker who has been prominent in handling the stock; 'there are more buyers for it than there is stock for sale, and probabilities are an even higher mark than already touched will be reached before the break comes. All Michigan sugar companies are prospering. When the "trust" came into the State some years ago it smashed many independent companies, but in recent years, due to the improved methods of growing and manufacturing, which permits large profits to the farmer and extraordinary profits to the factory, several independent companies have been rehabilitated and are now sharing in the general prosperity.'"

It appears from the above that from 1906 to 1910 the Michigan Sugar Co., besides paying 6 per cent on its preferred stock, made three millions in profits, "trebled the value of its stock in little more than a year," and made almost enough money from its by-products to pay its dividends. In four short years it paid back every dollar of real money invested in it, or fully 25 per cent per annum.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am going to discuss now the practical situation that the beet-sugar people faced prior to the breaking out of the European war.

But the beet-sugar companies insist that, even if they have prospered marvelously under the Dingley and Payne rates, this does not prove that they can stand alone without any aid whatsoever, and they further insist that after three years, when this great necessity of life shall be untaxed, that they will perish beneath an avalanche of German and Cuban sugar. Let us look into that a little. In the first place, let me call your attention to the fact that our American beet-sugar factories have one great advantage over their foreign beet competitors in that while our factories produce refined sugar, ready for table and trade uses without further process of manufacture, that is not true of the German or any other foreign beet factories. In foreign factories the manufacture is not carried so far, and the sugar produced by them has to go through a process of refining, as our cane sugar does, before it is ready for table and trade uses. This process of refining costs the foreign beet-sugar man fully 0.4 cent per pound.

Nor is the difference in the cost of factory labor, if any, a serious handicap to the American factory, as the total labor cost of manufacturing does not exceed 14 cents per 100 pounds.

Fuel, relatively a far more important item of expense, is more abundant here than abroad and is much cheaper, especially in the West, where this industry is located, and oil is largely used as fuel.

Besides these considerations it must be remembered that the difference in geographical extent between this country and Germany gives to our domestic sugar factories a natural protection growing out of freight rates, which is most important and to which I will advert later. All of those considerations are important, however, and must not be overlooked.

Now, let us consider the freight-rate question just a moment, and then I will pass to a discussion of the question from the standpoint of the producer of sugar beets, the farmer, if you please. When the Brussels convention, after agreeing on everything that affected the production, importation, and exportation of sugar as in and between the various European countries that were the powers signatory—by the way, let me say that there was a very ludicrous statement made on the floor the other day about the Brussels conventions. It has been years since the Brussels convention has been in effect, yet some gentleman the other day in discussing this question insisted with an air of solemnity that the Brussels convention had something to do with the present situation. Now, let us see.

When the Brussels convention came to consider the protection that their beet sugar needed against tropical cane sugar, the sugar scientists of the world agreed that a tariff duty of one-half cent a pound, or, to be exact, 0.47 cent per pound on raw sugar and 0.53 cent per pound on refined sugar was sufficient.

Let me say to my friend from Utah that is the reason why Mr. Lowry has always insisted that that was the amount of duty that they should have.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not hear the Senator's remark.

Mr. HARDWICK. I say when the Brussels Convention was in session all the European scientists agreed that the natural advantage of cane over beets amounted to 0.47 cent on raw and 0.53 cent on refined, and therefore Mr. Lowry, the gentleman to whom the Senator referred, always contended as his personal view that there ought to be a duty of half a cent a pound.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Since the Senator has referred to this question, if he will allow me a moment I will state my opinion as to the reason why Mr. Lowry wanted half a cent a pound duty on sugar.

Mr. HARDWICK. Would the Senator rather do that later? I will yield before I get through.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator does not want to be interrupted——

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield now. I have wandered from that point and I do not think it is important. That is just my own opinion of Mr. Lowry's view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I will wait and state it in my time.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will yield to the Senator in my time, but a little later if he will permit me.

To continue: This decision was made after the most careful estimates as to the cost of production of beet sugar in Europe and of cane sugar in the various tropical countries, and after carefully considering the cost of transporting the cane sugar across the seas and finally to the consuming centers of the various European countries.

Now, so far as the latter element, namely, the cost of transportation, is concerned we must remember that it is practically negligible when compared to similar cost of transportation in our great country. So highly developed are these European countries in the matter of transportation that canals and water routes of all kinds intersect and traverse every part of the more important of them. On these canals the rates on heavy freight, like sugar, are so low that they are almost a negligible factor. As a result, German beet sugar has very little, if any, more protection over tropical cane than the amount of the duty—one-half cent per pound. On the other hand, even after foreign sugar, cane or beet, reaches our coast there are large parts of our great territory that it can not reach at all without paying a far greater freight rate than the differential that the Brussels convention has fixed between European beet and tropical cane sugar. The territory which this freight-rate protection would preserve to the beet factories is far greater than they can possibly supply with sugar if they will supply all of the territory in which a reasonable profit on actual investments will enable them to sell.

There are great regions of the country in the very vicinity of many of these factories where the freight rate on sugar is from 70 to 80 cents per hundred pounds, and this is the natural territory in which these factories can best operate and sell their product at a reasonable profit on the actual investment and yet as cheaply as the consumer could buy it from anyone else.

Now, let us see how German beet or Cuban cane could drive the American beet factory out of business, provided the American beet factory is willing to content itself with a fair and reasonable profit on the actual investment. Let us first take German beet sugar. Its cost of production, refined, is 2.415 cents per pound. The cost of ocean freight, Hamburg to New York, and insurance is 0.12 cent per pound. This would make a cost of laying it down at New York, duty free, 2.535 cents per pound.

To this figure, according to the sugar experts, should be added 0.18 cent per pound to make up the difference in grade between the Hamburg sugar and our beet sugar. This makes a total cost of 2.715 cents per pound delivered in New York. Now, take our beet sugar. The Spreckles Sugar Co. (beet), of California, admits that it is producing it at a cost of 2.70 cents per pound. The Oxnard (Cal.) factory of the American Beet Sugar Co. is admittedly producing it at a cost of 2.81 cents per pound, and according to the testimony of Mr. E. U. Combs, of Colorado, the Great Western Sugar Co. has produced it at a cost of 2.56 cents per pound.

Most of these figures can be verified by consulting page 23 of the report of the sugar committee. Mr. Combs's figures can be verified from the testimony taken by the committee. Now, let us go one step farther. The report of the sugar committee, taking the figures submitted by the beet factories themselves, found the average American cost of production to be 3.54 cents per pound. The difference between that figure and the German cost, laid down at New York, is only 0.735 cent per pound, and I submit that even this difference is more than equalized by advantages in freight rates that our domestic producers will have in a territory far greater than they can supply. Besides, in considering these questions, we must remember that the cost figures I have given to-day are simply the ex parte statements of the beet-factory people, made while they were battling to uphold the tariff, made while they were urging that there was a large difference in the cost of production here and abroad, and hence, from their standpoint, an absolute necessity to maintain the protective duties. Under these circumstances, I insist that, without reflection on any of these gentlemen, we are bound to take their statements with at least one grain of salt, to construe their evidence most strongly against themselves, to accept the lowest rather than the highest or even the average figures they gave us.

Again, our domestic beet factories insist even if they could survive competition with German beet sugar they could not survive the competition with cane from Cuba. The cost of producing a pound of raw cane sugar in Cuba is about two cents a pound. I have stated that already.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator if these are not the cost figures given by the select House committee on sugar, of which the Senator was chairman?

Mr. HARDWICK. They were given by witnesses before the committee and they were agreed to by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. It was the conclusion of the committee?

Mr. HARDWICK. It was the conclusion of the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator where the committee got the information or upon what testimony did it base its conclusion as to the cost of foreign sugar?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will tell the Senator with pleasure. We had there the greatest experts in the world, for instance, Mr. Wallace P. Willett, of New York, said to be the greatest sugar expert in the world, and who had expert knowledge on that question. We had other gentlemen before the committee testifying under oath who had large plantations and operated them in Cuba, Porto Rico, and Hawaii.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that my object was simply to bring out the source of information as to the cost of foreign sugar, inasmuch as the Senator had already given that information as to domestic sugar.

Mr. HARDWICK. We had absolute and direct proof. We had the greatest experts we could secure. We had people who claim to have engaged in the business either in Porto Rico, Cuba, or Hawaii. I think in all cases there was sworn evidence. I will state to the Senator that the figures I am giving have been the result of the most exhaustive and elaborate congressional investigation of this question that was ever undertaken.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator does not get the idea that I am questioning his figures. I only asked for the purpose of bringing out all the information. I am somewhat familiar with that investigation.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad the Senator gave me an opportunity to do it. I understand the Senator knows that. I just want to make an observation now. Let us take the situation in Cuba. The cost of producing a pound of raw cane sugar in Cuba is around 2 cents (report sugar committee, p. 230). This is raw sugar, and to it should be added 0.5 cent per pound, cost of refining (report, p. 23), also approximately 0.12 cent per pound, cost of freight and insurance to New York, or a total of 2.62 cents per pound, not materially or substantially different from the figure at which German sugar can be laid down at New York, and there is therefore no more danger that Cuban competition will overwhelm any properly located, honestly managed, fairly capitalized American factory than that German competition will do so. Indeed, if the American cost of production is what I firmly believe it is, somewhere around 2.75 cents per pound, the difference in cost of production between American beet sugar, on the one hand, and German beet and Cuban cane, on the other, is so small as to be almost if not wholly negligible.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator knows, however, that in the hearings before the Committee on Finance of the Senate it was testified that they could produce sugar at $30 a ton, which would be a cent and a half a pound, and as far as San Domingo is concerned, wherever they received an offer of $30 a ton they sold as little as they could; when they received an offer of $35 a ton, of $1.75 a hundred, they sold very freely, and when over $35 a ton was offered them they always sold ahead as far as they could.

Mr. HARDWICK. I suppose the Senator is quite right about that. That is human nature. People, I take it, in all lines of industry do that. They try to sell at the highest prices they can get and they hold back as long as they think they can get any more. That is true of cotton, corn, sugar beets, wheat, and everything else.

Mr. SMOOT. I made the statement because of the fact that the Senator was basing his estimate on the sugar cost of 2 cents a pound, which is $40 a ton in Cuba. I doubt very much whether sugar costs 2 cents a pound in Cuba.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the Senator will pardon me, I am afraid he has misapprehended my statement. I was giving the cost of production. Of course they all, foreign and domestic producers, make as much profit as they can out of the sale of their product all the time. I am merely showing whether or not they could compete.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, in showing the cost to the beet-sugar companies, had the books of the company before the committee; they were thrown open; all the information was given that could possibly be given; no information was kept back; the cost to the company was given to the committee; but such is not the case in Cuba nor in any other part of the world. I may take occasion, if I have time to-day, to quote from Mr. Willett, because I think he is one of the greatest experts in the world on the sugar question.

Mr. HARDWICK. He is one of the greatest experts in the world on that question.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the gentleman very well, and I repeat, I consider him one of the best experts in the world on the sugar question.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I think there is one element entering into the question of the cost of the production of beet sugar, information as to which was held back from the committee. My recollection now is that I was not able to find anything upon the subject in the testimony. That element has reference to the by-products from the manufacture of beet sugar, which amount to about 47½ cents per ton of beets for sirup, and so forth.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Colorado is right in a way and he is wrong in a way. Testimony of that nature was before the committee, but I did not include it in my estimate. It probably ought to be included.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's recollection regarding the testimony is much better than mine; but in estimating the cost of the production of anything allowance should be made for everything that is of value either by way of a by-product or otherwise.

Mr. HARDWICK. I quite agree with the Senator. Probably the cost of producing beet sugar could be slightly lowered when that is taken into consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the statement made by the sugar companies, in arriving at the cost of sugar, I see that all of their expenses and all of their receipts of every name and nature are taken into account. The books are balanced, showing actual cost, and if beet pulp is sold for 25 cents a ton and the sirup is worked over, and a profit is derived from it, the amount goes into the treasury of the company just the same as receipts derived from original sugar production. Then the production of the plant is considered in connection with the receipts of the company and a showing is made of exactly what the cost of production of a hundred pounds of sugar beets is to the factory.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the committee was not infallible; we may have made mistakes, and we may have left out some of the items of receipts from by-products suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]; but I think, in the main, the Senator will find that the figures we gave in regard to the cost of production are substantially accurate both for this country and foreign countries. I think if the Senator will look into that matter carefully he will find that to be the fact.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator will pardon me for calling his attention at this point to the statement of Mr. Oxnard. In 1889, when speaking of the cost of the production of sugar, he said:

> Greater than all of the above assurances of the permanency of the sugar industry in the country is the fact that sugar can be produced cheaper here than it can be in Europe

Mr. HARDWICK. I thank the Senator from Colorado for the reminder.

Mr President, there is one other phase of this beet-sugar question to which I want to refer before I pass on to something else.

But our beet-sugar factories insist that even if it be granted that fuel is cheaper here than abroad, and that their machinery is better than that of their foreign competitors, and that the factory labor cost is so small a proportion of the total cost of producing a pound of sugar as to be almost negligible, and therefore that any difference in factory wages is not an important factor, that still there is one overwhelming and unanswerable reason why they should have a protective tariff on sugar, and that reason is to enable them to pay the American farmer a higher price for his beets than he could otherwise get or than the farmer of any other country gets for his beets. It is therefore insisted that, after all, the man the duty protects is the American farmer, and in his name the beneficiaries of the duty attempt to call a halt on this movement to untax one of the great necessities of life. Let us look into this question and weigh it carefully. Mr. President, I sometimes think that there are more appeals to ignorance, to passion, to prejudice, in the name of the American farmer than of any other name that I can think, unless it be possibly that of the American laborer. Why the intelligence and honesty of both of them should be so often affronted is more than I can comprehend, and yet it does seem to me that this particular appeal "in the name of the American farmer" is the most unjust and unjustifiable one that I have ever heard, and I protest against it as emphatically as I can in behalf of the great masses of the American farmers throughout the country, who constitute the very backbone of its prosperity and well-being, and who demand no more than a square deal and an even chance to earn their living in the sunshine of the Almighty, unhampered by unnecessary burdens and unfair discriminations against them, and demanding neither discriminations in their favor against other people, nor special privileges of any kind whatsoever.

In the first place, take the whole body of American farmers everywhere. Have you no regard for their rights and their interests? Do you propose to make fish out of one kind of farmer and fowl out of another kind? I do not believe, as I will undertake to show you later, that the removal of this duty will make it necessary for the factories to pay the farmer any smaller price for sugar beets, nor do I believe the beet factories will be able to get the beets at a lower price, nor that the farmers will stand for such unnecessary reduction in price, but even if it did mean that the farmer must take a lower price for his sugar beets, which I utterly dispute, what then? It appeared from the testimony of many witnesses who were sworn by the sugar committee and were engaged as farmers in the production of sugar beets in the various Western States that the net profits per acre of the sugar-beet farmers varied from $19.20 to $76. Taking the average of the figures given by the first 14 witnesses on this subject, it would appear that the average net profit per acre of the sugar-beet farmer throughout the West was about $43.37 in the year 1911. According to the figures of the Department of Agriculture, the average net profit of the American farmer in the production of wheat was $3.07 per acre, and the average net profit of the American farmer engaged in the production of corn was $8.15 per acre. The above averages do not include any allowances whatever for rent of land. These are given by the department for the year 1909, but I do not believe that the figures of 1911 or 1912 will materially vary from them. The estimate of the average net profit of the American farmer engaged in the production of cotton is not above $6 per acre. It is often much less, but certainly never much larger. Now, is the American farmer who makes $3.07 on his acre of wheat, or $6 on his acre of cotton, or $8.15 on his acre of corn, to be taxed in order that other American farmers, infinitely smaller in number, shall be allowed to make $43.37 on an acre of beets? It is not right; it does not appeal to our sense of fairness and of justice between man and man.

Now, I will put into the RECORD, Mr. President, certain foreign and domestic prices paid to the farmers for their product during the year 1911, if I may have the permission of the Senate to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

In California the price of beets in 1911 was $5.30 per ton of beets grading 16 per cent, and a contract has been made for an increase of 75 cents per ton for the year 1912. (Hearings, p. 3873.)

In Utah and Idaho the ruling price is $5 per ton and freight, which makes the beets cost, delivered at the factory, over $5.60 to $5.65 per ton. (Hearings, p. 797.)

In Colorado and Nebraska the price averages from $5.50 per ton to $6.50 per ton. (Hearings, pp. 400, 888.)

In Michigan and Ohio the customary contract calls for a payment by the factory of $4.50 per ton for beets testing 12 per cent sugar with 33⅓ cents per ton for each additional per cent of sugar in the beets, with a minimum guaranty of $5 per ton. (Hearings, p. 719.)

Compare these prices with the prices paid in Europe. Mr. Czarnikaw, of London, one of the most eminent authorities on sugar conditions in the whole world, states that the usual price paid for beets in countries that are parties to the Brussels convention—and that includes most of the beet-sugar producing countries in Europe—was $5.11 to $5.48 per ton. Messrs. L. Behrens & Son, of Hamburg, fix the price at from $5.32 to $6.70 per ton. Messrs. H. J. Merck & Co., of Hamburg, reporting for the district of Stettin, fix the average price at $5.78 per ton. In Posen the price varied from $5.59 to $6.49, the average being $6.27 per ton. In Belgium and Holland the average in 1911 was $5.79 per ton.

It will be noted that the American figures I first gave were those of the beet-sugar factory people and that it is difficult if not impossible to find the average price paid throughout the country from those figures. I therefore call your attention to the last annual report of the Department of Agriculture of the United States, in which it is stated that the average price paid to the farmers of the United States for sugar beets for the year 1911–12 was $5.50 per short ton, and for the three previous years $5.35 per short ton.

Mr. HARDWICK. In that connection, and for the present edification of Senators from beet-sugar States, I wish to refer to the following letter addressed to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], and used by me, with his permission.

In this connection, I may state that the French Government has fixed the price by statute as a war measure:

NEW YORK, April 10, 1916.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal of April 6, quoting from the "Centralblatt," states that a price for sugar beets in Holland has been decided upon as 24 florins ($9.65 per ton) for 14 per cent beets, with an allowance of 1½ florins (60 cents) for each degree of sugar contents above 14 per cent.

The Statistical Sugar Trade Journal has now given us the following sugar-beet prices for the campaign of 1916:

	Per ton.
Holland—
For 14 per cent	$9.65
For 16 per cent	10.85
Austria-Hungary	8.12
French Government	9.65
German Government in Belgium	8.49
United States	5.54

Respectfully, yours,

FRANK C. LOWRY.

Mr. President, I think I shall soon be able to conclude what I wish to say on this subject. The situation that I have just been outlining to the Senate and to the country with reference to sugar conditions, sugar prices, was the situation prior to the outbreak of the European war. At the outbreak of the European war conditions changed in the twinkling of an eye, because the great bulk of European beet sugar was withdrawn from the export markets of the world.

England, for instance, the greatest sugar-consuming country in the world, next to the United States, and sometimes ahead of the United States in that respect, bought her supply of sugar from Germany and Austria-Hungary; but with the withdrawal of several million tons of German and of Austria-Hungarian, Belgian, and French beet sugar, a different condition came. We have been face to face with a condition like this: A consumption as great as ever, and possibly greater—because soldiers require an unusual amount of sugar—and a decreased production. German and other European beet fields have been planted in wheat and other food supplies. The great reservoirs of export beet sugar from Austria-Hungary, Germany, and other central European countries are no longer available. So prices have soared; and yet, because of that condition, thoughtless gentlemen are fond of flippantly saying: "Well, you reduced the tariff on sugar 25 per cent, but in spite of that reduction the price of sugar rose." Ah, gentlemen, what an insult to the intelligence of the people to whom such observations as that are addressed. No matter how much the price rose, it would have risen that much more if the duty had not been reduced. If the duty had been 25 per cent higher, the price would have been just 25 per cent higher also.

Not only that, Mr. President, but I propose to put into the RECORD the prices taken from Willett & Gray's Sugar Journal, the recognized American authority and one of the recognized world authorities, showing that from the time the Underwood-Simmons bill went into effect until the war broke out the price of sugar did fall, and that it fell correspondingly with the reduction of the duty. Of course, after the war broke out normal conditions no longer prevailed; the conditions became abnormal, and the duty was so small a relative factor in price fluctuations that it was hardly appreciable. I ask permission to put that in the RECORD, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

	Period of weeks.	Average in-bond price, 96° raws.	Cuban duty, 96°.	Duty-paid price, raws.	Average net price, refined.

(1) Mar. 1 to June 1.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to some things connected with the people for whose benefit, to the extent of 50 per cent at least, we are going to retain the duty on sugar, their present situation, the lack of present necessity for it, and the lack of present justification for the imposition of such duty. I read first from the San Francisco News Bureau of Monday, March 6, 1916:

HAWAIIAN SUGAR STOCKS.

Honolulu.—While stocks continue to climb, investors, speculators, and all persons interested in Hawaiian sugar stock or its profits, which means practically all the business men in the Territory, are wondering how large a part of the millions now held in reserve will be paid out in special dividends. That extra dividends will be declared by most of the companies is generally conceded on all hands, though no intimation of any official nature has been given out that any such plan is in the wind. Dividends of from 20 to 30 per cent and even higher in some instances were paid by the sugar companies during 1915—

This refers to the Hawaiian companies—but without exception those on a paying basis piled up huge reserves—

That is in addition to the dividends paid—because of the then uncertain prospect of the sugar tariff. Free sugar is not even a remote danger, and there is no prospect of an early termination of the European war to reduce prices.

They are gloating over the soaring prices which our consuming masses must pay—

With land and mills in the best condition ever known in the history of the industry on these islands, and with bulging treasuries, it is held certain that big dividends will be paid—

Paid when?

as soon as the bill repealing the free-sugar clause has safely passed Congress and been signed by the President.

As soon as the bill repealing the free-sugar clause has safely passed Congress and been signed by the President they will cut the melon, and not until then, for fear that we might have a glimmer of intelligence, an interval of sanity, and not do this thing.

Sixteen companies had on hand cash balances totaling $8,751,000 at the end of 1915, according to the best obtainable information.

Here is another melon that is almost ripe; and as soon as this bill "speeds on its joyous way through this Capitol to the other end of the Avenue" and receives there the Executive approval, doubtless this melon also will be cut. I quote from the New York News Bureau of March 30, 1916:

It is understood that the Great Western Sugar Co. has been ripening a melon that is almost ready for plucking. This company, one of the largest beet-sugar producers in the world, has prospered enormously since the war lifted raw-sugar prices to the highest level of years. The common stock, of which there is $10,544,000 outstanding—

And, by the way, according to the testimony every dollar of this $10,544,000 common stock is water—has advanced from 50 last September to the present market of 200.

Mr. THOMAS. It is 206 now.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator from Colorado informs me that it is 206 now.

There is likewise $13,630,000 7 per cent preferred outstanding, the authorized amount of each issue being $15,000,000. The American Sugar Refining Co. is a substantial minority stockholder.

Great Western Sugar has paid common dividends of 5 per cent since January, 1910.

Not one dollar of that common stock is real value; it is all water.

The company issues no financial statements, but it is said on authority that the 1915 earnings were safely over 50 per cent on the common stock. For the current year, if sugar prices hold, the company may easily earn $70 a share. Therefore, so far as earnings alone count, the company could easily multiply its present dividend, but because of the uncertainty regarding possible tariff reduction directors have so far stifled the temptation.

Here it is again—

But, because of the uncertainty regarding possible tariff reduction, directors have so far stifled the temptation.

They also were afraid that we might have an interval of reason, that we might return to sanity and hesitate about this thing.

Great Western had approximately $10,000,000 cash on hand at the beginning of the present year and about the same amount in sugar. It is likely that current liabilities were small, so that the excess current assets were probably equal to $200 per share on the common stock, setting off plants against the preferred stock issue.

Great Western Sugar is in a position to pay a handsome extra dividend in cash or to capitalize part of its bulky surplus by the declaration of a stock dividend. The belief is prevalent that some such action is a near-by probability.

When? When this bill passes; after the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] shall prevail and this bill completes its joyous way through this Capitol to the other end of the Avenue to receive the Executive approval.

I desire now to refer to the Hawaiian sugar companies. I quote from the San Francisco News Bureau, March 10, 1916:

HONOKAA SUGAR EARNINGS.

Honolulu-Honokaa Sugar Co. and the Pacific Sugar Mill, by the purchase of 175,000 shares of stock in the Hawaiian Irrigation Co. (Ltd.), the price totaling more than $95,000, now own practically all the shares in the latter corporation, according to reports presented to Honolua and Pacific Sugar shareholders at their annual meeting.

I am not going to read all of this article, but I ask permission to print the remainder of it in the RECORD. It shows very large earnings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The annual report of F. A. Schaefer, president of Honokaa, follows in part:

"The cost of producing a ton of sugar was considerably reduced, viz, from $65.136 to $54.242, these figures not including bond interest, etc., while the net profit on the crop over and above all charges was $161,849, which includes a charge of $17,720 sinking fund on the bonds, which is payable to the trustees during this year. During the year the directors, on the authorization of the stockholders, purchased a four-sevenths interest in 122,500 shares of the Hawaiian Irrigation Co. (Ltd.) for the sum of $81,475, paying for the same in cash. This purchase gives to this company and its neighbor, Pacific Sugar Mill, practically all of the shares of the Hawaiian Irrigation Co. (Ltd.) and is expected to prove very advantageous."

Referring to the annual report of F. A. Schaefer, president of Honokaa Sugar Plantation, refers to the fact that the cost of production was reduced approximately $11 per ton.

Mr. HARDWICK. Furthermore, Mr. President, I ask permission to present and have printed a table showing that the 16 Hawaiian companies during 1916 made dividends of $8,751,000, as per the list attached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be printed as requested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[San Francisco Chronicle, Mar. 15, 1916.]

SIXTEEN HAWAIIAN COMPANIES HAD $8,751,000 CASH ON HAND.

(By Charles Remington.)

Sixteen Hawaiian sugar plantations, according to actual figures in some instances and estimates in others, closed the year with $8,751,000 cash on hand. This fund has been built up during the past two or three years in anticipation of free sugar. Now, that the likelihood of free sugar in the next few years is practically past, the fund will be kept nearly intact for the purpose of meeting this or other unforeseen viscissitudes. The fund, however, is deemed large enough by most of the plantations, so that stockholders in most instances can reasonably expect a full distribution of 1916 earnings, which promise to break all records. The amount of the cash balances on hand December 31, 1915, were:

Ewa	$593,000
Hawaiian Agricultural	600,000
Hawaiian C. & S. Co	1,316,000
Hawaiian Sugar	550,000
Honomu	240,000
Kokaba	390,000
Koloa	90,000
Maui Agricultural	1,122,000
McBryde	71,000
Olaa	453,000
Oahu Sugar	1,000,000
Onomea	715,000
Pepeekeo	400,000
Pioneer	415,000
Waialua	398,000
Wailuku	400,000
Total	8,751,000

Mr. HARDWICK. I will next call attention to some of the stock quotations and show how they have jumped since it has been found that we are going to stick to this policy of protecting the sugar industry and since the war began.

The preferred stock of the American Beet Sugar Co.—and the preferred stock, of course, has a guaranteed income attached; it is pretty nearly a fixed value—was selling at $65 on March 1, 1914, while on February 1, 1916, I think that is the date meant to be given, it was selling for $95. The common stock of the American Beet Sugar Co. sold for $20 a share on March 1, 1914, and for $68 on February 1, 1916.

Mr. THOMAS. And it is selling for $74 now.

Mr. HARDWICK. And it is selling for $74 now, my friend from Colorado suggests.

The preferred stock of the Great Western Sugar Co., which has a guaranteed income to it, rose from $91 on March 1, 1914, to $112 on February 1, 1916, and the common stock of the same company, during the same period, rose from $45 to $140, and is selling now for $200, indeed, for $206, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] advises me.

The Michigan Sugar Co. common stock rose from $35 a share March 1, 1914, to $102 a share on February 1, 1916, and now it is $112, as my friend from Colorado states.

So they all have a share in this thing. There are "melons" enough for all of them, but lemons only for the consumers of the country.

Now, I will refer to some of the Porto Rican sugar companies. The South Porto Rico Sugar Co. common stock sold for $30 March 1, 1914, and for $170 on February 1, 1916.

Central Aguirre Sugar Co. preferred stock sold at $35 on March 1, 1914, and at $165 on February 1, 1916. The common sold for $15 on the first date and $167 on the second.

Mr. THOMAS. And it is now selling for $181.

Mr. HARDWICK. And it is now selling for $181, my friend from Colorado suggests.

I am not going to detain the Senate any longer on this phase of the question. The "melon" is ripe; it is to be cut, and, although the war has increased immensely the price of sugar, we are going to add to it just a little bit more by retaining the duty of 1 cent a pound. If we take it off, no matter to how high a level the war may send the price, we would reduce it from that high level at least 1 cent a pound——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think so long as the war conditions exist the tariff has any effect on the price of sugar?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; absolutely. That has been demonstrated mathematically. Let me give the Senator a further answer to that question, and I am glad he has asked it, for, perhaps, I have not made that plain. There are many other considerations besides the tariff that determine the price of a product, such as supply and demand, and a number of other considerations of that character. I think I have named the most important. With the great reduction in the supply and no corresponding increase in the demand, but, on the contrary, if anything, an increase in the demand for sugar, of course the price must soar, even if the tariff remains stationary; but no matter how high it goes, the price will go just that much higher if you raise your tariff duty. The tariff duty is just that much more added to the price.

On the other hand, no matter how high the price is, if you take the duty off sugar will go down in price that much, even from the high level where other conditions send it. That has been repeatedly and mathematically demonstrated with special reference to the sugar tariff; it has been proven by undisputed figures by all the greatest sugar experts in the world that that is true and that that has been the effect on the price of sugar of every tariff change that this country has made respecting that commodity. Of course, sugar will be high as long as the war goes on, because the world has not the supply of beet sugar from central Europe from which to draw; but if the tariff is raised, the price will be that much higher, and if the tariff is lowered the price will be that much lower.

Well, there may be two or three views of that. The practical politician might say, "Well, the war has carried the price of sugar so high anyhow that, even if you take the duty off, the price of sugar will still be higher than it was before the war broke out, and therefore the people will not know that you have done anything for them by reducing or removing the duty." But is that the logical way of looking at it? Is that the statesmanlike way of looking at it? Is that the way the American Senate, the American Congress, and the American President ought to look at it? If war conditions have made the price of this great article of food necessity higher than it was before the Underwood-Simmons bill passed, then there is all the more reason why we should reduce it as much as we can and lay no tax whatever upon it.

Mr. President, there are only one or two things more I desire to say about this matter before I am ready to vote on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

It has been one of the favorite statements of gentlemen who opposed free sugar that the trust will be benefited by it. Some of them may not know any better. I think, however, that some of them ought to be informed once and for all time on that subject.

Of course before you start out on an undertaking like that you must have it clearly and definitely understood what is means by "the trust." I do not think the Senator from Utah, for instance, would disagree with me that in the common acceptation of that term as applied to the sugar industry "the trust," commonly called and generally known as such in this country, is the American Sugar Refining Co.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with that.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is by far the largest of the refiners, larger than all of its competitors combined, unless my memory of the figures is in error; and while it has some active competition and some tolerably strong competition and some honest competition, yet after all it towers head and shoulders above them all, and as Mr. Atkins, its president, said—he coined that famous phrase—"it holds the umbrella for all the rest."

I have heard the statement made in this debate by Senators who ought to know better and who ought not to make it that "the trust favors free sugar." I want to refer gentlemen of that kind to the testimony, and I am going to read it right here in the Senate now. I read from the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives on the Underwood-Simmons bill when that bill was pending before the committee of that body.

Mr. Atkins, vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co.—the trust, and the only trust, I want to say to the Senator, after two years' investigation, that I have been able to discover in this industry—in testifying before the Ways and Means Committee on January 15, 1913, stated as follows:

Mr. HARRISON—

Mr. Francis Burton Harrison, of New York, then a Member of the House of Representatives and now Governor General of the Philippine Islands, was conducting the hearing, or this part of it—

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to ask the witness a question. Mr. Atkins, you are vice president of the American Sugar Refining Co., which is popularly known as the Sugar Trust?
Mr. ATKINS. It is sometimes referred to as that.
Mr. HARRISON. Do you appear here representing the sentiment of the directors of that company?
Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; with their authority.
Mr. HARRISON. Are you in favor of free sugar?
Mr. ATKINS. I am not and my company is not.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. At that same hearing I think the Senator must admit that Mr. Charles R. Heike, secretary of the American Sugar Refining Co., testified——

Mr. HARDWICK. This was the testimony of Mr. Atkins before the Ways and Means Committee of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. Heike was secretary of the American Sugar Refining Co.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to yield to the Senator for that, because I can state it. I am perfectly acquainted with the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. So am I.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Heike was the secretary.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I say.

Mr. HARDWICK. He said his personal opinion was in favor of free sugar, but that he did not undertake to speak for his company; he knew his company opposed it. They always opposed it, and he stated he wanted it distinctly and clearly understood that this was only his personal opinion. By the way, he was at outs with them then. He was not in their employ at that time. He had been their secretary. His connection with the company had been severed then.

Mr. SMOOT. He testified that he was the secretary.

Mr. HARDWICK. I think he had severed his connection with it at that time. If I am in error I shall be glad to be corrected. He died soon afterwards. He had a whole lot of trouble, and was indicted about some of the frauds in connection with the weighing of sugar.

Mr. SMOOT. He without doubt died after he testified.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course he did not die before he testified, but I think that at the time he testified he was no longer the secretary of the American Sugar Refining Co. He died soon after that, and my recollection is—the Senator can go back to the hearings and verify that——

Mr. SMOOT. I have them here.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know; I have them, too. The Senator says he has the hearings. Do they say that he was at that time the secretary?

Mr. SMOOT. I will turn to the testimony.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. The Senator can correct me if I am in error. My recollection of it is that he said he had been secretary, and that he was no longer the secretary; that he no longer had any connection with the company. I think I am right about that, but if I am wrong it does not matter. The Senator can correct me either now or later on. But I know I am right about this; if my recollection was not correct about the other matter, it is about this—that when Heike expressed his individual opinion, he said, "Why, I am a free trader about everything, but I want you gentlemen to understand that this sentiment does not represent the position of my company at all, and nobody on this earth but me is bound by it." Now, there is no need of talking about whether the trust wants free sugar or not. Here it is. The trust swore, through its vice president and its acting executive—it had no president, or no active one, at that time—that he was speaking by authority of the directors and for his company, and that he was opposed to free sugar; so I do not think that the statement ought ever to be made again, in this body at least, that the "trust" favors free sugar. The exact reverse is true. The trust opposes free sugar now, and has always done so.

Now, Mr. President, just one other thing. We are about to pass on this motion of the Senator from North Carolina, and I find myself utterly unable to vote for the motion, although I know it is to prevail. I am willing to vote against it even if there is no vote but mine against it. I find myself unable to agree to the course that a majority of my Democratic colleagues on this side, from the very depths of their ignorance of this question, I think, in all charity to them, feel impelled to adopt. I believe if they understood it, as I think I know it after years of study, they would suffer almost any penalty, I have such a high opinion of each and every one of them, before they would do any such thing as this. In my judgment they surrender the very citadel of the Democratic tariff position by any such action as this; and, feeling that way about it, it is impossible for me to join in any such surrender.

I have spoken all over my State in favor of free sugar. At the request of the Democratic National Committee I was sent during the last campaign to many places where it was thought that a sugar argument would prove potent, to plead for the election of a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress, and to give free sugar as one of the reasons why we ought to elect both. I find it impossible, therefore, to yield my convictions on this subject. They are as strong as it is possible for human convictions to be. They are matured after years of study and years of investigation. I have no criticism and no feeling of unkindness toward my colleagues, Democratic or Republican, who feel that they must join in this movement and help "speed this bill in its joyous passage" through this body. For one, I simply can not do it; and I would that we still had in this body, on both sides of this aisle, more Senators who would join me in this effort to stand by the real interests of the consuming masses of the American people.

When this same Mr. Atkins was testifying before the special committee of the House, of which I had the honor to be chairman, and we asked him why not have free sugar, he ventured this observation:

They have never been able to get a reduction of the duties on sugar for this reason. There are 17 States in the Union producing beet sugar. Every one of these States has two Senators. There are 34 Senators, and every one of these Senators is a Republican. * * * They have never had an opportunity to get that reduction down. The probability is that they can not get any reduction now (1911) in the face of such strong opposition as that is.

So that the head of the Sugar Trust said at that time, in 1911, that there were 34 reasons why we could neither get free sugar nor get a material reduction in the duty on sugar from this Congress—34 reasons, 2 Senators each from 17 beet-producing States. That was his observation. Is he right?

Ah, Mr. President, the great men of this country, the men who have written its great tariff laws in the past, even when they did not agree with my party, even when they did not hold the views that I hold and occupy the position that I occupy on this great question, were not insensible of the country's real interests in respect to it.

When William McKinley reported the McKinley bill to the House of Representatives he said on the floor of that body on May 20, 1890:

I would have preferred, Mr. Chairman, if the article of sugar could have been left in the tariff schedule upon the dutiable list. This, however, was not practicable in the presence of an almost universal sentiment in favor of the removal of the entire duties upon this article of universal family use.

McKinley said he would like to keep it on the dutiable list, but it was not practicable, because the American people would not permit it—even then, in 1890.

In the same debate the gentleman from Maine, Mr. Dingley, used this expression:

The duty collected on sugar and molasses the last fiscal year was $55,975,610, or nearly 2 cents per pound. Adding to this the increased cost of 275,000,000 pounds of sugar produced in this country, equivalent to the duty of 2 cents per pound, and the duty imposed on these articles was practically a tax of $63,500,000, or $1 per head, on the people of this country.

Inasmuch as there is scarcely another article of common use not now on the free list which can not be promptly produced or made here nearly or substantially to the extent of our wants, the transfer of sugar and molasses to the free list will afford conspicuous relief to the people of this country.

Mr. President, Mr. Dingley was frank. He admitted that you added the amount of duty to the price of every pound of sugar, domestic as well as foreign, that was consumed in this country.

Again I read from another distinguished Republican of long and honorable service at the other end of this Capitol, Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, of Illinois, who on May 20, 1890, said, when the McKinley bill was up:

Mr. Chairman, the placing of sugar on the free list will relieve each inhabitant, rich and poor, of $1 per annum of tax, and at least 50 cents of extortion levied by the sugar refiners.

The gentleman from California asks, Why give a bounty to the producers of sugar in the United States? Well, I answered my friend, I am not anxious to give a bounty if you do not want it. My principal anxiety is to place sugar on the free list and relieve the people from this great burden of taxation.

In 1894, when the Senate amended the Wilson bill, the late Senator Allison, of Iowa, said on this floor on June 8, 1894:

If I had my way, I would strike from this bill every vestige which provides a duty on sugar.

Mr. President, if I stand alone in this matter I am opposed to the motion made by the Senator from North Carolina. If we need revenue, we can go to many other places with far more fidelity to Democratic principles to raise it than to this common necessity of life. If we need a revenue and can get it nowhere else except from sugar, then we ought to provide that every dollar that we wring from the necessities of our people shall go into the Public Treasury, and not a penny of it into private pockets.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I believe the Government of the United States will be obliged to raise a very large amount of additional revenue in carrying out the policy of preparedness; but in doing so I believe it is the duty of the Representatives of the people in Congress assembled to raise this revenue where it will be felt the least, to raise it from the gigantic fortunes which under our system of government have grown up in this country. I think we should have a progressive inheritance tax, as they have in every one of the European countries, and from that source we ought to raise not less than two hundred millions per annum, and in that way meet the cost of preparing to defend this country and the wealth of this country.

It is a character of tax which will fall without oppression upon any person in the Republic. It certainly will not wound the feelings of the individual who has accumulated a gigantic fortune from whatever source, be it from the unearned increment or from the development of monopolies or the manipulation of the stock exchange, because he is dead; certainly it will not wound the feelings of the man who leaves the estate, because he has passed beyond the point where he has any care one way or the other for the possession of property. He has gone to a country to which he can not transfer his control over material things. It will not wound the feelings of his heirs, for the reason that when a man receives an inheritance of a million dollars he will not very closely measure whether or not the Government has taken over a small percentage of that vast inheritance.

We have in this country estates which go into the hundreds of millions of dollars; and I believe we ought to impose a tax, not upon the food of the people of this country but upon these gigantic estates. I do not wish to see this tax levied upon the breakfast table—to use that figure of speech—when just to that degree it relieves great estates from a tax which a wise public policy would impose upon them in any contingency. These estates have been growing so large that we have already reached a point in this Nation where a just public policy ought to abate them as containing within themselves and their prospective growth a menace to the peace and to the liberty of other men.

When a man has in his estate a thousand million dollars and can transfer it to a single individual, it is difficult for the human imagination to look forward and ascertain how great these fortunes will grow under a law permitting the perpetual life of corporations; and when they grow in this way they involve the material domination by their owners over the lives and over the happiness of hundreds of thousands and of millions of other people without any adequate control by law. I think the liberty of the world and the happiness of the world require that there shall be some decent limitation put upon the dangerous accumulation of property.

I regret very much that this issue has arisen; and I believe that the country ought to understand that we can raise these funds from these gigantic estates and remove this tax from the food of the people of this country; and I want to express my earnest opposition to any tax on sugar, though I realize that the demands on the Treasury are so great that many of my colleagues are persuaded they can not escape the demand for the tax on sugar.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say only a word. I understand other Senators desire to speak on this subject, but I can not let this opportunity go by without paying tribute to a very distinguished Member of this body, in view of this vote about to be taken.

Men of various attainments secure seats in the Senate. Some are particularly noted for wisdom, others for oratory, a few for looks [laughter]; but there is one Senator here, able, affable, brilliant, and likable, who, when this vote is taken to-day, must be crowned as the only really successful prophet of the Senate.

I remember a very warm September evening when the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] was referring to the record of the Democratic Party and taking to task rather severely the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], who is the Senator I have in mind, because of the position the distinguished Senator from Louisiana was taking at that time as to the sugar tariff. The Senator from Louisiana said:

In conclusion, Mr. President, without claiming the gift of prophecy, I say unhesitatingly that in my judgment, before the three years have rolled around which will place sugar upon the free list, dismantle the factories of Louisiana, condemn thousands of people there who are now in easy circumstances to poverty and distress, and bring ruin upon a great many engaged in sugar production in our Western States, Hawaii, and Porto Rico, the Democratic Party will hear from the people of this Nation in no uncertain tones.

Mr. President, the three years have not as yet expired, but the prophecy made at that time by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is now to be fulfilled. The brilliant and oratorical Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] at that time referred to the fact that the Senator from Louisiana was headed toward the Republican Party, and now it appears that the Democratic Party almost en masse on this protective-tariff question is headed toward the Republican Party. While the Republican Party has not as much room now as it had in 1912 and is becoming more crowded every day, it still has plenty of room to welcome all these distinguished converts to the protective-tariff policy.

I wish I had time in this connection to refer more in extenso, in a perfectly good-natured way—because I am rather enjoying this matter—to the speech made by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He is one of the great orators of this body and of the country. He referred that evening, with the galleries crowded, to the speech of the temporary chairman at Baltimore for free sugar, and to his own speech at Baltimore in which he referred to free sugar, which seemed to have been received with applause from the convention. He said, in substance, as I remember, that the Democratic Party was going to lift one hundred and forty millions of taxation from the backs of the people by giving them free sugar; that this meant 140,000 homes for the poor laboring men of this country, homes valued at a thousand dollars each—and now what is going to become of all these 140,000 homes that our good Democratic friends were going to save to the laboring people of this country?

He said, among other things:

For 125 years—

Referring, I suppose, to the sugar people—they have had their hands in the pockets of the American consumer, taking just a little; that is all. Just a little from each of 20,000,000 breakfast tables; just 2 cents upon each pound of sugar that the poor man carried home: that is all. "But it is just a little, and therefore you ought not to stop us from petty pilfering."

That is the language, he assumed, of those who were pilfering.

There are many interesting parts to this speech, which is worthy of the careful perusal of every one. I am surprised that the Senator from Kentucky has not appeared, before this terrible outrage is consummated and sugar restored to a protective tariff basis, in time to "save the child."

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] also elucidated, in a speech previous to that time, some views on this subject. It seemed he had received a telegram from the Commercial Club of Moore, Mont., advising him to stand pat for a proper protection of the sugar and wool industries. The telegram says:

Standing pat for a proper protection of the wool and sugar industry will be appreciated by your constituents in this vicinity.

The Senator from Montana put in the RECORD of that date, May 16, his reply to this commercial club.

I assure you—

He said, among other things—that I am standing pat, but I am standing pat for the people. I must respectfully decline to stand pat for the protection of the wool or sugar industry or any other special interest enjoying special privileges for the benefit of the few at the expense of the many. * * * I can not surrender my convictions.

In one of the speeches of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] on this subject he referred to the position of the President on this matter. He said also that this infant was 124 years old; that it was ready to be weaned. Now, they have added three years more to its age; it is 127 years old, and why should it not be weaned now? And he referred to the President writing upon the color lance of the Democratic Party:

No compromise; I am seeking none; I ask none; I want none. I am for free sugar and I am for free wool.

Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel! but thou art not found in the Democratic Party.

He also said:

The President, Woodrow Wilson, has been denounced as a dictator. Why? Because he has dared to stand for the faith as written in our platform. * * * Because he believed in and advised in favor of free meat and free bread and free sugar and free wool he is denounced as a dictator. But the American people will answer at the ballot box and say, "If that be dictation, then long live the dictator who stands for that doctrine in our American life."

Where is that doctrine now? Ask of the winds that far and near strew the broken planks of the Baltimore platform.

And so, Mr. President, I might go on and refer to the other parts of these speeches. They are worth reading. And we find our Democratic friends now embracing protection to sugar. I say this in no spirit of criticism. I am glad they have discovered that changing conditions in life call for changed economic policies; that free trade, while beautiful in theory, is not best for our country—and we have had a great many doctrines along the lines of the "new freedom" set aside. We find free tolls in the Democratic platform set aside; free sugar now set aside; free silver sometime ago set aside; free trade, which will probably be hereafter entirely set aside.

All these children of Democracy seem lost in the wilderness of the "New Freedom." No more should their platforms denounce all protection as fraud and robbery. Let the St. Louis platform at least except sugar. They can not be blamed for what they are doing. They are acting wisely; and when Democracy acts wisely let us give them due credit. We ought to congratulate them and not find fault with them, and I am sure we do not. We join with them because we believe in the doctrine of a protective tariff; and as they are becoming converted in great numbers and marching down the aisle to the mourners' bench—"hitting the trail," so to speak—we can almost in imagination hear the choir as it sings:

While the lamp holds out to burn
Protection Democrats may return.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have enjoyed the remarks of my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] quite as much as any Republican possibly could. Indeed, I have been cheered by the fact that the Senator has found a prophet in Israel upon this side of the Chamber.

I remember the debate very well to which the Senator referred. I was much interested in it, and deprecated it somewhat as a controversial matter between two good Democrats. I confess I did not at the time pay much attention to the prophecy of my friend from Louisiana, and it had not dawned upon me that he was inspired until my attention is called to it by the Senator from Iowa.

That prophecy, however, Mr. President, has had its fulfillment in a great world-wide calamity, the causes of which have been a subject of some speculation to me until now. In view, however, of what the Senator has said, I perceive in the European war a manifestation of divine displeasure against the Democratic tariff, for it is that which prompts the action which the Senate is about to take. It is somewhat remarkable, too, that the U-boat controversy between the United States and Germany culminated at a psychological moment, thereby forcing the hand of the Democratic majority and requiring it to continue the duty upon sugar indefinitely, because the Government needs the revenue.

Verily my friend should rejoice, not only because he thinks Democrats are coming to the attenuated Republican fold but also because of this providential interference in behalf of protection, forcing the hand of its Democratic opponents and impelling them to assume the inconsistent but, in the opinion of the Senator from Iowa, the very happy position of protection apostasy.

But, Mr. President, there is another unexpected outcome in this situation, not a fulfillment but the overthrow of prophecies monotonously uttered upon the other side of the Chamber. I recall that during the discussions over the tariff in 1913 the Democratic caucus received constant and universal denunciation at the hands of Republicans who abhor caucuses but delight in conferences. Then and many times since they predicted that the people would rise up against the caucus and consume it in the fierce fires of their indignant wrath. But no such catastrophe has occurred or is likely to occur. Quite the contrary.

We have had two caucuses recently upon this subject. The first committed the Democratic Party to the extension of the duty for four years, and we acted accordingly. Almost immediately after the conference committee had its meeting with the House Members, who did exactly what we knew they would do. They insisted upon their own provision and refused to recede. Thereupon another caucus was called and informed of the situation. Thereupon we abandoned our stand and gracefully or otherwise accepted that of the House conferees.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, he certainly does not want to misrepresent the matter in saying that we had one conference.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly not.

Mr. SIMMONS. We had repeated meetings for a week.

Mr. THOMAS. I accept the Senator's correction. Several meetings were held, but they all began and ended the same way. We did not stand by our guns.

However, what I wish to emphasize is that Republican prophecy regarding the outcome of Democratic caucuses has not only miscarried, but we have reached a period when the Republican minority proposes to accept the dictates of a Democratic caucus and vote in accordance with its requirements. Whether the fulfillment of the prophecy of the Senator from Louisiana is worse than the miscarriage of the oft-repeated prophecy of the other side I will not attempt to determine.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLIVER. I simply wish to ask the Senator whether the measure as now proposed emanated from a Democratic caucus. I was not aware of it.

Mr. THOMAS. I supposed everyone knew that.

Mr. OLIVER. We do not know anything that happens in the caucus on the other side.

Mr. THOMAS. Not always, but frequently; and when we act agreeably to the Republican purpose the news is apt to travel pretty fast.

Mr. President, I simply have a word to add. I did not intend to speak at all again upon this subject, but inasmuch as I am upon my feet I will refer to the capitalization of the beet-sugar companies, and I do that in view of certain statements made by my very genial friend, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], a few days ago. I may concede, so far as the principle of the thing is concerned, that it makes no difference whether $1 or $100,000,000 is invested in the enterprise, although the larger the amount the more serious would be the evil consequences of a given line of legislation if injury were to flow from it. It must have been upon that theory that the sum total grew so largely in the vision of the Senator from Michigan. If my memory serves me aright, he told the Senate that something like $100,000,000 had been invested in the sugar-beet industry in the United States. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] made the suggestion that it was very much more than that. I made some inquiry of the Senator from Michigan as to the foundation for this statement, because my own investigations in regard to the subject did not justify the conclusion.

I think that unless all the water that has been poured into beet-sugar capitalization is to be considered as money actually invested, the assertion of the Senator from Michigan can not be sustained by the facts. I investigated this subject thoroughly some three years ago, and in a speech in September, 1913, upon the general subject of protection to sugar I considered that as of prime importance to the general proposition. I then stated my conclusion, as follows:

The cost of beet-sugar mills was formerly placed by manufacturers of sugar-mill machinery and by the sugar men at $1,000 per ton of slicing capacity. There was no question about it 10 or 15 years ago. That figure then seemed to be sufficiently large, notwithstanding the fact that most of the machinery then employed in the industry was imported from Germany. Our manufacturers at that time had not reached the point in production where they were able to supply the demand for such machinery. A thousand dollars per ton slicing capacity, therefore, seemed then to be ample. But since then other sugar men have estimated the cost of sugar factories at $1,250 to $1,500 per ton of slicing capacity.

I then referred to Mr. Blakey, who was and is a standard author on the subject, and quoted from him as follows:

The capitalization per ton of daily slicing capacity in 1889 was $1,097; in 1904, $1,502; and in 1909, $2,458.

This progressive increase of cost occurred in the estimates notwithstanding the fact, Mr. President, that the cost of machinery to the beet-sugar manufacturers was decreasing instead of increasing, the demand being supplied more and more, and finally altogether, by American manufacturers.

There were 76 companies at this time, as reported by the Hardwick committee. This was January, 1913. Their total daily slicing capacity was 63,550 tons. This represents an investment of capital, at $1,000 per ton, of $63,500,000; at $1,250 per ton, $79,437,500; at $1,500 per ton, $95,325,000. The total capitalization was $141,410,000.

Mr. President, I think there can be no question but that 50 per cent of the capitalization of one hundred and forty million and odd dollars then invested in beet-sugar factories was water, pure and simple, and I have no doubt in my own mind that the proportion is really greater. For example, the Great Western

Sugar Co., capitalized for $15,000,000 preferred stock and $15,000,000 of common stock, which last is admittedly water, represents as preferred stock the capitalization of the constituent companies at the time of their consolidation in the present organization.

To show how this preferred stock was watered through the subsidiary concerns I need only to refer to one of them, the Sterling Sugar Co., of Colorado. Its equipment was second hand and secured from a Saginaw factory in Michigan. It cost the Sterling Co. $300,000. Its slicing capacity was 600 tons per day, and probably cost $600,000 originally. That concern was thrown into the combination at one and a half million dollars; that is, one and a half million dollars of the $15,000,000 of the preferred stock of the Great Western Co. The $600,000 was increased 150 per cent before it was merged into the preferred stock of the existing company, which regards that stock as representing money actually invested.

The notorious disproportion between the preferred and the watered stock of the American company is, of course, familiar to every Senator.

Now, let me refer for a moment to the United States Sugar & Land Co., located at Garden City. That represents an actual investment of $900,000, but it is capitalized for $8,000,000, an amount so far in excess of the actual investment as to be startling even in these days. I have the word of a very prominent official of the Great Western Co. regarding the subject to which I am now referring. Speaking of the attempt of the same people to establish a factory at Sheridan, Wyo., and of his desire to do away with the possible competition resulting from such an establishment Mr. Boettcher, in writing to Mr. Morey, says:

> But I fear I will not be able to do anything with them, as they tell me they have sold their common stock of the Garden City plant, which they are now building, at $50 per share and upward. They frankly admit that this common stock is all water and does not represent anything; that is the way they are making their money. They feel they can do the same thing in Sheridan and claim they have a ready sale for their common stock. Most of their stock is sold.

Now, let me refer for a moment to the Michigan Sugar Co., which is one of the organizations in the Senator's own State and in which the American Sugar Refining Co. is a large stockholder. It has a daily slicing capacity of 5,450 tons. Its actual cost was about $5,500,000. It is capitalized at $12,500,000, and the company's balance sheet for 1913 gives good will as a consideration for $5,000,000 of its water. Its good-will item was valued in previous years at $500,000 only.

I think, Mr. President, I have called attention to enough specific instances to justify the contention that instead of $100,000,000 or $141,000,000 of actual cash invested in this business 50 per cent of that amount is a very liberal estimate. This capital has been paid back twice over since these companies were formed and their water is selling above par. We are now about to donate to these companies, so richly watered and well endowed, the power to levy a tax indefinitely hereafter upon the consuming millions of the United States of 1 cent per pound on sugar manufactured by them, or $43,000,000 per year, an amount of money equivalent to 43 per cent of $100,000,000 and 30 per cent of $141,000,000, the only compensation for which is the collection of a similar amount upon the sugar that is imported from other countries to make up the deficiency and which is paid into the Treasury of the United States. This is unnecessary. It is wrong. It is without justification.

For my part I can not afford to cast my vote now differently from the manner in which I cast it in September, 1913, upon this question. For my part, Mr. President, I can not resist the conclusion that the governing motive for this legislation is not a necessity for revenue, because if it were so we would substitute for this act an excise tax of 1 cent a pound upon all sugars, domestic and foreign, and thereby realize a revenue of $86,000,000 pear year to meet our constantly increasing needs, every dollar of which would go to the Government.

Mr. President, I can not by any system of reasoning of which I am capable of understanding justify the necessity of changing our position simply because conditions are changed which require a continuation of this revenue. If that position is correct, we ought to restore the duties on wool because we need the money. If our position is correct, we ought to restore the duty on iron and steel and upon all the other additions we have made to the free list. It is not correct, Mr. President, and the masses of this country will not accept it as correct, albeit my friend the Senator from Iowa is so ready and so willing to welcome to the depleted ranks of his own party the former conquering hosts of democracy. But he will not get them.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. I have already trespassed too long upon the patience and the time of the Senate. I had occasion to express my views upon this subject when the bill was before the Senate for consideration. There are other Senators who wish to be heard and who have a greater claim than myself upon the remaining time for this discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not intend to-day to enter into a general discussion of the necessity of the tariff upon sugar, nor will I take the time of the Senate to state the reasons why the sugar industry of this country is more than prosperous at this time. I am not going to deny that the sugar companies of the United States are making exorbitant profits at this time, more than they ever dreamed of making, and that the dividends they will pay in the near future will be such that the American people would not submit to if the American people did not know the actual reason for it.

There is not a Senator who does not know that the condition of the world brought about by war is the cause of the extreme high prices asked for sugar. It is for that reason, Mr. President, and that only, that the sugar companies of this country are as prosperous as they are to-day.

I believe that all the sugar companies of the country ought to divide a part of the profits that they are making to-day with the farmers who raise the beets, and I am very proud to say that the sugar companies of my own State and of Idaho have given to the beet growers a part of the extra profits that have been made by them brought about by the conditions existing in the world to-day, for they declare——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that the States the Senator has mentioned constitute honorable exceptions to the general rule. There are no increases that I know anything about in my State.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. While the Senator from Colorado is giving his testimony I desire to give mine. They are paying the highest prices for beets in my State ever paid.

Mr. SMOOT. The way the officers of the Utah and Idaho sugar companies proceeded to give the beet grower a part of the profits was to give each grower a given number of pounds of refined sugar for every ton of beets produced by him during the year. That was done without solicitation, and I hope to see it continued as long as the price for sugar continues as high as it is at the present time.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. HARDING. I only want to ask the Senator from Utah if he is aware that all contracts with the cane growers of the Hawaiian Islands are fixed on a basic price of sugar in New York according to the advance in the market?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that I am aware of it. I was only speaking of the beet-sugar industry in this country at present, and I have not the time to go into the question of production of cane sugar in Hawaii.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has tried to make it appear that Mr. Claus A. Spreckels is working for the interest of the people and wanted the duty on sugar removed because of his love for the people. On July 21 and 22, 1913, in addressing the Senate on the subject of sugar, I quoted from the testimony of Mr. Spreckels in substance as follows:

> The beet-sugar growers make the competition severer all the time. I have been carrying on a campaign to reduce the tariff, which is not beneficial to the cane-sugar refiners. I want free trade.

On August 12, 1913, Mr. Spreckels addressed a letter to me, as follows:

FEDERAL SUGAR REFINING CO.,
SMITH & SCHIPPER, AGENTS,
138 Front Street, New York, August 12, 1913.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
Senator from Utah, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I note in a speech that you made in the United States Senate on July 21 and 22 you quote me as saying: "The beet-sugar growers make the competition severer all the time. I have been carrying on a campaign to reduce the tariff, which is not beneficial to the cane-sugar refiners. I want free trade."

Kindly state your authority for making this assertion.

Respectfully,

C. A. SPRECKELS.

I answered that letter August 14, 1913, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 14, 1913.

Mr. C. A. SPRECKELS,
Federal Sugar Refining Co.,
138 Front Street, New York, N. Y.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of August 12, 1913, stating that you note in a speech that I delivered in the United States Senate on July 21 and 22 I quote you as saying: "The beet-sugar growers make the competition severer all the time. I have been carrying on a campaign to reduce the tariff, which is not beneficial to the cane-sugar refiners. I want free trade." You ask me to kindly state my authority for making this assertion. I gladly do as you request, and refer you to your testimony given before the Hardwick committee, with reference to the sugar tariff.

On page 2269 the following questions were asked you by Mr. HINDS, and your answer likewise appears:

"Mr. HINDS. And they [the beet-sugar people] make the competition severer, if it is competition?

"Mr. SPRECKELS. Yes.

"Mr. HINDS. Continually?

"Mr. SPRECKELS. Yes, sir. They have frequently come as far as Pittsburgh." (C. A. Spreckels, 2269.)

On page 2275 appears the following:

"Mr. HINDS. Mr. Spreckels, you have been carrying on a campaign to reduce the tariff as beneficial to the cane-sugar refiners?

"Mr. SPRECKELS. I have.

"Mr. HINDS. Of course, that will be damaging to the beet-sugar refiners?

"Mr. SPRECKELS. To some extent it will." (C. A. Spreckels, 2275.)

The following appears on pages 2277 and 2278:

"Mr. HINDS. In other words, perhaps, you would take it [the tariff] off, would you not, and have free trade?

"Mr. SPRECKELS. I would have free trade.

"Mr. HINDS. You would have free trade in sugar?

"Mr. SPRECKELS. Absolutely." (C. A. Spreckels, 2277 and 2278.)

This is my authority for making the statement I did in my speech.

Respectfully,

REED SMOOT.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Who signed the letter?

Mr. SMOOT. I signed the letter in answer to the demand of Mr. Spreckels to know by what authority I made the statement attributed to him in the Senate on July 21 and 22, 1913. The Senate will notice that I quoted his exact words. I never received a letter from Mr. Spreckels in answer to my letter of August 14, 1913.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me, I think it is notoriously true that every shipment of sugar made by the Spreckels concern for a long period preceding the free-trade bill contained a circular in favor of free sugar.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any question about that, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I saw a number of them myself, and I think they were sent out pretty generally.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I suggested that the amount of capital invested in the sugar companies of the United States was over $100,000,000 because I had seen that statement so many times, and I thought it was well understood; and I find in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House a statement of Mr. Lowry giving the exact figures quoted by the Senator from Colorado. Mr. Lowry says:

I call attention to the fact that the cost of erecting a beet-sugar factory is based on $1,000 per ton slicing capacity.

He gives the names of the companies, the location of the plants, the capitalization, including bonded indebtedness, and the daily slicing capacity, showing that their capitalization, including bonded indebtedness, was $141,410,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator from Utah permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say that I obtained my figures from the Hardwick committee, from Mr. Blakey, and from two other sources also. Those were the principal ones. They are practically identical.

Mr. SMOOT. These are identical with the figures which the Senator quoted; for I followed him very closely in his statement as to the capitalization of the different sugar companies to which he referred in his remarks this afternoon.

Mr. President, Mr. Lowry may know more about the construction of a sugar mill than do the men who put up the money for constructing it; he may know more about the cost of operating a sugar factory than does anybody else in the United States; but I doubt it. Mr. Lowry acted as an agent for Mr. Spreckels. There was an organization formed called the Wholesale Grocers' Association of America.

Mr. HARDWICK. The committee of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of America was the title.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the committee of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of America. It consisted of Mr. Lowry and Mr. Spreckels.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. They constituted the total membership.

Mr. SMOOT. The amount of money collected to make that propaganda was $12,000. Not a single soul paid a dollar of the $12,000 but C. A. Spreckels. Nobody spent a cent but Mr. Spreckels's henchman, Mr. Lowry.

I made the statement, in an interruption of the Senator from Georgia, that Mr. Lowry had testified before committees of Congress that he was in favor of a duty of 50 cents a hundred on sugar. Let us see if I was correct. I can refer not only to one place, but I can refer to half a dozen places, where he testified that——

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator pardon me just there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not think that that fact was disputed. The difference between the Senator from Utah and myself came about in this way: He said Mr. Lowry expressed it, that that was his individual view, and that the concern for which he worked had also favored free sugar.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, he is speaking here as the secretary of the Association of Wholesale Grocers. Mr. FORDNEY asked him this question:

Mr. FORDNEY. You said the duty you recommend on sugar is higher than the duty collected by foreign countries generally?

Mr. LOWRY. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. The duty you recommend?

Mr. LOWRY. The duty that gives a certain bounty——

Mr. FORDNEY (interposing). Let me get this right. I understood you to say that the duty you would recommend be placed on sugar, which is a reduction, is a higher rate than that collected by lots of foreign countries on imported sugar?

Now, I turn to Mr. Lowry's direct testimony, and he says:

In amplification of this I desire to file the attached statements, one under the caption of "Our high tariff on sugar from the consumers' standpoint" and the other a "Protest," which directly refers to the majority report of the Senate Finance Committee.

The statements filed are as follows:

"Our high tariff on sugar from the consumers' standpoint."

This gives the rate of duty that was then enforced. Then this follows:

Rates we propose—

Not what Mr. Lowry proposes, but the "rates we propose."

While he was testifying he was in the employment of Mr. Claus A. Spreckels. Nobody paid him a cent while he acted as secretary of that association but Mr. Claus A. Spreckels.

These are the "rates that we propose"——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt the Senator's statement is true; but does the Senator not recall that in the testimony before the lobby committee it appeared that the beet-sugar association also had a means of raising money, consisting of a levy of 2 cents a bag upon sugar, and producing many more than $12,000 every year for use in Washington?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no question at all about it. The beet-sugar people have donated to a fund for the purpose of offsetting, if possible, the efforts on the part of Mr. Spreckles and other sugar-refining concerns to destroy the sugar industry of this country.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I will do so in a moment.

I am going before I close to tell the Senate just why Mr. Spreckels and most of the sugar-refining companies—perhaps to be technically correct I should say Mr. Lowry instead of Mr. Spreckels, although Mr. Lowry was representing Mr. Spreckels, and meant Mr. Spreckels when he referred to "rates we propose," and this includes the so-called independent refineries. Free sugar was not wanted, but they wanted about one-half a cent per pound duty imposed on sugar. If Senators will have patience with me, I will tell them why they desired this ideal rate, and it was for no love they had for the people. It was for a selfish purpose.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the Senator from Utah yield to me right there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield right there, he uses the expression "so-called independents." The Senator will not dispute the unanimous conclusions of the committee which under specific authority investigated this very question, and on which his party had distinguished representation, to the effect that Mr. Spreckels was a real competitor of the trust, will he?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can show by the quotations of sugar in the New York market that there was scarcely a day that Mr. Spreckels did not follow the American Sugar Co.'s prices up or down. The quotations were identical nearly every morning in the year. If you will take Willett & Gray's reports to-morrow morning, you will find that the quotations for to-day will be exactly the same, whether there be an advance over the prices of the day before or whether a reduction. I do not believe that if they are truly independent and want to compete with the Sugar Trust, so called, that they would always be following it in its prices as they have done in the past.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HARDWICK. Will it bother the Senator for me to have a little colloquy with him on that point?

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. HARDWICK. I shall not take up much time. As a matter of fact, if the Senator will take the Weekly Sugar Journal of Willett & Gray, will he not find, or has he not found, that many times first one and then the other cut their prices? Finally, of course, there is an equilibrium of prices, but I challenge the Senator to prove the statement that he has just made. He can not do it to save his immortal soul. In my opinion, if the Senator will look a little further, he will find that on various occasions, first one and then the other of all the refineries put the price down; but gradually, of course, there is an equilibrium restored.

Mr. SMOOT. If I were a betting man, Mr. President, and the Senator from Georgia were the same, I would challenge him now for a bet that I could take to-morrow morning's quotations from Willett & Gray, of New York, and the quotations of every one of the refineries of the United States would be found to be exactly the same.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I am surprised that the Senator should make any such statement as that. The proposition of the Senator is very attractive, and if I were not so religiously minded I think I would accept it and stake a large sum on that proposition; but I will say to the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. I am not a betting man, but I will assure the Senator that if I were a betting man I would accept his proposition, and I would place no limit on the amount.

Mr. President, I have referred to the rates on sugar and was about to call the attention of the Senate to that matter, when I was interrupted. Now, practically, these are the rates that "we propose," quoting from Mr. Lowry: Refined sugar, per pound, sixty-two hundredths of a cent; raw sugar, 96 per cent test, 60 cents per hundred, or six-tenths of a cent a pound. He then goes on and says that—

Under reciprocity treaty, importations from Cuba pay 20 per cent less in both cases.

Or, in other words, the 96-test sugar that comes from Cuba would be 60 cents less 20 per cent, which would make it 48 cents per hundred. All sugars that come from Cuba are 96 per cent sugars. See how clever the sugar refiners of this country are! They know if they can get a 50-cent rate on sugar, with a 20 per cent reduction from Cuba—and all of our importations, with the exception of a few thousand tons of sugar comes from Cuba—that that would be a protection of 40 cents a hundred pounds. With that 40 cents a hundred the refiners know that they can destroy the sugar industry of this country, and when it should be destroyed they would impose an exorbitant price for sugar upon the people of this country, as they did in 1911, when they had the power to do so, and raised sugar until it reached, in New York City, 7½ cents a pound and remained so until the beet sugar produced that year came into the market.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator certainly knows that at the time of which he speaks the beet-sugar men had disposed of their sugar in October at prices much less than that figure and delivered at the price for which they had contracted. So, instead of being an act of philanthropy, it was simply poor business.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah does not know any such thing. The Senator from Utah knows that the price in New York began to advance in July, 1911, when there was no beet sugar on the market, and he knows that the price increased to 7½ cents a pound, and the Senator further knows that just as soon in October as the beet sugar entered the market the price of sugar began to drop. The Senator knows another thing——

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator says I "know better." I want to tell the Senator that I know what I state to be a fact, that beet sugar was sold prior to the rise and delivered after the rise, because the beet-sugar people could not help themselves. "Philanthropy" and "beet sugar" are inconvertible terms.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know anything about what the Colorado sugar companies did——

Mr. THOMAS. I am talking about the entire situation.

Mr. SMOOT. But I do know that other companies did not sell their sugar earlier, and I know that the entry of beet sugar on the market brought down the price of sugar in New York, and it began to drop just as soon as the beet sugar was offered for sale. Furthermore, that is not the only time, Mr. President, that conditions similar to those of 1911 have happened. It happens nearly every year, but not to so marked an extent.

The sugar-refining companies do not want free sugar. If they had free sugar, they would have to compete with the sugars of Austria, the sugars of Germany, the sugars of France, and the sugars of the other countries of the world. They want the duty just high enough so that they can control the American market and secure the advantage they have always enjoyed of the preferential rate granted to Cuba of 20 per cent reduction; they want it low enough so that they can destroy the American sugar industry and at the same time handle only Cuban sugars. The committee hearings are full of testimony showing that the sugar refiners of this country were apprehensive of the growth of the sugar industry in this country, for every pound of domestic sugar produced took from them the opportunity to bring in from Cuba and refine an equal amount of sugar.

The beet-sugar factories were interfering with their trade. Even Mr. Atkins, of the American Sugar Refining Co., the trust, so called, testified to that effect. He wanted a reduction of the duty on sugar, but he did not want free sugar. Mr. Atkins and his predecessor conceived the idea that if they bought a controlling interest in all of the beet-sugar factories of the country they could see to it that there would be no further extension of the beet-sugar industry in the United States, and they undertook to acquire a controlling interest, and in many States did acquire such an interest. They are not, however, holding as much stock in beet-sugar companies as in the past. They are selling it just as fast, I understand, as they can. I will say that while at one time they owned a majority of the stock of the sugar companies of Utah and Idaho they do not own a cent in those companies to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. According to the last annual statement of the American Sugar Refining Co., their investments in beet-sugar stocks are nearly as large as ever, and 50 per cent of their income is derived from the profit upon that stock. I think, with the exception of the sales of their holdings in the Utah companies, their interest in the beet-sugar companies of the country is practically what it was in 1913.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I know that every dollar of stock they owned in the sugar factories of Utah and every dollar of stock they owned in the sugar factories of Idaho has been sold. I know that Mr. Warren, testifying as to the Michigan factories, stated that most of the holdings of the American Sugar Co. in Michigan factories had been sold.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator when the testimony of Mr. Warren, to which he has referred, was given?

Mr. SMOOT. I should not have used the word "testimony."

Mr. THOMAS. Was it in 1913?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it was not at that time; it was in a statement made to a newspaper, as I remember it. I think it was less than a year ago.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think I may say upon Mr. Warren's authority—for he ought to know, and he told me—that the sugar refining company does not own a dollar's worth of stock in the Michigan company.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I must proceed. I am not finding fault at all with the position taken by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] or the position taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. They are consistent in their position. They believe in free sugar, and always have believed in free sugar, no matter whether or not the removal of the duty would wipe out the sugar industry in the United States.

How often have we heard upon the floor of the Senate the expression "hothouse industries"! Why, Mr. President, we have heard it not only in regard to sugar, but in regard to many other articles; we have heard it in regard to dyestuffs; and now it is almost the unanimous opinion of the American people that there was a mistake made in not protecting dyestuffs sufficiently to enable the establishing of the industry in this country.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Senator knows better than I do that the chief opponents of the establishment of a dye industry in this country were the great textile manufacturers of America.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to admit that the textile manufacturers of this country opposed an increase of the duty upon dyestuffs; and, when I say "dyestuffs," I refer to the coal-tar products.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado is in error when he says that the manufacturers are opposed to a duty upon dyestuffs at the present time.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not say anything about the present time; I was talking about the past, and the reason why the industry had not been established. The statement was made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and admitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] several days ago.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I admit now that in the past the textile manufacturers did not want to increase the rate of 30 per cent on coal-tar products.

Mr. THOMAS. Not only did they not want an increase, but they prevented the regulation of the duties upon the intermediate products so as to make an industry of that kind impossible here.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not go that far. I think the Senator has gone too far when he says that. I will admit this——

Mr. THOMAS. I can only appeal to the result. We have not any such industry.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that. How many times have I stood upon this floor when we have had the question up and told the Senate of the United States of the only way that a dyestuff industry could be established in this country? I said the other day, and I say now, that under the present duties on dyestuffs it is impossible to establish such an industry in this country and maintain it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if the real facts in the case are not that, under the condition of German trust control in dyestuffs the year before the war, it was the universal sentiment, not only of the manufacturers, but of almost everyone else who had studied the subject, that it would be impossible to impose a duty that would establish a dyestuff industry in this country? And is it not true that under present war conditions a proper duty would almost inevitably establish and maintain this industry and that the manufacturers of this country are almost a unit in demanding such a duty?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Utah to say—I think he must have made the statement inadvertently—that a mistake was made in not providing a sufficient protection for the dye industry. I do not know whether the Senator meant to say that the mistake was made by the Republicans or made by the Democrats, because the Senator knows, as a matter of fact, that no material change in the duty on coal-tar products was made in the present law as compared to the rates under the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken there.

Mr. SIMMONS. I say there has been no material change.

Mr. SMOOT. The present law imposes a duty of 30 per cent upon coal-tar products.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Some coal-tar products.

Mr. SMOOT. Some coal-tar products—that is well said—but the intermediate products have been placed upon the dutiable list at 10 per cent, and we know that it is impossible to get many of them anywhere except from Germany.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was only speaking about the finished product, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. We were talking about establishing the industry, and if you impose a duty upon the things that enter into the finished product you impose that much of a burden upon the manufacturer; and that burden was not upon him when the Republican tariff act of 1909 was in force.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is the only material difference, namely, the duty on the intermediate products.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the duty on coal-tar dyes is the same as under the preceding tariff law, and the duty upon the intermediate products was placed as it was at the insistence of the representatives of the textile manufacturers of the United States.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah allow me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. In order that there may be no misconception in regard to those duties, allow me to say that the duty on synthetic indigo and the duty on alizarin, one being the foundation of the very important color blue——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I was speaking of coal-tar dyes only.

Mr. LIPPITT. Those are coal-tar dyes.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, no.

Mr. LIPPITT. Of course they are. Alizarin is an extract, and so is synthetic indigo. They are both coal-tar colors.

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged to the Senator for the information. My impression was that they were not coal-tar dyes.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was going to say that synthetic indigo, which is the color used in dyeing blue, and alizarin, which is the color used in dyeing red, are both on the free list while aniline oil, which is the foundation for black, is dutiable at 10 per cent. Those three colors, and other coal-tar derivatives, such as anthracine and indanthrine, constitute a very large proportion of the total colors that are used in the United States. There is a catch-all clause in the schedule on dyestuffs, stating that on all coal-tar products not otherwise provided for there shall be collected a duty of 30 per cent, but there are very few things of any importance that come in under that part of the schedule.

Mr. THOMAS. But the Senator knows that under the duties provided by the Payne-Aldrich law and previous laws there was no established dye industry in the United States of any consequence.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah knows that, following the passage of the tariff act of 1913, a number of chemical industries which had lived in this country before, particularly in the city of St. Louis, had to go out of business, because of the reduction in the tariff upon their products. I know of an industry—and I think the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] would corroborate me if he were here—which had to close its doors, and all its machinery was thrown into the junk heap. That is not all. The Senator from Utah knows that the manufacture of oxalic acid in this country has a remarkable history worthy of repeating; but I have not the time now to go into that, except to say that under the duty imposed by the Underwood law it has been found impossible to maintain that industry in this country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I could go on and enumerate a great many items, Mr. President, in the chemical schedule, but we are discussing the sugar duty, and it is now 35 minutes after 4.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I was going to suggest to the Senator. I understand that other Senators desire to speak upon the sugar question.

Mr. SMOOT. If other Senators desire to be heard, I do not want to prevent them. I simply want to state, in conclusion, that I am in full accord with the statement made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], that the man who knows more than any other living man about the sugar conditions in the world is Mr. Willett; and I want to briefly call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of Mr. Willett in regard to the sugar industry of this country. I wish the Senate to know that he, like every other American citizen who has studied this question from every point of view, knows that domestic sugar reduces the cost of all sugar consumed to the people of the country. Mr. Sulzer asked a question of Mr. Willett during the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, as follows:

> What, in your judgment as an expert, would bring about a permanent reduction of the cost of manufactured sugar to the consumers of the United States?
> Mr WILLETT By increasing the amount of domestic production and in Porto Rico and Hawaii; that is, by increasing the quantity of sugar within the United States to the extent that we would be required to purchase no sugar whatever at world prices. Last year we bought only 77,000 tons at the world price. We were as near as that to that condition in 1910. We did come within 77,000 tons of being entirely free and independent of the world's prices, whereas a few years before we had been importing 6,700,000 tons.

Now, Mr. President, I want to state once more that if the present rate of duty upon sugar could be maintained without a question and the people of the United States knew that it would remain for 20 years, long before the 20-year period expired we would be producing every pound of sugar consumed by the American people. I can point to four States in this Union that can produce sufficient sugar not only to supply all the demand of the American people to-day, but produce sugar enough to supply the demand if the consumption in the United States were three times what it is to-day. I may be asked why do they not do it. Simply because they do not know what is going to happen to their industry; and I tell you that it is impossible to produce sugar in this country as cheaply as it can be produced in the tropical countries of the world or as cheaply as it can be produced in Austria or in Germany or in Russia.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What would be the situation in this country to-day with reference to that article of necessit,, sugar, if it were not for the domestic production that our friends upon the other side say was artificially stimulated and unconstitutionally protected? What would be our situation, in view of the present European war, with reference to that product, especially with the usual and ordinary sources of their supply cut off?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, the situation would be about like this: Instead of paying the exorbitant price we are paying to-day—$7.10 a bag, I believe, for the last sack that I bought here in Washington—instead of being $7.10 in Washington, more than likely it would be $12 or $15 a bag. Not only would that apply in the United States but it would apply to all the peoples of the world.

Not long ago I called the attention of the Senate of the United States, right after the beginning of the war, to the fact that the first advance that was made upon sugar, the advance of 2 cents a pound on the sugar that was consumed by the American people, and was being paid, was sufficient for the Government of the United States to erect factories enough to produce all the sugar that the people consumed. I say so now, Mr. President; and as the price has increased from that time, the statement can apply to it with more force than when I made it here immediately following the beginning of this war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, is it not a fact that that country is being penalized most in the present price of sugar which produces none, and those countries are benefiting by the lowest price of sugar which produce most?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that is an economic question, and it is just as sure to be the case as that the night follows the day; so there is no necessity for me to discuss it further now. I will yield the floor, therefore, because I know there are other Senators who desire to speak.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, Mr. President, I will address myself to the Senate in my own time.

I just want to say this—and I am not going to occupy more than a moment, because I know the Senator from North Caroline [Mr. SIMMONS] expects to get a vote in a few moments, and perhaps the Senator desires to say something himself before the vote is taken.

I think it is perfectly safe to say that the price of sugar in England, which was about 9 or 10 cents, the last quotation I saw, is higher than here because they produce none themselves. They are buying their sugar in large quantities from Cuba, paying a huge penalty for their neglect. The heavier the burden that is put upon Cuba the higher the price of sugar will be. If we were dependent upon Cuba and had no domestic production of our own we would be at the mercy of the sugar producer. That would be a most undesirable situation for our country to be in, and a policy of national dependence does not commend itself to thinking people; and I rejoice that even at this late day there is some evidence upon the other side of the Chamber that they are forsaking their false idols and coming to our view upon the question of protection to this industry.

I have no word of criticism to offer. Indeed I rather rejoice that the industry is to be partially saved through this belated act of repentance. All Senators know that if this free-trade law had been permitted to go into full effect May 1 it would have marked the beginning of the end of the domestic sugar industry.

I am glad that my honored friend from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], whose motives are always good and whose patriotism can not be questioned, has shown the courage and good judgment not only to take this action but to take it gracefully, admitting by his course the untenable position which his committee and himself occupied in connection with the present tariff law, for which Senators upon the other side were responsible. That the Underwood-Simmons law is a failure all should admit; that the sugar schedule has proven a failure all now admit.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not know of any other Senator who desires to speak. If so, I will yield. What I have to say will not take over 10 or 15 minutes. I do not desire to enter into any discussion of the sugar question further than to make a few general observations with reference to the present status of the matter and the attitude of the party to which I belong with respect to it.

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] was good enough to speak kindly of me in connection with the action of the conference committee in receding from the Senate amendment. The Senator need not have complimented that action on my part, because I assure the Senator it was taken very unwillingly, and the bill as passed by the House was accepted not because the conferees desired to accept it, but because they were led to believe that with the conditions in the House it was improbable that body would accept the Senate substitute.

Mr. President, upon this question of sugar, as I took occasion to say when this bill was before the Senate on the 10th day of this month, both the Democratic Party and the Republican Party, so far as their legislation goes and so far as the public utterances of the leaders of these two parties in the House and Senate illustrate the positions of the parties they represented, have been on both sides of this question. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has read some speeches from Democrats, some of them favoring a duty upon sugar and some of them advocating free sugar.

Mr. President, following the example of the Senator from Iowa, I could entertain the Senate for hours in reading declarations on the part of leading Republicans of this body and of the House in 1890, 1894, and 1897 in favor of free sugar, a principle of the Republican Party, and declaring that a tax upon sugar was an outrage against the people. I could read from speeches of that great leader of the Republican Party, probably the greatest authority in his day in that party, upon the subject of tariff taxation, Senator Aldrich—expressions with reference to this question made in 1890 and 1894 on the McKinley and Wilson bills of the most extreme character against any tax on sugar, denouncing it as an unjustifiable and indefensible outrage upon the American people and declaring if he could find a stronger term of condemnation he would employ it. I could read also similar utterances at that time from such great Republican leaders as Hale, Allison, and Morrill. I could also read from the speeches of Senator Aldrich in 1897, while he was Republican leader of this body, when the Dingley bill was passed, declarations to the effect that it was with great reluctancy he was willing to give up the old position of the Republican Party, yielded its position in favor of free sugar, but that the revenue necessities of the Government seemed to make it possible to put it on the free list at that time.

I think, to be frank about it—and I do not want to play any politics upon this subject—both of the great political parties of to-day in their legislation with reference to sugar have been governed very largely by the revenue necessities of the Government. I do not say altogether, but largely.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator knows that no politics are being played on either side of the Chamber on this matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said I did not think that was the case.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator did say that; but I want to ask the Senator, in all seriousness, if the extreme utterances to which he alludes on the part of Republican leaders can be found since the beet-sugar industry became an accomplished fact?

Mr. SIMMONS. I find them uttered in 1894 and 1897. The beet-sugar industry antedated both of those dates.

Mr. GALLINGER. There was some beet sugar produced in this country before that time.

Mr. SIMMONS. In 1890 and in 1897 the beet-sugar industry in this country had assumed quite considerable proportions, though not so large as now.

Mr. GALLINGER. But does the Senator find anything as late as 1897?

Mr. SIMMONS. Since 1897 the Republican Party has stood, so far as I know, for a duty upon sugar; but a few days ago, when I called up the sugar bill, I read to the Senate an extract from the speech delivered in 1897 on the Dingley bill by Senator Aldrich, then the leader of the Republican Party, upon this question, expressing great regret that, on account of the revenue necessities of the Government, the old-time principle of the Republican Party of free sugar could not be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. And at that time a bounty was placed on sugar.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; there the Senator makes a great mistake. The bounty was placed on sugar in 1890, when the McKinley bill was passed; but when Senator Aldrich made the speech to which I have referred, in which he declared that a tax upon sugar was an outrage, and when he made the speech a few years later in which he declared that on account of the revenue necessities of the Government he regretted that the party was unable to apply the Republican doctrine of free sugar, there was no proposition on either of those occasions to put a bounty upon sugar. The Senator from New Hampshire knows perfectly well that in 1894, when we were considering the Wilson bill, which placed a duty on sugar—the Senator was a Member of this body at that time——

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. He knows that Senator Peffer, a Populist Republican Senator, offered an amendment to put sugar upon the free list, and every Democrat voted against that amendment, and every Republican voted for it. He knows there was not at that time any suggestion or expectation that the Democratic Party, which then was in possession of both branches of Congress, would put a bounty upon sugar.

Mr. GALLINGER. But there was very little sugar being manufactured in this country, except in Louisiana, at that time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, I think the Senator is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very little.

Mr. THOMAS. What are the dates to which the Senator refers?

Mr. SIMMONS. Eighteen hundred and ninety-four and eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, when the Wilson and Dingley bills were before Congress. The question when the Wilson bill was up was not free with a bounty but free sugar, or dutiable sugar. And the Republicans under these circumstances voted for free sugar on the motion offered by Senator Peffer, under the leadership of Aldrich, Hale, and Allison.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, the beet-sugar industry was introduced here in 1889.

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not submit to further interruptions, because, as the Senator knows, this is to be voted on in a few minutes and my time is very short.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just one word. I want to say simply that the Republican Party placed a bounty on sugar to protect the domestic industry, and the Republican Party is not responsible for having repealed that law.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and in answer to that I say that for seven years after the beet-sugar industry was started in this country the Republican Party apparently, at least, stood for free sugar.

Mr. GALLINGER. With a bounty.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not with a bounty in 1894, because you knew when you voted for the Peffer amendment to the Wilson bill that you would not get any bounty upon sugar, and you did not at that time suggest any bounty upon sugar.

Now, Mr. President, one other thing. Senators on the other side are twitting us with the suggestion that the present duty on sugar which the pending bill proposes to make permanent is a Republican protective duty. They are taking the sweet unction to their souls that we, in the vote we are going to cast to-day, are following them and voting with them. We will vote not for a duty placed on sugar by the Republicans but for a duty placed on it by the Democrats. It is neither a protective duty nor a Republican imposed duty. We found a high protective duty upon sugar when in 1913 we went to write the present tariff. As we found a high protective duty upon many other things; but we revised these duties, and to reduce them to a revenue basis according to the standard of a revenue tariff established in the act of 1913.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not yield until I finish what I wish to say; if the time for debate has not expired, I will yield to the Senator. We made the same ratio of reduction in the present tariff act in the duty on sugar that we made in the duties that the Payne-Aldrich Act imposed upon other things of like character and importance. We made substantially the same ratio of reduction from the Republican protective rates upon sugar that we made upon woolen goods, substantially the same ratio of reduction that we made upon cotton goods, and substantially the same ratio of reduction that we made upon iron and steel and other staple commodities.

SEVERAL SENATORS. How about wool?

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask my friends upon the other side this question: Do you claim that our duties upon woolens, our duties upon cotton goods, and our duties upon steel and iron are protective duties?

Mr. SMOOT. You have no duty upon wool.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said upon woolens, not upon wool. You have habitually denounced the duties we placed on woolens, cotton goods, iron, steel, and so forth, as free-trade duties; and though we made the same ratio of reduction upon sugar that we did upon them, you now pretend to think and claim the duty retained on sugar is a protective duty. You know if under these circumstances the duties we retained on these things are free-trade or revenue duties, then by the same token the duty retained on sugar is a free-trade or revenue duty.

Mr. GALLINGER. You put wool on the free list.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not say wool; I said woolens. We put wool and some other things on the free list, just as you put over 50 per cent of all imports in your law on the free list.

Mr. President, I repeat, we claim that the duties which we imposed in the present tariff act upon woolens, and upon iron and steel, and upon cotton goods, and other things of like character, were revenue duties; and as we reduced the duty upon sugar in the same ratio, applying the same principle, the duty we wrote on sugar is likewise a revenue duty, and not a protective duty. I say to the Senator from New Hampshire that was the contention of his party when the present tariff act was under discussion in Congress. Your party opposed that bill upon the ground that the duties it imposed were not protective; and you denounced them all, including sugar, as free-trade duties.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, does the Senator prefer not to yield this afternoon?

Mr. SIMMONS. I would prefer not to yield just at this time. I will yield to the Senator in a minute, if I have time.

Now, Mr. President, the Senators say we are following them. They are wrong. We are voting to continue the very identical duty that we fixed upon sugar; and we fixed it upon the idea that as we were going to continue sugar on the dutiable list for three years we ought to reduce the rate to a revenue basis, just as we sought to reduce the rates of the articles I have referred to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Just one minute. If the present duty upon sugar was not a protective duty then, it is not a protective duty now.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just one word. I want to ask the Senator if, when the party to which he belongs fixed the present rate—and he was a very prominent actor in that economic tragedy——

Mr. SIMMONS. I tell the Senator that the "economic tragedy," as he calls the Democratic tariff act, aided by our Democratic financial legislation, lifted the business of the country out of the depressed condition in which we found it when we came into power and restored prosperity before the war. I could read from clippings I have before me hundreds of extracts from great trade agencies and great metropolitan newspapers and declarations of great captains of industry, proclaiming that prosperity was not coming but had already arrived, and to stay.

Mr. GALLINGER. May I finish my sentence? When that duty was placed on sugar, and the reduction was agreed to, did the Senator expect that two or three years afterwards he would be in favor of repealing that part of the law?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I will say to the Senator that I expected that in two or three years sugar would go upon the free list.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. But as we temporarily continue the duty, we fixed the duty in the meantime according to the Democratic idea and the Democratic standard of a tariff for revenue, just as we did with respect to these other things; and it is this revenue duty we now propose to further continue and not the protective duty of the Payne-Aldrich Act.

Mr. GALLINGER. You provided to take it all off. That was your idea.

Mr. SIMMONS. We provided that at the end of three years sugar should be untaxed. And in the meantime we repealed the high protective rates of the Payne-Aldrich Act and put sugar upon the same basis as other dutiable articles.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator really contend that when we join with him in passing the bill he is contending for there will be no protection in the law?

Mr. SIMMONS. I contend this: That we believe in free sugar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That if conditions would permit, we would have free sugar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That we did not put it on the free list immediately because of the conditions; that in continuing it we applied to it the same Democratic standard of what is a revenue duty that we applied to other articles placed on the dutiable list in the bill, and that now, when we vote to make this duty permanent, we are not voting with you or for protection on sugar.

Mr. GALLINGER. The old fellow in Maine said he was "for prohibition, but agin' its enforcement." That is about the attitude of the Democratic Party.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is an old gag that has no application here, and I think, with deference to the Senator, requires no answer. It does not apply to me. I am in favor of free sugar, so far as that is concerned, and if the circumstances would permit I would be in favor of letting it go upon the free list on the 1st day of May. But they do not permit, and I am happy that in continuing this duty we are continuing it upon the basis of a tariff for revenue, according to the standards which we fixed in our present tariff law.

Mr. SMOOT. The standard of free trade.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator says "the standard of free trade." Are the duties upon the other schedules of that bill upon a free-trade or revenue basis? If they are, this duty on sugar must be upon a free-trade or revenue basis also, because we made like reductions, as I repeatedly said, on sugar as on the other articles taxed in it.

Does the Senator from Rhode Island wish to interrupt me now?

Mr. LIPPITT. The Senator from North Carolina has only five minutes. As some of the subject matter about which I wanted to ask him has been gone over by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], I will not take his time unless he has finished.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have only four minutes left and I will not longer occupy the floor, but yield it to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator's descriptions of free-trade and protective duties. The duty on sugar under a Republican tariff was 1.33 cents a pound. The duty on sugar under a Democratic tariff was 1 cent a pound, and it was to go on the free list on the 1st day of May, 1916. The Senator from North Carolina seems to consider that a duty is a revenue duty if it is 1 cent a pound, that it is a revenue duty if it is nothing a pound, but that if it goes above 1 cent a pound it immediately becomes a protective duty. He describes the reduction in the duty on sugar as being exactly in the same ratio that woolens were reduced, that cottons were reduced, and I suppose perhaps if he had thought of it he would have said silks, because he referred to other textiles. There was a duty of 50 per cent left on silks, there was a duty of 35 per cent left on woolen goods, and there was only a duty of less than 20 per cent or about 18 per cent left on cottons, and sugar was to have gone on the free list entirely.

I fail, myself, to understand how duties of percentages of that kind can all be revenue duties. As a plain matter of fact, everybody in the Senate knows that the reason why this duty is put upon sugar is because the Democratic tariff, which was described as having for its sole object the raising of revenue, only succeeded in producing $127,000,000 less revenue than the same amount of imports would have produced if the Republican tariff that it supplanted had been left in force.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the Senator from North Carolina leaves the Chamber, I should like to ask him just one question. Suppose the revenues of the Government should become sufficient to meet the requirements of the Government, would the Senator then be in favor of putting sugar on the free list again?

Mr. SIMMONS. I undoubtedly would, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 5 o'clock p. m.). The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that the Senate recede from its amendment to House bill 11471.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. THOMAS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] has been called away from the city on official business. If he were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when Mr. BECKHAM's name was called). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] is absent on official business. He has a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. BRADY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and I therefore withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent, but I am informed that if present he would vote "yea" on this question. I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], but on this bill I am privileged to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. TAGGART (when Mr. KERN's name was called). The senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] is unavoidably absent to-day. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I understand, however, that he would vote the same way I intend to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I wish to state that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on official business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I am informed that the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], with whom I have a general pair, would vote as I intend to vote on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I am not sure how he would vote on this question. Therefore I will withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea," and I think the Senator from Kentucky would vote the same way.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], but I understand from his colleague that if he were present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I should like to ask whether the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OWEN. I am paired with that Senator and therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. BRADY. I am advised that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea" if present. I am therefore at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I wish to inquire whether the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—years 59, nays 10, as follows:

YEAS—59.

So the Senate receded from its amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 24, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, April 22, 1916.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art infinitely wise, all powerful, whose love encircles all, we thank Thee that under the dispensation of Thy providence we are brought once more to the anniversary of the greatest event in all history, the resurrection of the "Son of Man," confirming the longings, hopes, and aspirations which have filled the hearts of men in all generations in the unbroken continuity of life, which will adjust all wrongs, clear away misunderstandings, fill all hearts with love, and unite mankind into one family.

There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in His justice,
Which is more than liberty.
There's no place where earthly sorrows
Are more felt than up in heaven;
There's no place where earthly failings
Have such kindly judgment given.
For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind,
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

Help us, we beseech Thee, to add life unto life, strength unto strength, love unto love, that we may be prepared for the transition which waits on all. It is written "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him. For I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CELEBRATION OF LANDING OF SIR FRANCIS DRAKE ON THE COAST OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have taken from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution No. 20, now as amended by the Senate Senate joint resolution 121, and have the Senate amendment concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought this was a House resolution.

Mr. KENT. It was originally passed in the House and amended in the Senate. It was entirely my fault——

The SPEAKER. But how did it get another number in the Senate?

Mr. KENT. Because it was a concurrent resolution and was amended to be a Senate joint resolution, and the Senate has given it a new number.

Mr. MANN. It being amended to be a joint resolution, they did not feel authorized to change the number, but they have amended our amendment by changing the number.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendments.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, those are the House amendments. The Clerk should read the Senate amendment to the House amendments.

The SPEAKER. Those are the House amendments.

Mr. MANN. There is a Senate amendment to the first House amendment, and undoubtedly it is there, if the Clerk will find it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 20) authorizing the appointment of a representative of the United States Government to appear at the celebration of the landing of Sir Francis Drake on the coast of California, with a further amendment, as follows: Strike out the numerals "20" after "S. J. Res." and insert "121."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. It is a privileged matter.

The question was taken, and the Senate amendment was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Philippine question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the Philippine question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not——

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves the call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Adair	Dyer	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 286 gentlemen have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

INCREASE OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12766, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 12766. An act to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Would that interfere with my privilege?

The SPEAKER. Not a particle.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman be willing to let his request go over until Monday?

Mr. HAY. Will the gentleman say if it does go over until Monday there will be no objection to it?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. HAY. I do not see that there is any use of letting it go over if there is going to be objection.

Mr. MANN. I stated to the gentleman yesterday morning that I had not had a chance to examine the Senate amendments, and I have not had a chance yet, but I will have a chance to do so before Monday.

Mr. HAY. I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the ranking member of the Committee on Military Affairs on that side of the House has had ample opportunity to look into it. I do not want to press the gentleman. If the gentleman will say there will be no objection to this request on Monday, I will withdraw it now.

Mr. MANN. If I say there will be no objection on Monday, I might as well say there will be no objection now, for the very reason I want to examine the Senate amendments and see whether there will be any effort made for some vote in the House on the subject.

Mr. HAY. I am perfectly willing, if the gentleman desires it, to let the bill be called up, and if the gentleman wants to do so he can make a motion to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. I will be very frank with the gentleman and say that I will have to object this morning to unanimous consent on it. Whether I would object Monday or not I do not know. I have not examined the Senate amendments, and I expect to do so before Monday.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. HAY. I insist on my request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then it is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BRIDGE ACROSS FOX RIVER AT GENEVA, ILL.

Mr. COPLEY. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Speaker to take from the desk the bill S. 5415 and lay it before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the Senate bill, a similar bill being on the House Calendar.

Mr. COPLEY. This is exactly similar to the bill H. R. 14387.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5415) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Fox River at Geneva, Ill.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago & North Western Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the States of Wisconsin, Illinois, and Michigan, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in the city of Geneva and State of Illinois in accordance with the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COPLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill of similar tenor, H. R. 14387, will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a change of reference of the bill H. R. 14822 from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not understand what the gentleman was saying, there being so much noise.

Mr. MANN. This may be very interesting, but we can not hear it.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill H. R. 14822, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. This same bill was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. What is the bill?

Mr. OGLESBY. It is a bill to prevent the desecration, mutilation, or improper use of the flag within the District of Columbia. The Committee on the District of Columbia had the bill under consideration, and suggested a number of changes, and in order that it might not be in position where we had too many amendments I reintroduced the bill, and I think it was an error when it was referred to the other committee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of suffrage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of suffrage.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is not a communication by some other individual than the Member?

Mr. CRAMTON. In part, and part a communication by me—both very brief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 14345, for the relief of J. P. Patterson, has been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. If it is a private bill the chairman of the committee to which it is referred can change it himself. The Speaker has nothing to do with it.

Mr. ALMON. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads suggested that I make the request.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference what the committee requested. It is a private bill, and all the gentleman has to do is to write on the back of the bill where he wishes it to go.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], under a special order, is entitled to speak not to exceed 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker: Since the Menace, a paper published at Aurora, Mo., a paper which would rather be a religious bigot than be right, has preferred to be an alarmist rather than truthful concerning the House bill known as "the juvenile court bill," I have concluded to make a short statement relative to the bill.

After having laid down the general principle that the bill is of Catholic origin and has for its principal purpose the placing of Protestant children in "Roman Catholic prisons," that hysterical paper then complains of other alleged wrongs in the bill. One of these is that persons under 17 years of age who violate the law may be placed in institutions "other than public institutions." Another complaint is that the hearing or trial of youthful offenders may be "private" instead of public. And another is that the records of the court proceedings may be withheld from the public.

I wish to say that the proposition to place youthful offenders in institutions "other than public institutions" is conceded by the world over to be better than placing them in public institutions with hardened criminals. Forty-four States out of the forty-eight which compose the United States have a similar law. Such a law has been enacted in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

In each and every one of those States that law was enacted by a non-Catholic legislative body.

The second complaint is that no hearing against a youthful offender should be "private." Such hearings are permitted to be private or in chambers in the States of Alabama, Arizona, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, North Dakota, Rhode Island, and Washington—17 in all. Non-Catholic legislatures enacted that law in those States.

The third objection made by this hysterical alarmist is that the "records" of hearings concerning youthful offenders may be withheld from the public. All modern trend of humane and charitable thought is now in that direction. A similar law is upon the statute books of Georgia, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, and Virginia. The Virginia law was adopted only year before last, while that of New York was adopted as late as last year.

The bill about which this religious bigot complains so bitterly, and with so little reason, extends clemency and mercy and at the same time holds out hope to the childish offender, yet redeemable from a life of crime, instead of dealing with him or her as a hardened, professional criminal of mature years, for whom there is no hope and for whom there should be little or no clemency.

The Menace, the bigoted critic of the bill, boldly makes the assertion that under its provisions Protestant children will be committed to "Roman Catholic prisons," notwithstanding the fact that section 25 of the bill provides in plain language that the judge of the court, in committing children to institutions "other than public institutions," shall commit them to a "custodial agency" holding the same religious belief as the parents of the child or to some institution or association governed by persons of like religious faith. Therefore, the judge of the court could not send a Protestant child to either a well-conducted Catholic institution, to a Catholic home, or to the alleged "Roman Catholic prison," of which the Menace speaks just as though such a thing really existed. Under the provisions of the bill the judge of the juvenile court would be required to select a Presbyterian "custodial agency" for a Presbyterian child, a Methodist "custodial agency" for a Methodist child, a Baptist "custodial agency" for a Baptist child, a Jewish "custodial agency" for a Jewish child, an Episcopalian "custodial agency" for an Episcopalian child, a Congregationalist "custodial agency" for a Congregationalist child, and a Catholic "custodial agency" for a Catholic child only.

As I have already said, similar laws, enacted by non-Catholic legislative bodies, are now upon the statute books of 44 out of the 48 States of the Union.

If a girl of 12 or 14 years should be arrested for an unchaste offense against the law, can any person charitably inclined tell me or anybody else why her trial should be opened to the morbidly curious and the scandal monger? If a girl of like age should be rescued from a bawdy house and placed in a Masonic orphan asylum, or in a Methodist orphan asylum, or in a Baptist orphan asylum, or in a Presbyterian orphan asylum, or in a Catholic orphan asylum, and there be reformed and afterwards become a good woman, can anyone tell me why the legal record which committed her to the custody of any of these institutions should be held for all time as a public record against her past life, a life which she has left behind? Why should any wicked man, either for the purpose of lustful or pecuniary blackmail or for any other purpose, be permitted to go and get the record of her past, which could not possibly be used for any good purpose but of necessity could be used only for an evil purpose?

As I have said, the most modern thought is upon the charitable and merciful side of this question; and the States of Georgia, New Jersey, New York, Oregon, Rhode Island, and Virginia have already enacted laws to shield reformed girls and boys, rather than to have them forever confronted with a record against which they could not stand in any new community to which they might go.

As already said, neither of the three complained-of provisions of the bill is a pioneer one. The people of every civilized land have come to treat youthful offenders with more charity and less severity than is meted out to the confirmed criminal who, by his many and repeated unlawful acts, has put himself beyond the sympathies of tolerant men and women.

The proposed law for the District of Columbia is not an ice-breaking, pioneer one for the District of Columbia as the incendiary impostor would have his uninformed readers to believe.

Complaint is made against the bill because a child can be "summoned" to appear before the court instead of being dragged there by force. Further complaint is made that a child may be "summoned" to appear in court "without the consent of the father or mother or guardian." Without a considerate juvenile court law the lawbreaking child would be forcibly arrested and taken into court without the consent of the father, mother, or guardian. I ask which is the more humane, and which is better for the future of the child, and even more considerate of the father and mother?

Unless the law make a difference in the manner of arrest, trial, and commitment of the youthful offender and those of mature years, then the youthful offender instead of being quietly "summoned" to appear before the court would be dragged through the streets by uniformed officers, just as is done with the hardened, shameless criminal.

I am constrained to believe that all this furor has been raised by this religious bigot simply because it has happened that the bill was introduced by a Catholic, and because it makes it possible for offending children of Catholic parents to be put into Catholic institutions, just as the offending children of parents of any other religious denomination may be placed in institutions of their faith.

The same bigot prefers to mislead rather than to enlighten when undertaking to convey the apprehension and grave fear that the trial of youthful lawbreakers behind doors closed to the uncharitable traducer is for some mean and debasing purpose rather than a shield between the unfortunate boy or girl and the scandal monger, whose principal pastime is to tell from man to man the frailties and misfortunes of others, even those of the youth of our land.

The same self-constituted guardian of liberty which peddles its false alarms at 25 cents a year to every gullible who can be found to buy them would have it believed that the bill now before Congress is the first to make provision for "private" instead of public hearings of charges against youthful breakers of the law, while in fact, as I have said, substantially the same law is upon the statute books of 17 of our States, put there by non-Catholic legislatures.

If it is true, as this religious bigot would have you believe, that the purpose of the bill is to commit youthful offenders to "Roman Catholic prisons," let us see who these Menace-made, villainous plotters against our boys and girls are.

I introduced the bill at the request of those who prepared it. The bigoted alarmist may say that because I, a Catholic, introduced the bill is sufficient proof of itself of its unholy purpose. I was asked to introduce the bill because I happened to be chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which committee all District bills are referred for consideration. Among those who asked me to introduce the bill is Judge J. W. Latimer. Is he a Catholic, taking orders from the Pope to fill "Roman Catholic prisons"? No; Judge Latimer, whose post-office address is at the Municipal Building, Washington, D. C., is not only a non-Catholic, but a Mason in good standing.

Next, let us see whether or not Catholics drafted this bill so that "Roman Catholic prisons" might be filled.

A Presbyterian Attorney General of the United States selected a committee of five persons who were deemed competent to draft the bill, and fair-minded enough and broad enough to write a bill free from both religious prejudices and religious preferences, in keeping with the Constitution of the United States. The five persons selected were Miss Julia C. Lathrop, Washington, D. C.; Bernard Flexner, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. William J. Kerby, Washington, D. C.; Mr. Walter C. Clephane, Washington, D. C.; and Mr. William H. Baldwin, Washington, D. C.

Are they Catholics doing the bidding of the Pope? Let us see what and who they are.

Miss Julia C. Lathrop in religious belief is a Congregationalist, not a Catholic; Mr. Flexner is a Jew, not a Catholic; Mr. Clephane is a Presbyterian, not a Catholic; Mr. Baldwin is also a Presbyterian, not a Catholic. Dr. Kerby is the only Catholic among them all.

Miss Lathrop was appointed by President Taft as Chief of the Children's Bureau of the United States and was reappointed to that responsible and honorable position by President Wilson.

The Board of Trade of Washington appointed a committee to look into the merits of the bill. That committee carefully considered it, item by item, and with a few minor changes approved it.

Was that committee made up of Catholics in order to run people into "Roman Catholic prisons"? Again, let us see. The chairman of that Committee was Mr. Louis A. Dent, an Episcopalian and Mason, not a Catholic. Another member of that committee was Mr. Merritt O. Chance, also an Episcopalian and Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. George A. Shinn, a Presbyterian and a Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. Thomas W. Smith, a Methodist and a Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. J. Lawrence Solly, a Baptist, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. S. W. Curriden, a Presbyterian, not a Catholic. Another was Mr. Mathew E. O'Brien, a member of no church, but an Odd Fellow, a Knight of Pythias, and a Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. Edward S. Schmid, a Lutheran and a Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. D. W. Thayer, a Presbyterian and a Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. William H. Baldwin, a Presbyterian, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. Walter C. Clephane, a Presbyterian and the son of a Mason, not a Catholic. Another member was Mr. John H. Zabel, the only Catholic out of the whole lot.

Can any sane man be made to believe that that committee connived at a proposition to fill "Roman Catholic prisons" with American citizens?

Congressman TINKHAM, who is in charge of the bill upon the floor of this House and who is its principal advocate, is a thirty-second degree Mason. Is he, too, trying to fill "Roman Catholic prisons" with the children of his fellow Masons?

When this bill becomes law the execution of its provisions will be with Judge Latimer, a Mason, not a Catholic. Is it true of him that he will violate his oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States and use his high office to fill "Roman Catholic prisons" with Protestant children?

I ask the Masons of this House and the Masons of this country if they believe, in view of all of the facts, that this bill, written by non-Catholics, will place American citizens in "Roman Catholic prisons"? [Applause.]

LOCK AND DAM, NO. 6, GREAT KANAWHA RIVER, W. VA.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I want to crave your indulgence for a few moments. Yesterday morning I asked unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12455, which I had prepared and introduced in the House, and at my instance was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, be transferred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. One of the ablest parliamentarians in this Chamber, I believe, misconceiving the purport of the bill, objected, and it was therefore passed over.

I want to read the bill to the House. I feel that I am entitled to this relief; that my constituents are. It is a private bill that does not hurt the Government, does not cost the Government one cent, but pays the Government an annual rental. It will afford a great accommodation to a vast number of people, in fact many thousands of by best people. It is a local measure affecting my district only, and no other Member of the House is directly or indirectly interested in the matter except as a matter of public policy. The bill reads:

A bill (H. R. 12455) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lease to Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. a certain strip or piece of land owned by the United States Government on the Great Kanawha River in West Virginia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to lease, at a nominal rental value of not exceeding $25 per year, to the Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co., a corporation, its successors or assigns, the strip of land 15 feet wide and 601.8 feet long, or approximately twenty-one one-hundredths of an acre, which said strip of land is situated at or near United States Government Lock and Dam No. 6 of the Great Kanawha River improvement, near the city of Charleston, in the State of West Virginia, which said strip of land said Charleston-Dunbar Traction Co. is now occupying with its track: Provided, That said annual rental shall be promptly paid as required by the Secretary of War, and that the United States Government shall sustain no loss or expense by reason of said lease to said traction company: And provided further, That said traction company shall not fence up said strip of land unless required to do so by the Secretary of War, and shall, at its own expense, keep up and maintain the existing crossings over said traction company's line on the Government's property: And provided further, That said traction company shall not remove its station or stop upon or near the Government's said property as said stop and station is at present located.

This bill, as stated, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I thought at that time that that was the proper committee, and some of our oldest Members say so yet. I do not want my bill destroyed by their differences of opinions. The Committee on Military Affairs considered the bill, was in favor of the bill, and directed me to so report it, but it was suggested by one of the most distinguished and best Members of this House, Mr. KAHN, of California, that the War Department be consulted. I acted on his suggestion and consulted the War Department. The Secretary of War, through Col. Taylor, approved the bill, but suggested in a letter, with his report, that the Committee on Rivers and Harbors should as well act on the matter, doubtless his opinion being based on the fact that the original bill authorizing the appropriation for the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, in which this lock is situated, came from that committee. That committee, through its chairman, Mr. SPARKMAN, still feels that it should be consulted and should consider the bill. The Secretary of War feels so. I am helpless unless this House comes to my relief, and have sought this opportunity to confer with you. I am entitled to have you help me to help and protect my people. Now, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. HAY, of Virginia, one of our very ablest Members, a man of splendid qualities, whom every member of his committee loves, Democrats and Republicans alike, said it was all right with him to make the reference. Mr. SPARKMAN's committee, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, meets Monday. If I do not get this permission to-day to refer it to that committee, I can not get the bill acted upon in time.

Judge Grosscup and his associates of Chicago, Ill., and Hon. Fred Paul Grosscup and his associates of Charleston, W. Va., have expended nearly $600,000 in the Great Kanawha River Valley. They are all fine, in fact noble, people, and are materially assisting in the development of my section. This interurban line connects Charleston with the town of Dunbar. Lock No. 6, about midway between the two cities, where the Government owns about 6 or 7 acres of land, having purchased it at the time the locks were put in there. The land occupied by the traction company is on a hillside. It will not bring 20 bushels of corn to the acre. It is very poor land and steep. It is within 3 miles of my home. The strip occupied is approximately 1,200 feet from the lock chamber and 300 or 400 feet away from the dam. Does not in the slightest interfere with or injure the Government property.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from West Virginia yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. By what authority did the railroad company get the use of that land in the first place?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. By permission of the Secretary of War, he having leased it to the traction company. I thank the gentleman for that question. The Secretary of War now claims that having leased it for five years, and having no authority to lease it longer than five years, expiring August 1, 1916, he must now have the permission of Congress that he may continue or renew the lease.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. This is a personal matter to me, relating to a matter in my own district—local in its very nature and of vital interest to me and mine——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia asks unanimous consent to take the bill named from the Committee on Military Affairs and refer it to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, H. R. 12717.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12717) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday afternoon the gentleman from Indiana had pending an amendment which, without objection, the Clerk will again report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 51, after line 13, by inserting as a new paragraph the following:

"For investigating a method for the eradication of the Hessian fly in wheat by the process of spraying, $50,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is recognized.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto may conclude in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 25 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina modifies his request and asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto conclude in 25 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is addressed to one of the most important industries connected with agriculture. The wheat crop of last year was worth more than a billion dollars. The farmers produced a billion dollars of new wealth. In the previous year the wheat crop was also worth approximately a billion dollars. And yet in spite of that fact there was a greater loss of wealth through the destructive ravages of the Hessian fly in the wheat crop of those two years than occurred in any other business in this great country.

The growth of wheat is adapted to every State in the Union. Yet there is less effort on the part of the Agricultural Department, it seems to me, to eradicate the Hessian fly and stop its ravages than is devoted to any other subject connected with the Department of Agriculture. The reasonable and practicable way to exterminate this pest is by some insecticide sprayed upon the growing plant. The eggs are deposited upon the blade of the growing plant, the life is germinated there, and then the insect works its way into the stalk of the plant, destroys the joint, and the wheat becomes worthless. The advice of the department, as given in bulletins, is for the farmer to wait until after the frost season has set in, so that the frost will kill the germs of life in the eggs laid on the plant. If that plan had been followed last year in the great Mississippi Valley south of Lake Michigan, there would have been no wheat sown there until too late in the season for it to germinate. There is no better wheat-producing soil in the world than in the Delta of the Mississippi, in Louisiana, and Mississippi. Yet if the farmers there should wait each year under the instructions of the Agricultural Department they would not be able to sow their wheat until long after the sowing season had passed, and frequently after Christmas or New Years. An insecticide can be prepared, either in a powder or a liquid form, and sprayed upon the growing wheat, destroying the life of this insect, or the life germ in the egg, and so protecting wheat from the ravages of this pest. In comparison to the great loss sustained annually by the farmers of this country from the ravages of this pest, the appropriation of $50,000 for experiments by scientists to discover some method along this line is a very moderate sum indeed, when we take into consideration the amount that would be saved to this industry in this country each year. It is a matter of vital interest to the farmers of the country. I may add it is not alone of interest to them but to the entire population of the country, who are concerned in the food supply. We should here do all we can to encourage the industry of farming and particularly the branch of wheat culture. It is not enough to say we are trying some plan to rid the plant of this enemy, but should make it possible for the department to avail itself of every opportunity to discover some more effective means than it has so far discovered.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I think we are all of us very much interested in what the gentleman is saying. What I want to inquire is whether the Government has made any experiments along this line, and if not, then whether experiments have been made by private parties?

Mr. CULLOP. I thank the gentleman very much for asking that question. The Government has made no experiments along this line, as I have been informed by it. I called the attention of Prof. Webster to it last December when Congress convened. He was very much interested, and I told him about an experiment made by a farmer in my district. He assured me that the matter would be taken up by the department with Purdue University.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I would like three or four minutes more. I want to give this illustration, which I think is important.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has fixed the limit of debate.

Mr. CULLOP. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes to answer the question of the gentleman from Michigan. I think I have some valuable information on this subject.

Mr. LEVER. I presume the Chairman has reserved five minutes for me, and I ask the gentleman to take two minutes of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for two minutes out of the time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. CULLOP. Prof. Webster promised me that he would take up the matter without delay, and have it investigated through Purdue University; but shortly after that Prof. Webster, unfortunately, died, on January 3, 1916, before anything had or could be done in the matter.

A farmer living in Monroe County, Ind., a tenant on what was known as the Dunn farm, adjoining the campus of the State university, some years ago had a field of wheat in an orchard on the farm. In the spring he sprayed the orchard in order to kill the insects on the fruit trees and some of the spray fell upon the growing wheat. The rest of the wheat in that field was destroyed by the Hessian fly, but on the part around the fruit trees which had been sprayed there was an abundant yield. It was the purpose of the department, under the direction of Prof. Webster, to look up this man, through the aid of Purdue University, and find out what insecticide he had used.

Now, science is able to conquer the evils with which agriculture is compelled to contend; but unless some appropriation is made to direct the attention of the department it will not take the necessary interest and make the investigation which is required. There is no more important matter than this in the Agricultural appropriation bill; and I ask the adoption of this amendment. [Applause.]

I am informed by the department that of the appropriation proposed in this bill only $5,000 is proposed to be devoted to this important subject. This, I contend, is wholly inadequate when we consider the magnitude of this industry, its importance to 8,000,000 farmers who yearly suffer from the ravages of this pest, and the welfare of the people of this country. I urge for these reasons its adoption, believing, as I do, that conditions existing require it and that if adopted it will serve a most useful purpose to the entire country.

We should do what we can here to promote the great farming industry, because upon it the country's welfare depends, and this matter is of such vital importance that it deserves serious consideration in order that this great industry may be encouraged.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to support any appropriation which looks to the eradication of the pest that destroys the wheat crop, the great basic crop of our country. I have no more knowledge than most Members of the House of the method by which the destruction of this pest can be accomplished. If it is possible to destroy it by means of spraying, and that information can be given out to the farmers, there is no doubt that the money will be well spent.

The wheat crop of this country last year was 900,000,000 bushels. It is one of our biggest crops, our basic crop, probably the most widespread crop that we have. I think it is now claimed that the production of corn exceeds that of wheat in value and that wheat has dropped to second place, but that can only be a temporary condition, and eventually and permanently wheat must be the great basic staple crop of the Mississippi Valley and of the farming regions of this country. As I have said, last year we produced 900,000,000 bushels of wheat. That wheat was not only the stock in trade of the farmer, but it was the raw material of the country mill. Every small town has its flour mill, which manufactures flour from the wheat grown in the vicinity. Wheat used to be, and still ought to be, one of the great export crops of this country; and if it were not for the cheap wheat lands of Canada I doubt not that wheat would be one of the great export crops of this Nation. To-day the American wheat farmer is confronted with competition which is world-wide. Every bushel of wheat raised in Kansas or Missouri comes in competition not only with every other bushel of wheat raised in those States but with the wheat of Canada, with the wheat of Argentina, with the wheat of Australia, with the wheat of Siberia, and of all the other great wheat-producing regions of the world. The price of wheat is fixed in the strongest competitive market under the strongest competitive conditions of world-wide competition. No man who produces wheat can figure on fixing the price of his own product. It is normally fixed at Liverpool under world-wide competition, and the only things that we can improve are the conditions of production at home and the cost of transportation to the great markets of the world.

I have voted repeatedly for items in this bill for the eradication of pests which afflicted only a very small section of our agricultural industry, pests relating to the citrus-fruit crop, which is a very trifling thing compared with the great agricultural interests of the West; pests relating to the chestnut-tree blight; and things of that kind, which are insignificant compared with the great basic crops of the Nation. But here is a great wheat crop of 900,000,000 bushels, worth over a billion dollars, affected by this widespread pest; and, as I say, I do not know whether the spraying proposition is a good one or not, but, so far as I know, no way has been found of controlling the Hessian fly. I believe, however, that science can find a way to control it. I know in the country at large last year, even with the 900,000,000 bushels, we produced an average of less than 13 bushels per acre. I do not believe that a country in Europe produced less than 20 or 25 bushels an acre, and we must bring our standard of farming up by scientific methods in the Department of Agriculture until we have fuller returns for the agricultural products to the tiller of the soil. [Applause.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this amendment, because it makes it possible for the Government to institute investigations by which it may be determined whether there is a remedy for this great evil to the wheat growers of the United States. Under present conditions and circumstances, there practically is no way for the farmer to provide against the evil of the Hessian fly. He does not know that the Hessian fly is on his wheat crop until the crop is practically ruined. Therefore it is necessary for him to be advised and informed in advance of some remedy that he may apply to the wheat that will be there, ready on the approach of the Hessian fly when he does come on the scene.

Now, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Missouri and others, last year the wheat crop amounted to more than 900,000,000 bushels, valued at more than a billion dollars. I notice, within the last two or three weeks, that according to the forecasts of the Department of Agriculture and of the bureaus of the State departments of agriculture over the country the prospects are that this year there will not be more than 75 per cent of a crop of wheat raised, and a large proportion of this decrease is due to the Hessian fly, of which we are complaining to-day.

I do not know that it is possible, any more than I knew on yesterday it was possible, to manufacture potash out of kelp; but if it is possible for the Government of the United States by investigation to provide some remedy so that the farmer can protect his wheat crop against the ravages of the Hessian fly, so that this great crop of 900,000,000 bushels may be saved to the people, this is a very paltry sum to be provided for the investigation and demonstration of that remedy.

The wheat crop is a peculiar crop. In some States they raise winter wheat, in some spring wheat; but whether it be winter wheat or spring wheat, it is always subject to the ravages of the Hessian fly, because the fly can come in the fall of the year or the spring of the year, and whenever it does come it secretly bores its way into the stalk of wheat, and before the farmer knows there is anything wrong his wheat is ruined, and there is no help for it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. This item is not in the bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. No, sir.

Mr. RAKER. Can the gentleman or the gentleman from Indiana or the gentleman from Missouri give any explanation of why it was not included in the general bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. I can not.

Mr. LEVER. The item is in the bill, as a matter of fact. It is in the item for the investigation of insects affecting cereals and forage crops.

Mr. RAKER. I asked the question because the committee has been so willing, and the gentleman from Kentucky and others have presented the matter so well, that it seems strange that it was not in the general bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate the gentleman's compliment.

Mr. CULLOP. There is no provision in the bill for the process of spraying or the discovery of a process by spraying.

Mr. BARKLEY. While it is in the item in gross for all cereals, of course there are many cereals besides wheat, and the appropriation that would be devoted to wheat out of the $114,000 would be very small. This amendment applies especially to wheat.

Mr. RAKER. I am in hearty sympathy with the amendment, and I think there should be this additional sum for this particular purpose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, there has never been any disposition on the part of the Committee on Agriculture to refuse to recommend appropriations for any good purpose to enable the department to make investigations in important matters of this kind. The committee did consider very carefully the question and the amount of money needed by the department for work in connection with the diseases of cereals and forage crops, and money has been provided in the item that carries $114,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand that some of this other money, the $114,000, could be used for this purpose if the bureau thought proper?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. If the attention of the bureau is not specifically called to the Hessian fly, will they be apt to conduct investigations for that purpose?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that the attention of the department was called to the Hessian fly years ago, and it has been carrying on systematic work, bending every energy, using every known means for its eradication or control since 1905. There is a misapprehension in regard to this matter. Members seem to labor under the impression that the department has been doing nothing in the matter of the Hessian fly. Sprays have been used, and with some measure of success, but the department has reached the conclusion, and says it without hesitation, that their investigations have enabled them to apprise the farmers of the coming of the Hessian fly so they can prepare against it. They say, further, that if the instructions given by the department, the suggestions made, are followed, the farmers will avoid any serious damage.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What do they do to avoid serious damage? Everyone who is familiar with farming knows that the Hessian fly is a serious pest.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The methods and times of sowing the wheat are set forth, and directions are given for each particular locality, and the department tells us that if their directions are followed the injury will not be serious. Of course it is barely possible that some gentleman in Indiana has discovered a material for spraying which is something new and cheap enough to justify its use, something the officials of the department have not in their 11 years been able to discover, but I doubt it very much. Spraying will kill the Hessian fly, of course, but it is expensive to spray a wheat field. There are some wheat fields in this country which contain several acres, and spraying would be an expensive operation.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Has the department at any time ever made any effort to discover a remedy for the Hessian fly by spraying?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Sure, and while they have reached some measure of success, they recommend the other method, and they have issued a bulletin giving directions and offering suggestions to farmers, apprising them each year whether or not the fly is coming or is liable to come, and the methods to be employed and particularly the times of sowing to prevent serious damage.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Is not the only method that the department proposes for the treatment of this subject to advise the farmers by means of its natural enemies in connection with the campaign, and induce farmers to plant the wheat at a fly-free date; that is, after the frost season occurs?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is just what I have said, that after all investigations made by the officials of the Bureau of Entomology and by other bureaus, they have found this matter of the time and manner of planting to be the most helpful, and they make a recommendation to that effect, and have practically given up, after a full investigation, the matter of using a spray or of finding a spray which can be recommended.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman is aware that the fly occurs in the spring of the year after the frost season is over?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The principal damage was at first, and I believe is yet, to the winter wheat, and there was no trouble to the spring-wheat area; but lately the fly has infested the spring-wheat area as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the Department of Agriculture since 1905 has been making investigations to find a remedy against the ravages of the Hessian fly. They propose, out of this appropriation of $114,000, to expend $5,000 during the coming fiscal year for a continuance of these studies.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I have only three minutes, and I decline to yield. It is now argued by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] and others supporting his amendment that this is a mere bagatelle as compared to the total value of the wheat crop. That is true. No one controverts that, but I want to call the attention of members of the committee to this fact, that the Department of Agriculture through its 10 years of study has not as yet reached a definite conclusion as to what is the best method of controlling the ravages of the Hessian fly. In other words, this whole proposition is still in a scientific and experimental stage. Five thousand dollars is all that the department asks to continue its scientific investigation. It is not a question of going out into the field to employ means and men and material to eradicate the Hessian fly; if it were, a larger appropriation might be justified, but this is an appropriation to enable the department to continue its scientific investigation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Does this mean laboratory investigation?

Mr. LEVER. Laboratory and field—chiefly field investigation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What is the extent of the field investigation?

Mr. LEVER. They have some six or eight field stations scattered throughout the country.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will the gentleman state where they are?

Mr. LEVER. That takes my time, but I will put it in the RECORD. The stations are located in North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Indiana, Kansas, Tennessee, South Dakota, Missouri, and Oregon.

Mr. BARKLEY. And also what they can do at these stations with $5,000.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, the gentleman is wrong in that. This is not a question of eradicating the fly, it is a question of gathering scientific information, and you can do as much at six or eight stations in getting fundamental, basic facts as you could at 100 stations.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. I must ask the gentleman not to interrupt as I have only a few minutes. If we can find a remedy the Committee on Agriculture is willing to appropriate money to apply the remedy, but until we have the remedy, let us not appropriate $50,000 here, of which the only use we could make would be to employ a number of additional scientific experts—boys who have graduated in chemistry at some college—students just out of college. The department through this amendment would be directed to spend this money, and the department would spend the money. They would put these youngsters on the road and eat up the $50,000, when the same results can be had, according to their own estimates, for $5,000 by concentrating it in the hands of one or two genuine trained scientists and experts. I hope that the amendment will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEVER) there were—ayes 24, nays 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that by unanimous consent all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto was closed. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, etc., and the cigarette beetle and Argentine ant, $64,400.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Bureau of Entomology gets $868,880, which is a large sum, for the investigation of bugs or insects. It is a great deal more in the aggregate than we get for some very worthy projects in the river and harbor bill; twice as much, at least, as went this year to all the States of New England for the improvement of their ports and rivers; but notwithstanding that, I think it is proper we should have a careful investigation of all these bugs and that there should be scientists employed by the Government to see that we get rid of them as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I really have not the time. I am with the gentleman and shall support the item; I am not antagonizing it. I am in favor of the removal of bugs that affect the health of man or that tend to destroy the health and happiness of animals. To prove the necessity for the appropriation for the proper control of our bugs and insects and germs, I send to the Clerk's desk a bit of verse attributed to Mr. Roy Atwell, a comedian, who seems to have given deep thought to this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

In these days of indigestion
It is oftentimes a question
  As to what to eat and what to leave alone,
For each microbe and bacillus
Has a different way to kill us,
  And in time they always claim us for their own.
There are germs of every kind
In any food that you can find
  In the market or upon the bill of fare.
Drinking water's just as risky
As the so-called deadly whisky,
  And it's often a mistake to breathe the air.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will creep behind you some day;
  Then he'll send for his bug friends
  And all your earthly trouble ends;
Some little bug is going to find you some day.

The inviting green cucumber
Gets 'most everybody's number,
  While the green corn has a system of its own;
Though a radish seems nutritious,
Its behavior is quite vicious,
  And a doctor will be coming to your home.
Eating lobster cooked or plain
Is only flirting with ptomaine,
  While an oyster sometimes has a lot to say,
But the clams we eat in chowder
Make the angels chant the louder,
  For they know that we'll be with them right away.

Take a slice of nice fried onion
And you're fit for Dr. Munyon;
  Apple dumplings kill you quicker than a train.
Chew a cheesy midnight "rabbit"
And a grave you'll soon inhabit—
  Ah, to eat at all is such a foolish game.
Eating huckleberry pie
Is a pleasing way to die,
  While sauerkraut brings on softening of the brain.
When you eat banana fritters
Every undertaker titters,
  And the casket makers nearly go insane.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will creep behind you some day;
  With a nervous little quiver
  He'll give cirrhosis of the liver;
Some little bug is going to find you some day.

When cold-storage vaults I visit
I can only say what is it
  Makes poor mortals fill their systems with such stuff?
Now, for breakfast, prunes are dandy
If a stomach pump is handy
  And your doctor can be found quite soon enough.
Eat a plate of fine pigs' knuckles
And the headstone cutter chuckles,
  While the gravedigger makes a note upon his cuff.
Eat that lovely red bologna
And you'll wear a wooden kimono,
  As your relatives start scrapping 'bout your stuff.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will creep behind you some day;
  Eating juicy sliced pineapple
  Makes the sexton dust the chapel;
Some little bug is going to find you some day.

All these crazy foods they mix
Will float us 'cross the River Styx,
  Or they'll start us climbing up the milky way;
And the meals we eat in courses
Mean a hearse and two black horses,
  So before a meal some people always pray.
Lucious grapes breed 'pendicitis,
And the juice leads to gastritis,
  So there's only death to greet us either way;
And fried liver's nice, but, mind you,
Friends will soon ride slow behind you.
  And the papers then will have nice things to say.

Some little bug is going to find you some day,
Some little bug will creep behind you some day;
  Eat some sauce, they call it chili,
  On you breast they'll place a lily;
Some little bug is going to find you some day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the chorus be read.

Mr. MILLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think we have had enough of that now. I shall have to object to that.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the motion of the gentleman.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent that debate close on this paragraph and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, suppose the gentleman let the debate develop on this a little, and then see whether it is desirable to close it.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think there is going to be any difficulty in reference to this.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not know, but I want to get a little information.

Mr. LEVER. I will make it 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there seems to be some ridicule on the other side, and this is a very important matter to some of us gentlemen here——

Mr. LEVER. Let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky that when he has been here as long as I have he will find the best way to handle an item of this kind is to say as little as possible.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not want to say anything unless it is necessary, but I did not want to be precluded from saying something if it be necessary.

Mr. LEVER. This is an exceedingly important item, and I am satisfied there is no opposition to it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the chairman answer a question before the request is put, because I want to see whether I shall desire to offer an amendment or not? I notice in line 14 it is merely for the "investigation of insects."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, whose time is this?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has not been recognized. The Chair was waiting to see whether there would be any agreement.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask that the gentleman from South Carolina withhold his motion in that connection.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion pending.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I reserved the right to object just to get a little information from the gentleman from South Carolina.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no proposition really put before the Chair.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, let me modify my request. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to save time.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait until the Chair puts the proposition. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not know that I will want any time, but I notice in line 14 the language is "for investigation of insects," and in line 23 "for investigations and demonstrations."

Now, what I am interested in, and what the representative of every tobacco State is interested in, is this: We are interested in the demonstration of the method of destroying, for instance, the tobacco hornworm by insecticides, and I want to know whether under the language used that can be done or whether it will be necessary, following the analogy of line 23, to put in the word "demonstrations"?

Mr. LEVER. No; I will say to the gentleman from Virginia under the language in the item at line 14 the department would do the demonstration work the gentleman has in mind. The department would not do it as demonstration work, but it would have the same practical effect. The department says that its investigations of the hornworm in tobacco have not been completed, and the demonstration work in connection with it is only incidental, but in that investigation the practical result is just the same.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The demonstrations we are interested in will be performed under the present language?

Mr. LEVER. Without a doubt in the world.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This carries some more money for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how is this time to be divided?

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Illinois desires five minutes, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY]——

Mr. MANN. There are six or eight gentlemen asking for time.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] wants five minutes——

Mr. SAUNDERS. I want five minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And I want five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LEVER. Gentlemen who have asked for time would consume nearly an hour, and I am satisfied there will be no motion to strike out this proposition at all, and I feel satisfied if such a motion were made it would not carry. I would like to get along with this bill to-day. If the gentlemen desire to discuss it rather than have it expedited, of course the chairman is helpless to close debate on these small items. He realizes that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I want five minutes. I have not consumed any time in this debate, and I have never consumed any time on the Agricultural bill. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina, it is to allow 20 minutes' debate, 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], and 5 minutes——

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I temporarily withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania called attention to the size of this appropriation. I rise to remark that the Department of Agriculture finds there are some 20,000 different kinds of bugs and other pests that infest the crops of this country. Not all of these are active at any given period. There are about 600 that are active at a time, but not always the same 600. The solution of the problem in any one section of the country does not settle it for every other section, for the reason that climatic conditions will change the life history of a pest in a new section of the country—that is, a section new to it—and create a new problem. Although the appropriation runs very close to $900,000, the amount of work that is to be done under it, and the enormous loss every year to crops by reason of the destruction occasioned by these pests is so large, that the amount is small in comparison with what will be saved to the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWLEY. I will.

Mr. TILSON. These are all for investigations, as I understand it. What steps are taken to bring the results of these investigations home to the people who suffer from the ravages of these insects?

Mr. HAWLEY. Information given to the public as a result of these investigations.

Mr. TILSON. How is it given to the public?

Mr. HAWLEY. There are two separate appropriations in the bill for demonstration work—one for the crops of the South and one for the crops in the North—under which agents are sent out to inform the people. And under the Lever-Smith agricultural extension bill this extension work will be very largely increased. The purpose of the whole investigation is to get information, sound and accurate, to be given to the farmers for their benefit, and put it in such a form and present it in such terms that they can readily understand it and make use of it.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to this paragraph, and I would not be opposed to it if the appropriation were greater than it is. But I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is only for one section of the country. It includes only certain things as specifically set out in the paragraph, and no one of these things is more important than the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] that was defeated just a few moments ago.

Now, we were told by the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that it was not necessary to set out in the appropriation a specific item to investigate the ravages of the Hessian fly and to determine some means for eradicating it. Then I would like to know why it is necessary in this provision of the bill to use language, "For investigation of insects affecting southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane," and so forth.

There are at least four paragraphs in this bill that provide for the investigation of insects that are injurious to cotton. There is one provision in this bill that gives $500,000 for the further investigation of the boll weevil and its effect upon the cotton crop. We have carried that appropriation for 10 years. Five million dollars has been expended, and year after year, notwithstanding the fact that the department has told Congress that there is no remedy for this boll weevil except crop rotation, notwithstanding they have published bulletin after bulletin upon that subject, they tell us that this appropriation must be made to keep up the boll-weevil investigation. You can not get $50,000 to investigate a subject that causes more loss to this country every year than the boll weevil does to the cotton crop.

Now, I want to reply to a statement that was made by the chairman of the committee in reference to the ravages of the Hessian fly. Why, they seem to think that the Hessian fly does all the damage in the fall of the year, and the department has recommended that the farmer sow wheat after the frost has come and killed the larvæ of the Hessian fly. If you wait in some sections of this country to sow your wheat after the frost comes, the wheat will not come up, and you will have none. More crops are destroyed by this insect in the months of March and April than in any other month of the year, and the ravages of the fly are so great in those months sometimes that the farmers plow up their wheat fields and plant them to corn.

This appropriation is no more necessary for these insects—the tobacco insects and the cotton insects—than for the investigation of the Hessian fly, and not nearly so important, yet we appropriate only $5,000 to prevent the destruction of that great wheat crop by the Hessian fly! And now you give $500,000 for the boll weevil in one section, and in three other sections of this bill they provide the money to investigate the insects affecting the cotton crop. It is not a fair division of this money. It is not a fair division of the investigation of the Department of Agriculture. It seems to me that no one who voted against the appropriation of $50,000 for the investigation of the Hessian fly can vote for this proposition and claim to be consistent.

That is all I care to say about it.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to answer the metric argument, the poetic logic, of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], who, in his original poetic effusion, has a purpose which has perhaps escaped a great many of the producers on the floor, his evident purpose being to discourage generous consumption of farm products. I want to say that the gentleman is entirely consistent in this matter, because if he were personally filed as an exhibit in the case he would demonstrate the fact that he has taken his own advice and consumed as little as possible.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Very briefly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not want his words taken down, does he? [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. I am willing that you should do anything with the words so long as you will spare me personally. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not move that the gentleman's words be taken down this time.

Mr. SLOAN. I will say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is endeavoring to discourage consumption, so that production will not be so remunerative——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am very much opposed to tuberculosis, if the gentleman pleases. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. I will say that the gentleman, in order to make an impression on the scales—and this is for the public, not for the particular membership here—I want the public to know that in order to make any impression on the scales at all you must take him to the jewelry store and weigh him on the troy scales, where 12 ounces instead of 16 make a pound. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is because he is of great value. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, yes; he is very valuable. Tied up in a small package. He has splendid qualities. If his general physique were developed as his brain has been, he would be walking alongside the giant from New Hampshire, Mr. SULLOWAY, casting a shadow on the splendid form of the man who, we understand, walks in the valleys of the White Mountains and drops a shadow on the peak of Mount Washington. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate on this paragraph has been exhausted.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have been anticipating this personal attack for some days. [Laughter.] Ever since the river and harbor bill was under discussion I have looked forward to that sad moment when I should become the victim of the wit and cruel sarcasm of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN]. It is a misfortune that my avoirdupois does not come up to the standard of the gentleman from Nebraska. As it is I must fall back for defense upon those lines so familiar to bugologists and so appropriate to the incident and the paragraph:

> Big bugs have little bugs upon their backs to bite 'em,
> And little bugs have lesser bugs, and so ad infinitum.

[Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. I have an inquiry to make.

Mr. LEVER. Then I withdraw my request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman give me some information about this paragraph? What is the cigarette beetle?

Mr. LEVER. It is an insect that attacks tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes.

Mr. MANN. It does not confine its attention solely to cigarettes?

Mr. LEVER. No. It bores a little hole in the cigar and cigarette.

Mr. MANN. Well, while I do not smoke cigars, I have no objection to gentlemen going after bugs who bore holes in them or bugs who smoke them, for that matter.

Mr. LEVER. The little bug bores out of the tobacco.

Mr. MANN. If it is simply to protect the cigarette, I do not know but what it would be a good thing to strike it out and make an appropriation to increase the number of cigarette beetles.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, that is but a name given to it.

Mr. MANN. What is the Argentine ant?

Mr. LEVER. That is an insect that attacks sugar cane. We brought it in from Mexico some years ago, I understand, in the hope that it would be an enemy to the boll weevil.

Mr. MANN. Are they still investigating with that?

Mr. LEVER. It is a small appropriation, I believe—$3,000 in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I had thought, when the Agricultural bill was up, I would make a reference to the work that is being carried on in Hawaii in discovering one kind of insect that attacks another.

Mr. LEVER. That comes on the next page.

Mr. MANN. It is not under the Agricultural Department, by the way. I am not going to take the time of the House to do that. I did not know what the Argentine ant was. But, in a word, I may say that in Hawaii the organization of sugar planters there, through the aid of the entomologists, by a world-wide search that took a number of years, discovered an insect that fed upon another that was absolutely destroying the sugar industry of Hawaii. In another case they did the same thing, and where they were giving up sugar plantations in Hawaii and devoting them to other purposes which were not successful they now find that they can control these insects. They keep a supply of the enemy insects on hand, so that they can send them to any place, where they rapidly breed and attack the plant-destroying insect. The history of that discovery is one of the most entertaining stories that ever was told. It is more interesting than a brilliant detective novel.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] is mistaken in saying that this paragraph for the investigation and demonstration of insects affecting tobacco, relates to only one section of the country. For instance, if he will look to the paragraph he will see that it relates to an investigation of insects affecting tobacco without any limitation as to locality. This investigation concerns and is of interest to many sections of the United States, including the State of Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. That comes under the item for the investigation of insects affecting southern field crops.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Read a little further and you will find these words: "including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, sugar, rice," and so forth. Tobacco is raised in quite a number of States, and as far north as the State of Connecticut.

Like these other crops, tobacco has its own peculiar and distinctive pest. What the boll weevil is to cotton, the army worm to corn, the Hessian fly to wheat, the San Jose scale to the apple and other fruits the insect known as the tobacco horn worm, is to tobacco.

Every one who is at all acquainted with the growth and production of tobacco, knows that the tobacco worm is a very serious pest. While the Agricultural Department, and scientific investigation generally, has failed to develop an effective treatment for the Hessian fly, they have been more successful with respect to the horn worm. These worms come from the eggs of a large moth which are deposited on the leaf of the tobacco plant. The young worms grow rapidly, and may be styled the original tobacco chewers, since they live entirely upon the tobacco leaves, attaining full size in a comparatively short time. Until a few years ago the method of keeping the growing tobacco plants, free of worms, was by hand picking. When labor was abundant, and cheap, this method was inexpensive and comparatively effective. But these conditions no longer prevail in the tobacco sections. Labor is scarce and high, so that hand picking which has always been a tedious, laborious, and dirty work, owing to a gummy exudation on the tobacco leaves, has become a very serious problem for the tobacco raisers. Coincident with the shortage and high price of labor, the tobacco raisers turned to the insecticides which had been so effective in the warfare upon other insects. Having before them, as an object lesson, the distinctive effect of Paris green upon the potato bug, the tobacco planters in some sections, notably in Tennessee and Kentucky, experimented with considerable success, with that poison. But the trouble with Paris green, is that while it is an effective insecticide, its use has certain attendant features that render it undesirable.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to say to the gentleman that in Tennessee they are now using arsenate of lead to a great extent.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I had not completed my statement.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I make this remark in reply to the statement that they use Paris green.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I had not completed what I set out to say. As I said, the planters have been using and for that matter still are using to some extent Paris green as an insecticide for the tobacco worm in the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, but there are very grave objections to its use, and the agents of the department have discovered another insecticide, powdered arsenate of lead, which is equally as effective, in fact, more effective than Paris green, and is free from its objectionable features.

The use of Paris green is objectionable for the following reasons. First, it has an irritating and slightly injurious effect upon the operator, sometimes causing bleeding at the nose. Second, it causes dead or burned areas on the leaves, known as burn or Paris green burn. At times this burning is so serious that the damage done to a crop on which Paris green has been used for insecticidal purposes amounts to as much as 25 per cent of the gross value of the crop. Under very bad conditions. the loss from burn sometimes exceeds this figure. Third: Light rains wash the Paris green, after it has been applied, to the base of the leaves, weakening the strength of the stems to such an extent that many leaves either drop off before cutting time, or else during the process of cutting. Fourth: Paris green can not be applied to tobacco when it is nearly ripe, in sufficient quantities to do satisfactory insecticidal work, without grave danger of burning at this critical stage of the crop. The satisfactory use of this insecticide is very dependent upon weather conditions. Hot summers, and low humidity for an extended period, may produce a condition of the tobacco plant, very susceptible to Paris green burning. However, at other times, Paris green has been applied when weather conditions have been favorable, with eminently satisfactory results. But upon the whole, for the reasons that have been given, the planters using Paris green have taken large chances, and at times have suffered considerable losses, when the weather conditions have been unfavorable. Arsenate of lead causes none of these troubles. It neither weakens the leaf stems, nor burns the leaf surface. It may be applied to the tobacco plant in any kind of weather, and at any stage of growth, without injury. Moreover its use and application is not objectionable to the operator, and requires no special dress, or outfit. These are very distinct advantages, and while arsenate of lead is more expensive than Paris green, yet comparing the advantages and disadvantages of the one, with the advantages and disadvantages of the other, the balance, on the whole inclines very decisively in favor of arsenate of lead.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. How is this arsenate of lead applied to the tobacco plant?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is applied with a dust gun. The powdered arsenate of lead must be mixed with a carrier. This carrier may be powdered lime, or dust, but preferably finely sifted, freshly burned wood ashes, and it is applied by means of the dust gun to the leaves of the plant. This application may be made at any stage of the tobacco growth. It may be made, as I have indicated either in wet, or dry weather. It has no injurious effect whatever upon the tobacco. This paragraph is intended to enable the Agricultural Department to extend the knowledge and the use of arsenate of lead, and to inform the tobacco raisers of the most approved and effective methods of application through agents who will be sent into the tobacco areas, to conduct tests and afford instruction to the planters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will ask five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LEVER. I hope we may conclude this debate in five minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. With pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the expense per acre of the application of this lead arsenate?

Mr. SAUNDERS. According to careful experiments the cost of keeping an acre of tobacco hand-wormed in a year when worms are plentiful, is from $6 to $10. A like number of worms can be killed by the use of arsenate of lead at a cost of from $3 to $5 an acre. The same relation of cost exists, when the worms are not so abundant.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it necessary that people have further instructions in order that they may properly treat tobacco with this insecticide?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; this insecticide has not come into universal use, and the appropriation provided will enable the Department of Agriculture to bring the benefits and advantages of this particular agent to the attention of the planters, and instruct them in detail as to the most improved methods of application. Experience has shown that the use of new devices is much expedited, if instruction is directly afforded by competent agents. The new dust guns are provided with an 8-inch fan, and two refillings of these guns will be sufficient to dust an acre. The best results will be secured, if the arsenate is applied on a still morning, or evening, when the dew is upon the tobacco plants.

Mr. TILSON. May I ask the gentleman one other question?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. This includes tobacco which is grown in my own State?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Nevertheless at the beginning of the paragraph it says:

Southern field crops.

Just where does Connecticut tobacco come in on that?

Mr. SAUNDERS. This appropriation is for investigations, including demonstrations, of insects affecting crops, commonly known as southern field crops, but the investigations and demonstrations are not limited to the South. They may be conducted wherever these crops are raised. For instance tobacco is a southern field crop, and might almost be called a Virginia field crop, but tobacco is raised in Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, and possibly in some other States outside of the South. The purpose of this appropriation is universal, and is intended for the benefit of the tobacco farmers, wherever they may be found.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, part of the State of Kentucky raises a great deal of tobacco. There is a great deal raised in my district.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Under the peculiar language of this paragraph would the department be allowed to expend a portion of this money for the benefit of the tobacco raisers in Connecticut and Missouri?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, absolutely.

Mr. BOOHER. Then, ought not the words "southern field crops" to be stricken out?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not think that is at all necessary.

Mr. BOOHER. The department usually construes these laws very strictly.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have never heard that the Department of Agriculture has limited its investigation, and instruction relating to tobacco raising, and the insects preying on tobacco, to the South, or excluded Missouri, Ohio, West Virginia, or Indiana, or any other State from the benefit of its work.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I think a great deal of the credit for discovering the use of arsenate of lead is due to Mr. A. C. Morgan, who is connected with the Agricultural Department, and I understand the purpose of this increased appropriation in this bill is to extend the demonstration of it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, for the purpose of extending the knowledge, and developing the use of this great discovery—because it is a great discovery. For instance, in my own district, the universal use of this insecticide would remove a burden of at least $500,000 a year from the tobacco raisers.

Mr. BOOHER. I am in favor of the appropriation, but I want to be sure that under this paragraph it can be used in other tobacco fields besides those of the South.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The gentleman may add the words—

That the language used shall not exclude demonstrations in the State of Missouri.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no; why not strike out the words "southern field crops"?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Personally, I have no objection to that. The omission of these words would leave the meaning of the paragraph precisely the same with respect to cotton, tobacco, rice, and sugar cane.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not the word "southern" there describe the crop, and not the location?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Undoubtedly. These crops are properly described as southern field crops, but there is nothing in the language used to confine the investigations to any particular locality.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You understand that, and the gentleman from Kentucky understands that, and I understand that, but it is not at all certain that these people over here in the Agricultural Department understand it, so it ought to be made perfectly plain.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, I think it ought to be made plain, if it is not plain already. But to my mind, the meaning of this paragraph is entirely clear.

There is one great advantage in connection with the use of arsenate of lead, to which I should like to call attention.

Mr. CULLOP. Tobacco was originally a southern crop, was it not?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, we claim it for Virginia.

Mr. CULLOP. That is where it was first raised or discovered in this country?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, so history tells us.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, is it not called a southern field crop simply by way of description, but not limiting it to crops in the South?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not think the language limits it to the South at all. The words "southern field crops" are descriptive, and the application of the appropriation would be made to every crop mentioned in the paragraph, wherever found, or raised. The tobacco horn worm is an insect of very rapid growth; he lives about 20 days. To show you how highly advantageous it is to use this poison, when the worms are small, the following facts are given. Approximately speaking, in the first 10 days of the insect's life the worm consumes about 8 square inches of leaf surface, while in the latter half of his existence he consumes about 200 square inches of leaf surface, or in other words, eight times as much in the last half, as in the first half of his destructive activities.

When the worms are small it is difficult for the hand picker to find them all. They are easily overlooked. He finds the same difficulty with the larger worms during the hot hours of the day. They crawl down into the "ruffles" at the base of the leaves, and thus escape observation. Of course in the exercise of the most painstaking diligence by making a careful search of each leaf, all the worms large and small, may be discovered, but the time required for this process would add materially to the already high cost of hand picking.

Mr. TILSON. How long does the effect of the arsenate of lead last on the leaf?

Mr. SAUNDERS. About 6 days, possibly a little longer; it is more enduring than Paris green, and that is one great advantage in the use of this poison.

Some interesting experiments have been conducted by the Department of Agriculture in relation to the arsenate of lead. Two fields were taken for these experiments. On the first field Paris green was used, on the second diplumbic arsenate of lead, in powdered form. This form contains about 33 per cent of arsenic acid, and is the one recommended. On the day of application about one-third of an inch of rain fell in dashing showers. Two days after the application of the poisons, the tobacco plants in the respective fields were examined. It was found that 91 per cent of the worms had been killed by the arsenate and 83 per cent by the Paris green. On the fourth day after application the number of worms on the arsenate of lead plat was further reduced. The arsenate of lead continued to be effective after the Paris green ceased to be operative. An experimental acre of tobacco near Clarksville, Tenn., was kept free of worms in the summer of 1913, by the use of arsenate of lead, from the time that the worms appeared, until they ceased to appear. Four applications were made. The first dosage was applied when the worms were small, and later dosages were made from time to time. There was no hand worming, and no tobacco was injured either by the worms, or the arsenate. When conditions are favorable tobacco may be kept free of worms by two, or three applications of the poison in a season. The department recommends a thorough application of the arsenate. The number of pounds required per acre depends upon the size of the tobacco plants. When the tobacco is small 3½ pounds to the acre is recommended, while 5 pounds should be used when the plants have attained full size. The advantage in using this poison when the worms are small, is clearly afforded by the figures given showing the prodigious increase in the voracity, and destructive capacity of the worms after they attain full size. Moreover the toxic effect of the poison upon the worms is greater in the early days of their life period, than in their later stages. On the whole it may be said that the experience and investigations of the Agricultural Department are altogether favorable to the use of arsenate of lead in the tobacco fields. It has been proved to be as efficient for the destruction of the horn worm as Paris green for the potato bug, and as the various toxic sprays, for the destruction of the insect life that preys upon the apple, and other varieties of fruit trees.

The one thing that remains is to bring this agent into universal use, so that in time the tobacco grower will as little think of hand worming his tobacco, as a gardener of attacking the bugs on his Irish potatoes, by the same tedious and unsatisfactory process. The work that the Agricultural Department is doing in aid of better and less laborious farming, should be introduced directly to the farmers. It is not sufficient to distribute literature relating to the discoveries that scientific investigators are annually making in this department. This distribution of bulletins is well enough in its way, and has performed a great service, but we must not stop at this point. Properly trained, and equipped men should be sent out to make demonstrations, and afford full instructions. Men may disregard a good thing that is only brought to their attention through the medium of print, but they are always impressed by a successful demonstration. Nor should we be niggardly in this matter. These are the things that really concern and interest the farmer. Annually he produces billions of dollars of wealth, yet the appropriations for the benefit of agriculture do not exceed $25,000,000 a year. The same budget that carries this pitiful sum for agriculture, carries hundreds of millions for our military establishments, with a constant and clamorous demand for even greater sums. How much longer shall this gross disparity continue?

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "affecting southern field crops."

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 17, after the word "ant," strike out the figures "$64,400" and insert the words "and for the the elimination of the mosquito, $64,400."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, after line 17, insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"For the investigation and devising means for the reduction of insects affecting watermelon and cantaloupe plants, $25,000."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, this amendment might have been more appropriate perhaps under the provision beginning at line 19, but that seems to affect only truck farming. Formerly the growing of watermelons and the cantaloupes was practically truck business, but in the last few years it has grown enormously beyond that condition, and now it is one of the growing and most important industries of the country. A vast amount of money is invested now in the business, and as the industry has grown the pest came to destroy it. It works upon the plant and vines after they have been cultivated for some time, and as a rule invariably kills them or so affects them that they become unproductive.

Now, the importance of this industry which seems to be practically a new one, the department has not kept step with the growth of the industry, either in the treatment of the enemies of the plant or the crating, refrigerating, and shipping of the fruit after it has been matured and ready for market. This matter is of so much importance that I hope if this amendment is adopted young boys will not be sent out to spend this money, but that it will be placed into the hands of experienced and competent men, where every dollar appropriated for the department should be placed, to be expended because of the great interest it affects throughout the entire country, and the treatment of this pest be made by the most experienced talent the department can secure.

This industry affects nearly every section of the country—the Atlantic coast, the Mississippi Valley, the Pacific coast, the entire country from the Lakes to the Gulf and from ocean to ocean. A large amount of capital and a vast amount of labor every year is expended in this industry, but frequently when the crop is about to be harvested this pest comes along and destroys the entire crop.

In the section from which I come this is a most important industry, and a large amount of capital in my district is invested in it. We produce a cantaloupe equal to the Rocky Ford, which is one of the most celebrated varieties in the country.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to make a real proof to the Members of the House?

Mr. CULLOP. When the season comes I will be glad to, for I have done it before on former occasions.

Mr. MANN. Now the gentleman is talking real business.

Mr. CULLOP. If the gentleman will help us get this appropriation through, so as to preserve the crop and prevent the pest from destroying it, no doubt the producers would be glad to furnish all the gentleman from Illinois desires and make proof of their superior quality.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we do not know yet whether it is worth preserving.

Mr. CULLOP. If the gentleman from Illinois will examine the statistics of the country he will find that it is and well worthy of all its friends ask here. He will find it is worth many millions every year. People engaged in this industry yearly suffer great loss from the ravages of the enemies of these plants, and as a consequence the consumer suffers because of the shortage of the crop and the increased price charged for the limited supply. It is the province of this department to promote the business of those engaged in tilling the soil, encourage those employed in this useful line of business, and in so doing it assists the consumers as well as the producers. It improves thereby opportunities of all the people. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MANN. Statistics are a poor substitute for cantaloupes. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to put the question. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this proposed paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state for the benefit of the committee that the Department of Agriculture is now doing work along the line suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP]. There are two items in this very bureau under which this character of work is being done—the item on page 51, beginning at line 19, and then the item beginning at line 4 on page 52. It is purely a scientific research work, and the department has been given all estimated for on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting forests, $50,770.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 18, after the word "forests," strike out the figures "$57,770" and insert the words "and for the elimination of the mosquito, $50,770."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the paragraph reads "For investigation of insects affecting forests" and that the amendment proposes the elimination of the mosquito; and it is also true that in the paragraph just passed provision was made for a variety of projects, including an investigation of the southern field crops, including insects affecting cotton, tobacco, rice, sugar cane, and so forth, and to that was added the cigarette beetle and also the Argentine ant—all of these in the same paragraph. If they were germane in that instance, it seems to me that this is germane in this instance.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I have the amendment again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair will notice that this is a specific item which comes in, however, under a general heading. It is all under the heading "general expenses, Bureau of Entomology," and among other things provided for in the general heading—the general heading being applicable to each of these items—is the following:

And the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals * * * in connection with the following investigations.

This is one of the items of "the following investigations," so that the paragraph itself in the bill now provides for the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals in connection with the investigation of insects affecting the forests, and undoubtedly we can specifically add the study of mosquitoes, and while it might seem on the surface, and would be the case if it were an item by itself, that the study and investigation of insects affecting forests could not be held to include mosquitoes, because they do not affect forests, yet, at the same time, they do affect the health of man, and under the bill they must study, in connection with the investigation of insects affecting forests, insects affecting the health of man.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is existing law.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, if it is the wish of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to provide money for the extermination of mosquitoes beyond anything that the river and harbor appropriation bill did not take care of, it would be better to take up the item on page 52, beginning with line 7. It seems to me that this is not germane to the item under consideration.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has always held on this bill that these forest items segregated in the bill constituted separate and distinct paragraphs. That is true, I know, with reference to the forest unit items, and while it is true that these items themselves if in order at all are in order under the general language which precedes them, at the same time I think the universal ruling of the Chair has been that these are separate paragraphs, and my colleague on the committee [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is entirely correct. The gentleman's amendment would undoubtedly be germane to the paragraph to which the gentleman from Michigan referred a moment ago, but I do not feel that it is germane to this item.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman wants the Chair to determine what the functions of mosquitoes are. That is not for the Chair to determine; that is for the committee to determine. The language of the bill authorizes the study of insects affecting the health of man. It is not for the Chair to say that a particular insect affects forests and does not affect the health of man unless he knows more than all of the Agricultural Department combined.

Mr. LEVER. We have an item on the next page to which this is germane.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but all of these items, by the language, are under the general heading for the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals in connection with certain investigations.

Mr. LEVER. Let me ask the gentleman this question in good faith, because I would like to get the information myself. I suspect that the gentleman's amendment, as a separate paragraph, would be in order, but as an amendment to the segregation which the committee has made and which Congress is making, it seems to me that it is not germane.

Mr. MANN. I think it is germane under the general language. I doubt the propriety of inserting that kind of general language and then endeavoring to hold it down.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances, in view of the explanation made, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TRIBBLE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11320. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Twin Falls and Minidoka, State of Idaho, to construct a bridge across Snake River;

H. R. 6241. An act to ratify, approve, and confirm an act amending the franchise granted to H. P. Baldwin, R. A. Wadsworth, J. N. S. Williams, D. C. Lindsay, C. D. Lufkin, James L. Coke, and W. T. Robinson, and now held under assignment to Island Electric Co. (Ltd.), by extending it to include the Makawao district on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, and extending the control of the Public Utilities Commission of the Territory of Hawaii to said franchise and its holder; and

H. R. 9909. An act to authorize the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations and demonstrations in bee culture, $20,000.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am pleased to note that the Agricultural Committee is recognizing the importance of the bee industry. We are certainly a wasteful people, but there is no instance that I know of where there is so great a waste as that going on with respect to the valuable food product produced by bees.

Mr. Chairman, it is estimated by competent authorities that the value of the honey now produced in this country is from $20,000,000 to $25,000,000, and that that amount might easily be doubled with very little work and almost no expense in addition if the manner of handling the bees and the subject of bee culture were better understood. I observe that the intention of the increase in this appropriation is evidenced by the use of the word "demonstrations," and evidently it is intended that some of this appropriation should be used for demonstration work. I wish the appropriation were larger, and yet I would have to confess, perhaps, it might be difficult to use a very large sum of money in this connection, owing to the fact that the subject is so little understood and competent demonstrators can not be easily obtained at this time, but as the agricultural colleges have taken up this subject and in the course of time they will be able to get competent demonstrators and probably a larger sum will be expended in that direction.

I have here a pamphlet in my hand issued by the bee-keepers' association of my own State, in which there is a picture of a very comfortable farmhouse which was built with the proceeds of one year's production of honey by the owner thereof. My State produces very large quantities of honey, though not so large as some of the other States. Many of the Southern States produce but very little honey, and yet I will say for the information of the gentlemen from the South that the experts of the department say that it is that portion of the country where the greatest amount of honey ought to be produced, where it will be easiest to produce a large amount of honey if proper attention were given to it.

Some little demonstration work has been done in this connection with very beneficial results, but so careless are methods at the present time and so little is this subject understood that they have found many persons engaged in this industry who only get 10 pounds of honey to a hive, whereas some get 50 pounds, 60 pounds, and some even get 100 to 110 pounds. This business not being now well understood a great deal of honey goes to waste. People should get, as I have said, with very little expense, a larger result from their work. One of the prominent bee keepers in my State is a man 85 years of age. He pursues this work possibly as a mere matter or recreation because it does not require any great amount of strength but principally headwork to carry it on. He has been very successful with it and each year gets a large amount of honey, which in itself is a demonstration of how easily this work may be carried on. I hope that this appropriation will continue to increase, because there is no way, I think, that the money could be used more profitably. The Bureau of Entomology has accomplished much by its investigations, and has already saved to the bee keepers of this country more than the cost of carrying on the whole bureau. It has shown that there is a great loss in the care of bees in the winter. Sometimes bee keepers lose 25 per cent of their hives, and as a rule about 10 per cent. A greater portion of this might be avoided. There is a great loss also from what is called "foul brood," which attacks the bees, but which with proper care could be avoided. I think right here is a place where the money is well expended; perhaps more profitably than any other part of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes?

Mr. ANDERSON. I might want a minute or two.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt the committee did a wise thing in increasing this appropriation, but I very greatly regret that the committee inserted the words "and demonstrations." As a matter of fact, I will confess that if my attention had not been for the moment diverted I should have made the point of order against the new language. I think it is a very great mistake for the Government to enter into the work of demonstrations along lines of agricultural investigation unless such demonstrations are absolutely essential. My opinion is—I am not an expert on bee culture—but my opinion is that there are a great many people in the country who know very much more about the raising of bees than anyone in the Department of Agriculture. I have no doubt but what there are a great many people in this country who are abundantly qualified to demonstrate the proper methods of bee culture. It is wise and proper for the department to make investigations and to publish the results of those investigations to inform the people as to the methods that seem to bring success, to inform them as to the nature of the diseases and the difficulties met with in bee culture, but to spend Government money for the purpose of making actual practical demonstrations—which I assume is what is intended—when there are thousands of intelligent people doing that is in my opinion a waste of public money.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the bee-culture associations of the various States universally indorse this appropriation and recommend that it be made?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt but what that is true. If the gentleman had listened to what I said he would have understood that I am in favor of the appropriation and of the investigation as it has been carried on in the past and as it would, I assume, be carried on in the future. I think it is probably wise to increase the appropriation, but I think it is well-nigh a waste of public money for the Government to start a demonstration bee farm somewhere and embark on that line of endeavor. The same amount of money spent in investigating the methods of those engaged in bee culture and in the dissemination of information regarding the facts will do very much more good than it will in carrying on actual demonstrations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I understand it is not the purpose of the department nor the wish of the association who ask for this additional appropriation to have any experimental bee farm or colony or anything of that kind established, but rather that there should be a field worker go out and impart knowledge to the people, which, as the gentleman says, would be quite appropriate and entirely proper.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that is entirely proper, but it is not necessary to enlarge the language of the appropriation in order to do that. I take it for granted that is what the department is doing now.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] what is intended to be done under this annual demonstration?

Mr. LEVER. I will be glad to give the gentleman information. The department for 10 or 15 years has been investigating bee culture in this country, and they have gathered a great many facts that the bee keepers of this country—800,000 of them—think are very valuable to them. They have discovered that during the winter anywhere from 10 to 25 per cent of the bees of the country are lost on account of improper care of the bee during the wintertime. Now, the department has also through its investigation found that a great many bees are dying on account of certain diseases known as American and European foul-brood diseases, which are causing a great deal of destruction. This matter was brought to the attention of the committee by the president of this National Bee Keepers' Association, and there was urged upon the Members individually necessity for this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. What I want to get at is as to the process they propose to adopt.

Mr. LEVER. Now, this is what they are going to do. They are going to take the information that they have been gathering and which has accumulated in the department and go out to the beekeepers and educate them just exactly as they do demonstration work along other lines. They are coming in personal contact with the bee people, and with the $5,000, of course, they are going to make an experimental demonstration in one or two States.

Mr. MANN. That is what I wanted to know. They used to keep bees over here in the Agricultural Department——

Mr. LEVER. I think there is no purpose to establish a bee farm, or anything like that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know of any other way in which they will demonstrate.

Mr. LEVER. They will do it in cooperation with individuals.

Mr. MANN. Well, $5,000 will employ two or three men. They can not do much demonstration in connection with other people. They may at some one place.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true. They can not do a great deal of it, but the committee felt that they would let them see if they could get some good results from the demonstration work, and if so, then it would be in the province of Congress to enlarge the work.

Mr. MANN. I judge from what the gentleman says that they do not know what they are going to do.

Mr. LEVER. That is largely true. They want to see what they can do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. My understanding is that they know what they propose to do——

Mr. MANN. Is not the process they propose to adopt what the gentleman from Iowa knows?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. I know what they propose and what they expected. They said that the ordinary field demonstrators that went out to demonstrate with reference to crops and animals did not understand this subject; that they expected to send a man out to go along with them and give them instructions on it, and talk at these meetings that they had with the farmers, and to spread this knowledge as far as they could with this small appropriation. Of course it would depend on the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. If that is what they are going to do, it is a waste of money.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is not any conflict in the gentleman's statement and mine. The process is to go out in the field and in cooperation with the individual beekeeper try to get him to adopt certain methods as to better control of the diseases of the bees and as to their wintering that the department has worked out. Whether or not that method of teaching is to be successful I do not know.

Mr. MANN. They can do that all by the bulletins which they send out. A man who keeps bees can read the bulletins, and will know just as much by what they teach as by a man talking to him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman ought to be aware——

Mr. MANN. I used to keep bees and know something about them. Did the gentleman ever keep bees?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No, I did not; but I am speaking on the authority of the highest expert in this country.

Mr. MANN. On the theory, then, that the man who goes out knows more about it than the man who keeps the bees.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I suppose the gentleman would not accept the information of the head of the bee association on this subject?

Mr. MANN. That is what I will. But the gentleman does not say it will do any good unless you send a man to go to another and talk to him.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has expired on this paragraph.

Mr. ANDERSON. I understood I was to have two minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be extended for five minutes in order that the gentleman, a member of the committee, may have that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, one important feature of the value of bee culture has apparently been overlooked in this debate. That is the relation of bee culture to fruit growing. There are, as I understand, some varieties of fruit that are sterile to their own pollen.

In other words, unless some of the pollen from trees near by can be carried to them there will be no fruit. The bee serves that purpose. It carries the pollen from one tree to another, and there are many well-authenticated instances where the production of fruit orchards has been very materially increased by the use of bees in the orchard.

Now, with reference to the purpose for which this appropriation is to be used, I have a communication here from Mr. Root, representing the National Bee Keepers' Association, which gives his idea of the purpose for which the additional appropriation is to be used. He says:

County agents are already at work in all of the States carrying on extension work, but these men are not posted in regard to beekeeping, for the agricultural colleges where they were trained only began teaching beekeeping within the past five years. With an increased appropriation the Bureau of Entomology could send trained men to instruct these agents, who could in turn inform the bee keepers how to increase the production of honey materially and at the same time prevent the spread of bee diseases and the work of the moths.

The purpose, as I understand it, is not to send men out to demonstrate directly to beekeepers, but to coordinate the work through the regular county agents. In other words, the idea is to instruct the county agents in order that they may carry on the bee cultural instruction in connection with their other work. The difficulty is not that the men who make a business of keeping bees do not understand the industry; the difficulty is that thousands of men keep bees as an incident to their regular farming, and those men do not know, many of them, how to take care of the bees and how to get the largest production from them. The purpose is to carry this information to that class of men.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations of insects affecting tropical and subtropical fruits, including insects affecting the orange, lemon, grapefruit, mango, etc., $17,100.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this item is one that will be of interest and has been of much value. There are other matters also in connection with the fruit industry in this country, not only in California, but elsewhere, that are of much interest and in which the fruit growers are vitally interested, and one of those is the matter of frost prevention.

On the 16th of December I presented the following bill:

A bill (H. R. 366) making an appropriation for a series of thorough and elaborate investigations and experiments for the purpose of devising and perfecting a system of frost prevention in the citrus and deciduous fruit regions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $100,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for a series of thorough and elaborate examinations and experiments for the purpose of devising and perfecting a system of frost prevention in the citrus and deciduous fruit regions in the United States, to be considered by and under the direction and control of the Agricultural Department of the Government.

The committee did not see its way clear to place this item on the bill this year; but I feel satisfied, with the data and evidence that will be presented at the hearing on the next bill, that we shall be able to have at least $100,000 placed upon that bill for this work.

I have a letter here from Mr. W. D. Tidwell, secretary of the Western Jobbers' Association of America, on this subject, He says:

THE WESTERN FRUIT JOBBERS' ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
Denver, Colo., March 4, 1916.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RAKER: Acknowledgment is made of yours of February 29, inclosing several copies of House bill 366. I sincerely trust that this bill will be approved by the Committee on Agriculture.

When we think of the enormous amount of money invested in the deciduous and citrus fruit industry in the United States, and the great losses that have been caused by frost, the amount of money appropriated is indeed very, very small; but nevertheless, I believe, would be one of the best investments that the United States Government could make, for it would mean the saving of millions of dollars to the fruit industry of the country.

Wishing you every success, I am,
Yours, very truly, W. D. TIDWELL, Secretary.

I have received other telegrams and letters from California and Colorado on the same subject, as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., January 7, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
Representative Second Congressional District California,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The Los Angeles Examiner believes as a first step toward securing the application of human ingenuity to solving the frost problem that has just been so acutely presented that the Agricultural Department should take a hand. The Examiner believes that Congress should make a generous appropriation for the purpose of having the United States Agricultural Department make a series of elaborate experiments for the purpose of devising and perfecting a system of frost prevention in the citrus-fruit region. The most thoughtful men of this region are firmly convinced that if the United States Government, through the Agricultural Department, will, through experiments, provide a system of frost prevention that a repetition of our recent experience will be impossible. May we ask you to use your influence to secure an adequate appropriation to conduct this work?

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER.

SAN BERNARDINO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
San Bernardino, Cal., January 17, 1913.

Hon. JAMES P. ROBINSON,
Chairman of House Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As you are probably aware, the orange industry of southern California has been greatly damaged by frost within the last two weeks, the present orange crop in most sections being an entire failure, the trees also being greatly damaged, and the loss to the grower running into millions of dollars.

Mr. JOHN E. RAKER, our Representative from California, has introduced a bill in Congress asking for an appropriation of $100,000 to be used for experimental purposes for the prevention of the destruction of citrus fruit by frost. We ask that you kindly give this bill your favorable consideration and support, and we assure you that no appropriation made by Congress during this session will be of greater advantage to any industry than this one.

Thanking you in advance for what you may do for us, I am,
Yours, very truly,

W M. PARKER,
President Chamber of Commerce.

DENVER, COLO., January 18, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your favor of January 14, I herewith inclose a copy of an article I have prepared for The Fruit Grower, of St. Joseph, Mo.

In this article I have suggested the general lines along which I believe the investigations should be carried out. I would very much appreciate if you would inform me about the passage of your bill, and, if passed, how the work will be organized. I am much interested in such work and hope to take part in it at least as a corresponding coworker.

Wishing for a speedy passage of your bill, I am,
Respectfully, yours, W. V. CEDERBORG.

WHAT WE DO NOT KNOW ABOUT FROST.

[By G. V. Cederborg, Ch. E., Denver.]

After the disastrous freeze in the citrus districts of California January 8 this year, the problem of frost prevention is brought before us stronger than before. The freeze came as a link in a cold wave that enveloped the whole country and broke low-temperature records in many places. The orange and lemon groves of California are generally fairly well supplied with modern frost-fighting appliances, but this cold wave was too much for the orchard heaters. The papers have told us that the crop was completely annihilated. Probably the first report will be modified and we after some time find that a not inconsiderable part of the crop was saved by those using heaters. Be that as it may, the loss runs in many millions and something must be done to prevent its recurrence if it is possible for human efforts to do so.

To persons interested in frost prevention it was therefore good tidings to hear that Mr. JOHN E. RAKER, Congressman from California, has introduced a bill asking for appropriation of $100,000 for the perfection of a system of frost prevention in the fruit-growing districts of the country. Mr. RAKER will undoubtedly get his appropriation; he ought to, by all means. One hundred thousand dollars is a small amount compared with the enormous sum lost in California, not only in the loss of this year's crop but in the loss of vitality of young trees.

Supposing that the bill carries, what can the Government do to aid in the perfection of the desired system of frost prevention?

Naturally the Weather Bureau will come in for the lion's share of the work; in fact this institution is always doing work along this line. We will look to the Weather Bureau for information about the causes of frost, the general causes producing such extensive temperature disturbances as the last one, of which the California freeze was a part, and also the local causes affecting only limited areas. We want to hear from our agricultural experiment stations and colleges in regard to various problems that confront the fruit growers in the different localities. We want to draw on the ingenuity of our inventors and engineers as to the perfection of frost-fighting apparatus. Last, but not least, we want to enlist every fruit grower in the country in the work.

There will be no lack of willing workers; what we need is a leader. We want a general staff to prepare the plans for the campaign and we want an organization so that the work of the various investigators can be made to cooperate and the results be given to the whole people. I would suggest that an eminent meteorologist be appointed leader of the work, and that this leader will gather around himself a staff of active or corresponding associates from the agricultural colleges, from the fruit growers, and from the manufacturers of frost-fighting appliances. This "frost board" should apportion the work; it should call upon the Weather Bureau for statistical information; it should send out field parties of trained investigators to make careful frost surveys of typical fruit sections; it should also endeavor to create cooperation with the growers by inducing these to organize locally for fighting and studying the frost.

In the report from this frost board we would want a complete statement from the Weather Bureau on all that is known about the general and local causes of frost. We want to know what phenomena it is that occasionally send cold waves over the whole continent, and we want to know if there is a possibility that we ever will be able to prevent or moderate the same. The climate depends to a great extent on absorption and radiation of the solar heat, and over this absorption and radiation we have a certain influence through the cutting or planting of forests and crops, through the draining of swamps, etc. Isn't it possible that succeeding generations will be able to regulate the climate through such means and eliminate the danger of cold waves?

One thing is certain, if we can not make the general changes that would alter the climate of a continent we can make changes that would affect local weather conditions. Isn't it possible that by changing the covering of the mountains and waste lands surrounding many of our orchard districts we could create conditions that would materially lessen the danger of frost?

We all know what the topography has to do with the liability of frost in a locality. We know that an orchard with good air drainage will seldom or never get frost, while certain orchards, poorly located, will be damaged every time there is the least bit of chance. Many of our fruit districts are located in valleys surrounded by mountains; the orchards on the slope will escape while those on the valley floor will be damaged by the frost. If a land is troubled by poor water drainage we would dig ditches for the water and possibly dam it up in other places. Can not we do the same in regard to the air drainage—remove obstructions in some places and create artificial obstructions in others?

The frost problem is in many ways the same as the flood problem. A bare mountain offers no obstructions to the rapid downflow of water; a heavy rainstorm will drain off immediately and possibly flood the valley below. In the same way the cold air produced by radiation on the mountain meets no obstructions, but trickles down the mountain side very rapidly. On a forested mountain the rain water is delayed on the down route by the vegetation, and so is the cold frost-producing air. Couldn't we by planting trees and shrubs delay the bulk of the frost drainage above the orchard until morning, when the sun would destroy it? And when a stream of cold air comes down in the valley isn't it possible that we could find out means to make it change its direction to a certain degree? The fruit growers often tell us that the frost moves in streaks. Couldn't we make the cold streak fall outside the orchard and the warm streak through the orchard?

Isn't it possible that by lighting fires in places where the currents of cold air are known to descend these could be broken up then and there, so that we wouldn't need to fight that particular body of cold air all over the valley? Isn't it possible that by the judicious distribution of orchard heaters over an entire district a much greater protective effect could be produced than when every grower works only for himself?

When everything is boiled down together the question is: Couldn't the work of frost fighting be made much more efficient through organization? Couldn't State or local authorities compel each grower to do his share of the work? As it is now, one man who smudges his orchard must heat not only the cold air that by rights belongs to his land, but also that of his non-smudging neighbors.

In each district there should be a "frost chief," a man chosen not only for his knowledge of meteorology but for his qualities as a leader. He should be in cooperation with or possibly in the employ of the Weather Bureau. His business should be not only to lead the actual fight, but also to make such preliminary work as could be done between seasons to lessen the danger of frost.

In regard to the carrying out of field experiments, it is of course desirable that these should be made during the regular smudging season. It is, however, possible that a considerable part of the work could be done between seasons. The study of radiation phenomena and of local air currents could possibly be done during the whole year. Instead of spreading the work over a great number of places it would possibly be of advantage to select one typical district and study that thoroughly before extending the work to all the many different fruit districts.

Another phase of the frost problem that should be the object of investigation is frost insurance. It will be many years before we will be able to eliminate all danger of frost; meanwhile something should be done to distribute the loss of such calamities as the last freeze in California.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., February 6, 1913.

Hon. JOHN E. RAKER,
United States Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE: Mr. W. M. Parker, of this city, asked me to write to Congressman Lamb in re your bill for prevention of injury from frost, etc., and also to send you a copy of the letter. This I am doing herewith.

At any time that I can be of any service, it goes without saying that you have but to command me.

Sincerely, yours, BENJ. F. BLEDSOE.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL., February 6, 1913.

Hon. JOHN M. LAMB,
Chairman Committee on Agriculture,
United States Congress.

DEAR SIR: I am advised of the pending consideration of a bill introduced by Hon. JOHN E. RAKER, of California, for the appropriation of the sum of $100,000 for experimental investigation in the matter of frost prevention, or prevention of injury to citrus fruits by frosts.

I regard this bill as of vital importance to an industry representing over $500,000,000 by way of investment in California alone. The loss to the industry in California this year because of our recent freeze is incalculable; its repetition, at least within a decade, would prove calamitous in the extreme. Many communities will feel its baneful effects for twice that length of time.

If come preventive means can be discovered, no stone should be left unturned in order that such discovery may be made. The importance of the citrus industry justifies this appropriation; the future of the industry would seem to require it. As a loyal Democrat I urge its favorable consideration by your committee.

Very respectfully, yours, BENJ. F. BLEDSOE,
Judge of the Superior Court.

While much good is being accomplished in many localities and some crops are entirely saved, yet in nearby places the crops sometimes are entirely ruined. It is manifest that there should be a systematic investigation and determination of some proper method or means by which millions of dollars' worth of fruit in this country could be saved. While we are providing for destroying insects, in some years after you have expended your money and engaged your corps of assistants and got ready to do your work, Jack Frost has come along in the spring and destroys your entire crop. That is not only applicable to the State of California—and I suppose there is less there to affect the crops ordinarily than in any other State in the Union—nevertheless we find that in other fruit-growing States the condition is certainly serious and many times the entire crop is lost. Sometimes those frosts have occurred after an interval of three years, and sometimes after an interval of two years, and then, again, a longer period may elapse before they return. I am hoping and believing, and not without good reason, that in the next bill such an item will be placed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask unanimous consent that I may insert in connection with my remarks these letters and telegrams that I have on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOSTER). The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain letters and telegrams. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations and control, in cooperation with the Federal Horticultural Board, of the Mediterranean and other fruit flies, $33,200.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I remember we created or provided for a Federal Horticultural Board a year or so ago. I wish the gentleman from South Carolina would tell us what constitutes the Federal Horticultural Board?

Mr. LEVER. The Federal Horticultural Board is composed of a number of gentlemen in the department selected from the various bureaus serving for that purpose. The Chief is Dr. Marlatt. There are five members, I believe.

Mr. MANN. Have they any legislative authority over the importations into the United States?

Mr. LEVER. Well, I do not know just what the gentleman means by legislative authority.

Mr. MANN. They are authorized by an act of Congress?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; they are authorized by an act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Do they have any controlling authority over the quarantine of fruits, and so forth, brought into the country?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; they have full control over that. This work is being done in cooperation with them.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For investigations, identification, and systematic classification of miscellaneous insects, including the study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals, household insects, and the importation and exchange of useful insects, $57,980.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 52, line 8, after the words "miscellaneous insects," strike out the word "including," and at the end of the same line, same page, after the word "insects" insert the words "including mosquitoes."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I think almost every Member of the House in his sober moments will agree with me that the mosquito is a pest that ought to be eliminated if it is possible to do it. For a number of years we have been making efforts to get a provision of this kind in the Agricultural bill, but the chairman of the committee and his fellow members have usually insisted that the mosquito is an insect that pertains more to the human kind than to brute animals. But I think that question is now pretty well disposed of when we consider the opening paragraph with reference to the general expenses of the Bureau of Entomology, which provides that there shall be a study of insects affecting the health of man and domestic animals, and so forth.

I am not asking by this amendment to have any change in the appropriation, but simply to have a direction made to the bureau to study the mosquito with a view to its ultimate elimination. There should be some action by the Federal Government in this regard, because in view of the universality of the pest it is impossible for the States alone to rid themselves of this nuisance. Mosquitoes are not restricted to State lines.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman think the language included here—affecting the health of man and domestic animals—would include mosquitoes as well? Mosquitoes affect the health of man in our country. If a mosquito gets hold of you he affects you very materially.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is right about that. The mosquito also affects the health of animals. I think there is no question about that. Animals do not enjoy the mosquito any more than humans do. Therefore it is pertinent to the general purposes of the bill and pertinent to the purpose of this particular appropriation.

Mr. RAKER. What I was asking the gentleman was whether or not under this language the department would not have the power and does not now have the power, and, as a fact, has it not been investigating the mosquito as well as the house fly?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be that the chairman of the committee will have something to say on that subject. If the Department of Agriculture now takes any interest at all in this subject, it is to a very limited extent.

Mr. RAKER. There has been a bulletin issued on the house fly, and I suppose it was done under this item. That bulletin is certainly of much value to every housewife, and to every person in the country.

Mr. LEVER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. LEVER. The investigation of the mosquito has been going on in the Department of Agriculture since 1913, and the program for next year contemplates the expenditure of $7,010 in the study of the mosquito, in its relationships to the health of both man and of animals.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think it is time we make a start on the work of eradicating this mosquito pest?

Mr. LEVER. We have been started since 1913.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will help a little more if he will permit this amendment to go through.

Mr. LEVER. I do not think the amendment affects the situation at all. It only leads to trouble, because if you set out the mosquito somebody else will set out red bugs or something else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think that is not altogether fair. We have gone very far in the investigation of these many kinds of bugs that the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HAWLEY] refers to. The gentleman from Oregon said that scientists had discovered as many as 20,000 varieties of bugs. He did not undertake to name them all.

Mr. LEVER. If there is anyone who can do it, he can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yet I venture to say that there is not one of the 20,000 that is such an infernal nuisance as the mosquito. There is no exception of locality; no State of this Union is immune. The mosquito is found in Michigan, California, and New Jersey. Let me say that many States are doing the best they can to meet this situation. I know that New Jersey makes an appropriation for this purpose. Pennsylvania, or at least Philadelphia, does the same thing, and it is done in other States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I ask unanimous consent that the debate close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Will not the gentleman state that what has been done has consisted of the draining of swamps or, where that was impracticable, in the pouring of oil on the surface of the water, and have not those means been effective?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Those two means have been used. Oil was used to clean up Panama, under Dr. Gorgas.

Mr. RAKER In our State they have been doing that for six years.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And I think it was California oil that was used in Panama. I understand it was a very deadly brand of oil.

Mr. RAKER. And where the mosquito has been exterminated we have been able to lessen and to a great extent to eradicate malaria in those districts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It helps in that regard. Let me say this, that where a State in good faith is undertaking to meet this situation, which is undoubtedly a nuisance and which is unquestionably prejudicial to the health of the people, why should not the Federal Government, so far as it is necessary, assist to the extent of cooperating with the States? That is about all this suggestion is. If New Jersey, for instance, is making appropriations—and it had an excellent entomological board some years ago, and that board cleaned up swamps, in an effort to make the seaside resorts more attractive—if New Jersey makes an appropriation, how is it possible for that State to control the mosquitoes which pass across the river and over the borders of the State? There must be some cooperation on the part of the Federal Government. A number of States are doing the best they can, and they need this Federal assistance. In my judgment there is no reason why they should not have it. If we can afford to spend money for the eradication of the cattle tick—and we have done that lavishly—if we can afford to spend money for the eradication of the potato bug—and that ought to be done—if we can spend money for the extermination of the house fly, why not spend money for the elimination of this worst of all insect pests?

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. As a matter of fact, does not the United States Government now cooperate with the States experimentally—I know it does in Connecticut—in the investigation of other things?
